SOHAN LAL—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—

RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 15—Execution of decree—Petition for insolvency by judgment-debtor—Exclusion of time spent in insolvency proceedings.
The mere presentation of an insolvency application by the judgment-debtor does not prevent execution of the decree. [p. 1, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Budaun, dated the 7th September, 1923.

Mr. Harmandan Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision in this appeal is whether the appellants' decree-holders' application for execution is time barred. The application in question was presented on 10th January 1923. The last previous application was made on 31st October 1919, considerably more than three years earlier. The previous application was for the arrest of the judgment-debtor. The appellants rely on the fact that when the judgment-debtor was brought before the Court on 17th November 1919 he gave security and applied to be declared an insolvent. As the law stood the Court was obliged to release him from arrest under section 55 (4), Civil Procedure Code. He was released and made an application to the Insolvency Court. While the insolvency proceedings were pending the execution application was struck off. This was on 18th December 1919. On 11th February, 1920, the application to be declared an insolvent was finally rejected. In order to bring their present application within time the decree-holders require to deduct the whole period during which the insolvency proceedings were pending and this is what they claim to do under section 15 of the Limitation Act. The learned District Judge has rejected this plea on the ground that under the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, which was then in force, the mere presentation of an insolvency application does not prevent execution of the decree. If an order of adjudication was subsequently passed under section 16 of the Act that adjudication would relate back to the date of the insolvency petition and would prevent any execution proceedings being taken except by leave of the Court. In this case no order of adjudication was ever made and, therefore, the creditor cannot take advantage of this provision. It has indeed been held in a Madras case that even the passing of an order of adjudication does not amount to a suspension of execution under section 15 of the Limitation Act because after the adjudication execution proceedings could still be carried on by leave of the Insolvency Court. That is a much stronger case than the present one where no adjudication was made.

The appellants rely on the language of section 55 (4), Civil Procedure Code. Their learned Counsel argues that on the language of that clause it was not open to them to apply again for the arrest of the debtor so long as the insolvency application was still undetermined. He argues from this that until final orders were passed by the Insolvency Court execution of the decree must be deemed to have been stayed. It is difficult to reconcile this argument with the actual language of section 15 of the Limitation Act. In the first place in order to bring section 15 into operation it is necessary that execution shall have stayed by an injunction or order. In this case there was no injunction and no order staying the execution. If, however, this be a somewhat technical point the larger objection remains that execution of the decree was not stayed by the provisions of section 55, Civil Procedure Code. The decree-holders may have been debarred from one particular mode of execution but it was still open to them to execute their decree in any other way, e. g., by attachment and sale of any moveable or immoveable property of the judgment-debtor. In my opinion section 15 of the Limitation Act does not apply. The learned Counsel for the appellants puts forward an alternative plea that his present application should be treated as being in continuation of the application of 31st October 1919. Seeing that the application in question was formally dismissed on 18th December 1919 there is no ground for accepting this plea either.

The appeal, therefore, fails and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

*Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 82, 95.
Contribution between co-mortgagors.*

Section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act deals only with relations between mortgagor and mortgagee and has no application to the case of co-mortgagors which is dealt with by section 95 of the Act.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 27th November, 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 50 of 1922.

FACTS.—On 15th April, 1909, Honaji, deceased father of the plaintiffs and Bapu, deceased uncle of the defendant No. 1, jointly executed a mortgage bond for Rs. 400 in favour of Hemraj Gyanchand and Gopiram Jitmal. Out of the four properties mortgaged in the bond, three belonged to Honaji, and the fourth, viz., one-fourth share in the field S. No. 85 belonged to Bapu. The plaintiff alleges that each of the two mortgagors undertook to pay half of the debt. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are subsequent purchasers of the one-fourth share in field No. 85. In 1919 the mortgagees brought a suit on their mortgage and obtained a preliminary decree for Rs. 931-11-10 against both the parties to the present suit for contribution. Thereupon the plaintiffs paid the full decretal amount to the mortgagees on 17th August, 1920. In the suit leading to this appeal, they claim half of the amount, viz., Rs. 465-13-11 from the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and pray that amount be declared a charge on the one-fourth share in the field No. 85, and in the event of non-payment of the amount by the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the amount be realised by sale of the said share. The defendants denied the mortgage decree and payment and pleaded inter alia that Bapu had no right to mortgage one-fourth share of No. 85, and that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were liable to contribute according to the principle laid down in section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act and not half of the decretal debt. The lower Court passed a decree against all the three defendants for the full claim, viz., Rs. 465-13-11 and declared the amount as a charge on the one-fourth share of the field No. 85 in possession of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B., for the Respondents.

PRAMATHA NATH MULLICK v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

JUDGMENT.—Section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act obviously deals primarily with the relations between mortgagor and mortgagee; if it also deals with those between co-mortgagors, as has been held in the lower Appellate Court, then it is directly contradicted by section 95 of the same Act, which undoubtedly lays down what the relations between co-mortgagors shall be. That is a sufficiently conclusive reason for holding that section 82 has nothing to do with co-mortgagors. The learned Additional District Judge cites the case of Ramabhadrachar v. Srinivasa Ayyangar (1) to support the proposition that the "contract to the contrary" mentioned in section 82 means a contract between mortgagor and mortgagee and not one between co-mortgagors. The whole judgment is clearly based on the assumption that no other part of section 82 applies as between co-mortgagors, and it is found that even the words relating to a contract to the contrary do not. The absurd inequity and injustice of the result in this case of deciding it according to the provisions of section 82, are in themselves sufficient to make it clear that that section cannot possibly apply. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be set aside and that of the First Court will be restored. All the costs of the plaintiffs in all the three Courts will be paid by the respondents Baliram and Pandhari, sons of Bhai Singh Kunbi.

JUDGMENT.

Pearson, J.—In these applications it is sought to set aside an order of the Land Acquisition Judge refusing to enter upon an enquiry as to the area and measurement of the land acquired.

The declaration was published in August 1920 and objections were put in by the claimant before the Collector in January 1921. In April 1921 the claimant filed a petition, after the Collector had made his award, asking for a reference to the Judge upon the specific ground "for determination of the proper compensation and valuation for the lands acquired." The reference was made accordingly. In April 1924 the petitioner put in a further application before the Judge raising an objection as to the area of the land acquired and asking that either Government should be called upon to admit the area or a local enquiry should be held. This application was refused by the learned Judge, and thereupon the present rules were obtained.

It has been contended on behalf of the applicant that once a reference has been made it is open to the party to attack the award upon any ground even though not forming the subject of objection at the time the reference is applied for. In support of this contention it is pointed out that when a reference is made, it is under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act which provides that the claimant may "require that the matter be referred by the Collector." and emphasis is laid upon the expression "the matter" as showing that what is referred is not necessarily limited to the objection. Reference has also been made to certain reported cases as supporting the argument. In the case of the Hugli Mills Co. v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1), it is said in the course of the judgment that "the whole case is referred, not merely the objection, for determination." The meaning of that must be taken in relation to the facts in that case, and the decision is that where a reference is made on an objection as to compensation, the Judge may go into and decide that question on its merits even though he reject the principle of assessment put forward by the claimant. The case of In re the Land Acquisition Act, In re Rustomji Jijibhai (2) does not carry the matter further, but shows that where an objection has been made and the reference is before the Judge, the claimant is not necessarily to be restricted to the particular ground on which the objection was based in the first instance. There is, however, no case to which we have been referred which goes to the length of laying down that where an objection has been taken under one of the headings mentioned in section 18, and a reference made in consequence, it is nevertheless open to the claimant to attack the award upon objection falling under some other heading. And although the Court of the Land Acquisition Judge is a Court of special jurisdiction, the powers and duties of which are defined by the Statute: British India Steam Navigation Co. v. Secretary of State for India (3), I am not persuaded that the proper construction of the Act is that contended for by the applicant. On the other hand as pointed out by the learned Government Pleader the earlier sections of the Act particularly sections 11 and 12 treat the questions of measurement and compensation as distinct. Section 18 recognises the same distinction in setting out the various objections that may be taken, and the distinction is maintained in section 19. Section 20 deals with the service of notice "specifying the day on which the Court will proceed to determine the objection" and section 21 provides the scope of the enquiry is to be restricted to a consideration of the interests of the persons affected by "the objection." Having regard to these considerations, I am of opinion that the construction contended for by the applicant is too wide. I think that what has to be determined by the Judge is the matter of the award to the extent comprised within the objection, and that apart therefrom the award is final under section 12 of the Act. In my opinion the learned Judge took a correct view of the matter and the Rules must be discharged with costs, one gold mohur in each rule.

Graham, J.—We are invited in these Rules to set aside an order of the Land Acquisition Judge of the 24 Parganahs refusing to entertain an objection with regard to measurement and to direct a local inquiry in connection with a reference made to him under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act. The proceedings in the case in question related to certain lands required for the Grand Trunk Canal project, and the declaration was published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 4th August, 1920. The usual enquiry by the Collector followed and the petitioner, not being satisfied with the award, asked for a reference to the Land Acquisition Judge for the determination, as therein expressed by him, of "the proper compensation and valuation of the lands acquired." The Collector then referred the case under sections 18 and 19 of the Act and after this and other connected cases had been pending in the Judge's file for about three years, an application was made by the claimant, as already stated above, praying for a local enquiry in order to ascertain the area of the land. The Land Acquisition Judge rejected the application holding that the objection as regards measurement, which did not form part of the reference, could not be entertained at that stage of the case, and the case was directed to proceed according to law.

The petitioner then moved this Court and obtained the present Rules and the substantial contentions urged by the learned Vakils, who appeared on his behalf, were that the Court below has taken an erroneous view of the law, that it has refused to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law and that the learned Judge ought to have held that what was referred to him by the Collector was the whole case, and not merely the particular objection contained in the reference.

In my opinion those contentions are not well-founded. Looking to the scheme of the Act generally and having regard in particular to sections 18 and 19 taken in conjunction with sections 11 and 12, it appears to be reasonably clear that the questions of area and compensation are treated as distinct matters, and that the inquiry before the Judge is restricted to the ground or grounds upon which objection to the award has been taken as stated in the application made under section 18. Section 18 specifies the four grounds of objection in respect of which reference may be asked for, viz., 1. Measurement. 2. Amount of compensation. 3. Persons to whom payable. 4. Apportionments of compensation. Sub-section (2) of section 18 makes it obligatory to state the grounds of objection in the application. This was done in the present instance, and it is clear that the ground taken was only under the second head, viz., the amount of compensation. That being so the scope of the inquiry was restricted to that matter and to that matter only, and I think the Land Acquisition Judge was right in refusing to extend it so as to include a ground which had not been referred to him, or included in the application for reference. As a matter of fact the award of the Collector, except in so far as it related to the question of compensation, had become final under section 12 of the Act long before the application was made for local inquiry.

The learned Vakils for the petitioner has referred to authorities in support of his contention that when once the case is referred to the Court the whole case must be held to have been referred and not merely the specific objection taken in the reference. None of the cases seems to go quite so far as this, though no doubt new objection, provided they belong to the same category, may be allowed to be gone into. This, however, is not a case of that description.

In my opinion the view adopted by the Court below is right, and in any case, even if the fresh objection had been entertainable, I think that in view of the delay which had taken place in making it, the learned Judge would have been justified in refusing to entertain it.

For the reasons stated I agree that the Rules must be discharged.

JUDGMENT.—It will be useful to give below a pedigree showing the relationship of the plaintiffs among themselves and with the transferors of the property in suit which is in dispute in this case:—

SITLA BAKHSH

The plaintiffs are the sons of two daughters of one Ajodhya Prasad who died in 1870. At the time of his death he left a widow Musammat Badam Kunwar and three daughters Musammat Nannhi, Musammat Manni and Musammat Gaura. Brij Bihari the eldest of the plaintiffs is a son of Musammat Nannhi who died on 28th September 1918. Plaintiffs sued for the possession of certain properties which were transferred by Musammat Badam Kunwar on 17th February 1877 to one Abdul Majid, a Subordinate Judge at the time, and his two wives. Abdul Majid and his wives were in possession of the property and the present holder of the property is the defendant Shaikh Muhammad Nuh, son of Abdul Majid. The three daughters and two distant reversioners, Lalta Prasad and his son Brij Bhikan Lal, joined in making the transfer. Lalta Prasad was step-brother of Ajodhya Prasad. The case of the plaintiffs was that Brij Bihari was in existence at the time of the transfer in 1877 and the ladies could only transfer their life-interest. On the death of Musammat Badam Kunwar her daughters, Manni and Gaura, became entitled to a life-interest in the property as Manni had predeceased her mother. Musammat Gaura died in 1911 and the right of the plaintiffs to sue for possession came into operation on the 28th of September 1918 on the death of Musammat Nannhi.

The defence was that none of the plaintiffs was born in 1877 when the transfer was made and as the transfer was made by the life-holder and all the then existing immediate and presumptive reversioners the sale was binding on the plaintiffs. There was a further plea that the sale was effected for legal necessity. There were other pleas with which we are not concerned in this appeal. The learned Subordinate Judge, in a judgment of considerable merit, held on all these points in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed their suit.

The points urged here in appeal by Sheikh Muhammad Nuh's learned Counsel were:—

(1) That Brij Bihari was not in existence in the year 1877.

MUHAMMAD NUH V. BRIJ BIHARI LAL.

(2) That the transfer, having been made by the life-holder with the consent of all the immediate and presumptive reversioners existing at the time, passed a full title to Abdul Majid.

(3) That at this distance of time, the recitals in the deed which went to show legal necessity, should be accepted as good evidence, and the burden lay on the plaintiffs to disprove the existence of legal necessity, and

(4) that legal necessity was proved, having regard to the evidence obtainable after the lapse of so many years.

As regards Brij Bihari's age it is satisfactorily proved that he was in existence in 1877. It is true that his horoscope which was admittedly prepared soon after his birth was not produced but an explanation of the non-production has been offered by him. When he was entered at school his age on admission in September 1889 was given as 16. Having regard to the manner in which the age of a person is counted among Indians this would place the birth of Brij Bihari some time in 1874 (Exhibit 31, P. 67). The record of his career at the Kayasth Pathshala shows that he failed in the Entrance examination in 1892. He appears to have been a dull boy at school and if his birth is placed after February 1877 he would be just about 15 years of age at the time of his appearance for his Entrance examination. This was not likely to happen except in the case of boys whose career at school has been brilliant. When Brij Bihari Lal took up service the date of his birth was given as 1st November 1874. In 1877 Musammatt Nannhi his mother was 28 years of age according to the registration endorsement on the sale-deed in suit, and as a woman who had children, it is not likely that she would be without a child at that age. As regards the oral evidence there is the testimony of a witness for the defence, Ram Sahai, that at the time he gave evidence in 1921 Brij Bihari was two or three years less than 50. That statement would also fix the year of the plaintiff's birth at 1874. It was argued by the appellant's learned Counsel that the witness made a vague statement in cross-examination. If the cross-examination be read it would be seen that the witness had a very good idea of time. He fixed the death of Ajodhya Prasad at a time 50 years prior to 1921 which would be correct as Ajodhya Prasad died in 1870. He not only stated that Brij Bihari was two or three years less than 50 but relatively to the marriage of Gaura Bibi he stated the time when Brij Bihari was born.

On behalf of the plaintiffs Monmohan Lal, 70 years of age in 1921 and a family friend, deposed that Brij Bihari was born three or three and half years after the death of Ajodhya Prasad, that is, after 1870. Another witness, Shiam Kishore, about 80 years of age, and a relation of the family stated, that Brij Bihari was born four or five years after Ajodhya Prasad's death. This Shiam Kishore is father of Raj Bahadur who was married to Musammatt Gaura. There is no evidence on behalf of the defence in conflict with this overwhelming evidence to prove that Brij Bihari was born in 1874, that is, prior to the execution of the sale-deed in suit.

Next we come to the question of legal necessity and how it is to be considered. It was first argued that there was a presumption of legal necessity as the three daughters of Badam Kunwar and the distant reversioners were parties to the deed. The presumption however is not strong in the present case because Brij Bihari was in existence at the time of the transfer and the daughters of Badam Kunwar were young at the time and capable of bearing children who would ultimately be full owners of the property in suit. The learned Counsel for the appellant relied on the Privy Council case of Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden, (1) where one of the results summarised by their Lordships was: "When the alienation of the whole or part of the estate is to be supported on the ground of necessity, then if such necessity is not proved aliunde, and the alienee does not prove enquiry on his part and honest belief in the necessity, the consent of such reversioners as might fairly be expected to be interested to quarrel with the transaction, will be held to afford a presumptive proof which, if not rebutted by contrary proof, will validate the transaction as a right and proper one".

In the present case the one important person Brij Bihari who was to be expected to be interested to quarrel with the transaction was not a party to it. There are cases of the Bombay and Calcutta High Courts based on the Privy Council ruling in Kooer Goolab Singh v. Rao Kurun Singh (2) which lay down that such a presumption does not arise when the reversioners who joined in the transfer were ladies or life-holders. The first case which we may refer to is that reported in Varjivan Ranjji v. Ghelji Gokul Das (3). In this case the widow had made alienation with the consent of her daughter Bai Vakhat, and the Court observed:

"Nor can the mere concurrence of Bai Vakhat although the nearest in succession (having regard to the state of dependence in which all women are supposed by Hindu Law to have their being) be regarded as affording the slightest presumption that the alienation was a justifiable one."

It may be mentioned that in this Bombay case Bai Vakhat would have been full owner of the property on her succeeding thereto. This view was re-iterated by the Bombay Court in Vinayak v. Govind, (4) and followed by the Calcutta High Court in (2) Bepin Behari Kundu v. Durga Charan Banerji (5). In the Calcutta case also the learned Chief Justice referred to the position of dependence of women in India and refused to hold that their joining as reversioners in a transfer by a Hindu widow raised any presumption of the validity thereof. As already pointed out, Lalta Prasad and Brij Bhukan were very distant reversioners with very small hope of reversion, having regard to the youth of the three daughters of Badam Kunwar existing in 1877. On a point of law, therefore, we are of opinion that there is no presumption of legal necessity in favour of the defendant-appellant and the evidence on the record must be examined without any bias in the defendant's favour.

It was pointed out by the appellant's learned Counsel that it was no fault of the defendant that the matter was delayed so long before it was brought to Court. On this ground he desired sympathy of the Court with the position of the defendant who would find considerable difficulty in proving the validity of a transaction nearly 50 years old. At the same time, it may be remarked, that it was not the fault of Brij Bihari that the litigation was delayed. A suit for declaration could be brought by him only before he attained the age of 21 when presumably he would not have sufficient funds to start upon an expensive litigation. If he was not capable of bringing a suit for declaration before he attained the age of 21 he had to wait till the reversion fell to him on the death of the last surviving daughter of Badam Kunwar. This happened in September 1918 and the suit was instituted about two years later in November 1920. The learned Counsel, on account of the great lapse of time since the transaction, submitted that the declaration made in the deed of sale should be accepted by the Court at its face value. Reference was made to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Nanda Lal Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya (6). At page 196 of the report those remarks are printed:—

"But in such a case as the present their Lordships do not think that these recitals can be disregarded, nor, on the other hand, can any fixed and inflexible rule be laid down as to the proper weight which they are entitled to receive. If the deeds were challenged at the time or near the date of their execution, so that independent evidence would be available, the recitals would deserve but slight consideration, and certainly should not be accepted as proof of the facts."

Then they refer to the lapse of time leading to the disappearance of evidence and proceed to observe:—

"It is only necessary that a representation should have been made to the purchaser that such necessity existed, and that he should have acted honestly and made proper enquiry to satisfy himself of its truth. The recital is clear evidence of the representation, and if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that the enquiry would have confirmed its truth, then when proof of actual enquiry has become impossible, the recital, coupled with such circumstances, would be sufficient evidence to support the deed."

We have, therefore, to enquire as to the nature of the recitals and the circumstances existing at the time those recitals were made. In the present case when we come to examine the contents of the document we find that the vendee, a man learned in law, has not confined himself to a narration of the actual existing circumstances of the time but has taken pains to stop all possible attack in future on the transfer. First of all the deed starts with a declaration that Musammmat Badam Kunwar alone, on purchase of the property benami in the name of one Lala Chandi Din, became owner of the property. In case this should not prove correct, it is recited that on the death of Ajodhya Prasad, Badam Kunwar alone became full owner and not only a lifeholder. A third position is then taken up that if Musammmat Badam Kunwar was considered to be lifeholder there was the consent of all the near and distant relations to the transfer and so the transfer will inure as of full title. Even if the consent of the reversioners be not sufficient then a detail is given of alleged legal necessities which led to the making of the transfer by a Hindu widow. Obviously the vendee did not believe in all these recitals which were only put in by way of precaution to ward off every possible attack. At the time of the sale there was a mortgage of Rs. 2,000 on the property executed by the benami holder Chandi Din. No mention is specifically made in the sale-deed as to why that mortgage had been executed. The amount due at the time of the sale on that mortgage is not stated. The recital regarding legal necessity is in the following words:—

"I have sold these shares for the payment of the money borrowed for the marriage of my daughters, for the funeral ceremonies of my husband, for the payment of Government revenue and for other things which I, Musammmat Badam Kunwar have done, and am about to do for the benefit of the soul of M. Ajodhya Prasad with the consent of Lala Prasad, Brij Bhukan Lal and the daughters."

It is admitted that two of the daughters, Nannhi and Manni, were married during the lifetime of Ajodhya Prasad. The case of the defendant was that Gaura was married and her gauna ceremony was performed subsequent to the death of Ajodhya Prasad. The oral evidence however is in favour of the plaintiffs' contention that Gaura also was married during the lifetime of Ajodhya Prasad. In the recital no mention was made of any gauna ceremony. The defence witness Ram Sahai places the marriage of Gaura about the time of Ajodhya Prasad's death. He stated that the marriage took place more than 51 or 52 years prior to the time of his making the deposition and that Ajodhya Prasad died 50 years before that time. The plaintiffs' witnesses Manmohan Lal and Shiam Kishore deposed that this lady was married during the lifetime of Ajodhya Prasad. Looking at the age of Musammmat Gaura to be about 20 years in 1877 when the sale-deed in suit was registered, it does not seem likely that in 1870 when she was about 13 years of age she would have remained unmarried when she belonged to a respectable Kayastha family which was not indigent. The plural number as regards daughters, used in the deed claration indicates that the recital was a random one and did not originate from any particular knowledge or enquiry. As regards the funeral ceremonies, it is not likely that money would be due for expenses thereon, for seven years later, when no documentary evidence is forthcoming. The payment of Government revenue is not supported by any evidence. The two witnesses Abdul Ghani and Hari Prasad produced to depose to an enquiry regarding the necessity make no mention of any arrears of revenue. It is also significant that revenue and realisations of the current year of sale were taken into consideration and adjustment was made by a small deduction from the price of the property. As to the performance of religious ceremonies for the benefit of the soul of Ajodhya Prasad the only evidence is that the lady built a temple near her house in 1874 or 1875. It is not clear that this building of a temple was intended to give repose to the soul of Ajodhya Prasad.

Reverting to the Privy Council case quoted by the appellant's learned Counsel the circumstances there were that the lady who made the transfer did not have sufficient funds. Enquiry as to the circumstances of the widow who made the transfer is discussed at pages 197 and 198 of the report. In the present case there is no suggestion whatever that Ajodhya Prasad left any debt behind him. The defence witness Ram Sahai has stated that the income from the property at the time of the death of Ajodhya Prasad was about Rs. 2,000 or Rs. 2,500 per annum. The daughters were all married and this would be sufficient income to support a Hindu widow. In 1873 she received Rs. 7,394 from Government who acquired a certain house belonging to her (Exhibit 6, p. 51). It is said that subsequently she built a house whose value was assessed by a Commissioner at Rs. 2,000 and a temple which Ram Sahai defence witness states cost Rs. 1,500 or Rs. 1,600. Even taking this expense into account we find she had Rs. 4,000 to spare out of the money received as compensation. Such a sum would be sufficient to perform the gauna ceremony, even if one was performed by her of Musammatt Gaura. Taking the expense at the highest as stated by the plaintiffs' witness Manmohan Lal to be Rs. 1,500 (Ram Sahai would fix it at a much smaller figure) the widow would have sufficient funds independently of the zemindari property to defray such an expense. In the present case, therefore, there is no question about the widow lady having sufficient property to support herself. It appears that even after the sale of the property in suit, when she made a gift to her daughters in 1899 (p. 77) she had property on which revenue of Rs. 503 per annum was paid at the time. We hold that there was no legal necessity for the widow to make the transfer.

The appeal fails and we dismiss it with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise from two suits which have been brought together in the lower Court and this judgment will govern both appeals. The circumstances, from which the suit arose, have been stated clearly and concisely in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge. Gurcharan Lal had three wives; by the first one, Musammat Tulsa, he had seven sons by the second Musammat Gobinda, he had one son Chandra Choor, the plaintiff in Suit No. 43 and by the third wife Musammat Lakhrani, he had three sons Chandra Moul, Dushyant and Srinivas, who are the plaintiffs in Suit No. 33. In 1891 the seven sons of Musammat Tulsa brought a suit against the other five members of the family (Musammat Gobinda having died and Dushyant and Srinivas not yet having been born) for partition of the joint family property. They got a decree for 7/12th of the property and actual partition of the 7/12th shares from the 5/12th shares took place by means of a compromise in 1897. By this compromise the decree-holders took the properties Nos. 1 to 25 in Schedule (a) of the plaint and the judgment-debtors, i. e., Gurcharan Lal, his two surviving wives and his two sons Chandra Moul and Chandra Choor, took the properties Nos. 26 to 38 of that schedule. In 1901 Musammat Tulsa brought a suit against her husband for a declaration that 1/5th of the five shares allotted to the judgment-debtors in the compromise of 1897 represented her stridhan and also that she be given Rs. 11,000 odd by way of arrears of profits of this share. This matter was compromised in 1902 after a decree had been given in the First Court, granting the declaration claimed by the plaintiff together with Rs. 5,000 odd profits and proportionate costs. The compromise was entered into nominally by Musammat Tulsa and her husband Gurcharan Lal by which certain specified property was given into the possession of Musammat Tulsa by way of stridhan, while she on her part agreed to forego arrears of profits and costs. The problem to be decided in the present proceedings is the effect which this compromise has on the rights of the parties. Musammat Tulsa remained in possession of the property allotted to her in it until 1910 when she died. On her death, her sons obtained mutation in spite of an objection lodged by Gurcharan Lal and they remained in possession up to the institution of the present suits. Gurcharan Lal died about 1920. His sons by his second and third wives have claimed shares in the property allotted to Musammat Tulsa on the grounds that it was not her stridhan, and that they are not bound by the compromise entered into by Gurcharan Lal. They obtained a decree in the lower Court. The defendants-appellants are the sons of Musammat Tulsa and their representatives who were in possession when the suit was brought.

As regards the nature of Musammat Tulsa's interest in the property allotted to her, the learned Subordinate Judge has rightly pointed out that according to the decisions of the Allahabad High Court in Chhidu v. Naubat (1) and Debi Mangal Prasad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (2) of 1901 and 1909 respectively, the share allotted to Musammat Tulsa on partition would be regarded as her stridhan but that these decisions were overruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1911; see Debi Mangal

ONKARESHWAR PRASAD V. DUSHYANT PRASAD.

Prasad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (3). It is not suggested now, that the compromise of 1897 which decided the partition proceedings resulted in Musammāt Tulsa being presented with 1/12th of the joint family property by way of stridhan. Further, it is admitted on behalf of the appellants that when the First Court gave a decree to Musammāt Tulsa in the suit which she brought in 1901 that Court interpreted the law correctly as it stood at the time, i. e., although we now know that Musammāt Tulsa's share was not her stridhan, yet the Courts in this Province were at the time bound to regard it as such. This point is of some importance in considering the effect of the compromise by which that suit was settled.

Now there is no doubt, that the compromise entered into by Musammāt Tulsa and her husband in 1902 purported to give Musammāt Tulsa not only a specified share but a certain definite property as her stridhan. If that compromise and the decree which it followed be held to bind the present plaintiffs, then it is clear that the suits filed by the latter must fail as Musammāt Tulsa's personal property must undoubtedly descend to her sons to the exclusion of her step-sons. It is necessary, therefore, to consider what the position of the family was when Musammāt Tulsa filed her suit.

The compromise of 1897 in the partition proceedings was to the effect that Tulsa's sons were to be in possession of 7/12ths of the property while the remaining 5/12th was to be in the possession of Gurcharan Lal. The latter undertook to pay to his two surviving wives the profits from their shares by way of maintenance. As for the two sons Chandra Choor and Chandra Moul, who had been joined as parties in the partition proceedings they were minors when the partition proceedings were started and it appears from the compromise of 1897 (Exhibit 8) that they were still minors when compromise was signed. It is not denied that Gurcharan

Lal himself would have been bound by the compromise into which he had entered with Musammāt Tulsa. It is urged, however, on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents that they are not bound, and that the compromise is only personally binding on Gurcharan Lal. It should be stated here that a distinction has to be made between Chandra Choor and Chandra Moul, who were minors at the time of the compromise of 1897 when the property was finally partitioned and Dushyant and Srinivas, who were not born at that time and who were minors when Gurcharan Lal entered into the compromise with Musammāt Tulsa in 1902. The plaintiffs claim that the first two were separate from Gurcharan Lal from the time of the partition and could, therefore, not be bound by the latter compromise made by Gurcharan Lal alone. The lower Court has held that these two elder sons were separated from their father by the partition proceedings. It has already been said that these sons were minors at the time. The compromise deed refers in the first paragraph to the share of the decree-holder as distinct from the share of Babu Gurcharan Lal waghairah, but goes on, as I have already remarked, in paragraph 4 to speak specifically of the shares of Musammāt Tulsa Dei and Lakhrani, the profits of which are to be given to them by way of maintenance. No specific mention is made of the shares of these two minor sons, but it may be said that as it was necessary for purposes of the partition to specify their shares, and as 12 shares were specified their shares were, therefore, separated. The legal position then was, according to the argument of the learned Subordinate Judge, based on the Privy Council ruling reported in Ram Pershad Singh v. Lakhpoti Koer (4) that these minor sons were definitely separated. The learned Counsel for the respondents has also referred to Gour's Hindu Code, 2nd Edition, paragraphs 1693 and 1694 and apparently the learned Subordinate Judge relied on this

for his decision that the minors could not reunite. All the evidence that there is in this case, however, shows that in practice these minors never did separate. They continued to live with their father. One of the defendants B. Muthra Prasad has made very definite statements on this point, which have not been met by any evidence on the other side. From this evidence it appears that Gurcharan Lal continued to live with these two sons, that he retired to live at Jhuoi, and that they did most of his business for him. They conducted the proceedings for him in Musammat Tulsa's case, they suggested the compromise between their father and step-mother and in fact did everything except sign the compromise which of course had to be done by the father. That compromise distinctly shut them off from succession to their step-mother's property. The only thing that can be said to point to a separation between these two sons and their father is a statement by the Pleaders appearing for them that they were not joint in estate with Gurcharan Lal after the first partition. This is not evidence, and what is more, it is an admission in their own favour by their Counsel, and in my opinion it is of no value whatever in face of the definite evidence on the file. It has been suggested with further reference to Gour's Hindu Code that where a separation has taken place in distinct shares among brothers, some of whom are minors, and the minor brothers continued to live jointly with one of the adult brothers that fact would not constitute a reunion but the reason given is that the minors were incapable of exercising any volition in favour of reunion. The learned Subordinate Judge's argument apparently is that where a separation has taken place in a joint family some of the members of which are minors, these minor members never can reunite with any member even after they have attained majority. This is a proposition for which I can find no authority and which is contrary to common sense. Here we have a case in which the separation was between not brothers but a father and sons. It was a purely formal separation, for Gurcharan Lal continued in possession of the shares, there was no separation by metes and bounds, and the minors continued to live with their father. They continued to do so after attaining majority, they conducted business for him, they conducted litigation for him, and they suggested the very compromise by which they now refuse to be bound on the ground that they were separate in estate from their father. In my opinion the evidence is sufficient to establish reunion.

The question of the afterborn sons is rather different. There is no doubt that they were always joint with Gurcharan Lal until his death. It is strongly argued for the appellants that they are, therefore, even more strongly bound by the compromise entered into by their father than the two elder sons. Something has been said as to the advantage derived by them from the compromise or the reverse. It must be remembered that at the time when the compromise was made the law in India was that the property in dispute was Musammat Tulsa's stridhan and that Gurcharan Lal was, according to the best advice available then, giving nothing away when he admitted that the property was Musammat Tulsa's personal property, while on the other hand he relieved himself of the duty of paying over Rs. 5,000 in arrears of profits and costs. It is true that if he had appealed against the decision of the First Court he would ultimately have been successful. It is, therefore, impossible at this time to calculate whether the compromise was an advantageous one or not. At any rate, it is clear that the estate did derive certain immediate benefit from it. The main argument on behalf of the respondents, however, is that these two younger sons did not derive their rights through Gurcharan Lal and that they, therefore, are not bound by any agreement that he entered into. To argue in this way, however, is to go behind the partition. According to the view I have taken, these two sons were born into a joint family of which Gurcharan Lal was the manager. The ancestral property remaining to him after the partition was 5/12ths of the original ancestral property. Neither he nor his two unborn sons had any claim to the 7/12ths that had been allotted to the present appellants. Of this 5/12th that was left to him and his sons and wives, he gave 1/5th to Musammam Tulsa as her stridhan, after these two younger sons had been born. The latter are in the circumstances bound by his compromise. I think, therefore, that the appellants' contentions must prevail. I allow the appeals, set aside the orders and decrees of the lower Court and direct that the plaintiffs' suits be dismissed with costs in both Courts. The cross-objections relate to the extent of the share allotted to the plaintiffs-respondents in the property in suit. As I have held that the plaintiffs-respondents are not entitled to any shares the cross-objections fall to the ground and are dismissed with costs, if any.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sues to recover certain items of property which he conveyed to the 1st defendant under Exhibit I. The finding of the lower Courts is that though a consideration of Rs. 800 is recited in it and it purports to be a sale for that consideration, the transaction was really one by which the plaintiff made a gift of the property to the 1st defendant for past co-habitation and for future co-habitation with her which she promised. The plaintiff is the appellant before me and the contesting defendant is a transferee for value from the 1st defendant. The First Court decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff holding that the sale to the 1st defendant by the plaintiff was an invalid transaction as the consideration was an immoral and illegal one and that the second defendant was a transferee for value, but with notice and was thus not a bona fide purchaser. On appeal the Subordinate Judge, though he agreed in the first finding that the consideration for the sale was past and future co-habitation of the woman with the plaintiff, he held that it was not shown that the 2nd defendant was not a bona fide purchaser and hence he dismissed the suit against him. In second appeal it is contended before me that in deciding the 2nd point the Subordinate Judge has laid the burden of proof wrongly on the plaintiff and that the 2nd defendant should have been called upon to prove that he was a bona fide purchaser. But before considering this question, it is necessary to decide what the plaintiff's rights are on the finding that the sale-deed Exhibit I was for past and future cohabitation. The sale no doubt is invalid, but it is a different question whether any relief should be given to the plaintiff in the circumstances of the case even as against the 1st defendant. There can be no doubt that, if the principle laid down in Ayerst v. Jenkins (1) applies, the plaintiff cannot set aside this transaction as he was a party to it. The principle of that case was given effect to in a very similar case in Deivanayaga Padayachi v. Muthu Reddi (2) where it is laid down that it is a well-established rule of equity that a person who has transferred a property to another for an illegal or immoral purpose cannot get it annulled if the intended purpose has been carried out. There can be no doubt that, in the case before me, the purpose has been carried out as part of the consideration was for past cohabitation and the woman continued as a concubine of the plaintiff for at least six or seven months after the sale-deed was executed. On the other side my attention has been drawn to the ruling in Thasi Muthukannu v. Shunmugavelu Pillai (3) where it was laid down that the plaintiff there who was a young and inexperienced man and assigned to the defendant, a dancing girl, a mortgage for Rs. 1,500, the consideration stated in the deed being payment in cash and jewels to the plaintiff and the discharge by the defendant of debts due by the plaintiff, was entitled to have the assignment set aside on the ground that no consideration really passed as recited therein but that the real consideration was the future continuance of immoral relations between himself and the sister of the defendant. The attention of their Lordships was drawn to the case in Ayerst v. Jenkins (1), but their Lordship were of opinion that the case related only to gifts of property and that the principle laid down by Lord Selbourne in it would not apply to cases of sales and assignments like the one they were dealing with. They were in that case able to hold that the transaction was not a gift but a sale. Whether that is right or wrong I need not pause to consider and I need not also consider whether their Lordships' ruling that the case in Ayerst v. Jenkins (1) should be confined to cases of gifts alone and would not apply to cases of sales and other transfers, should be followed or not, for, I think that the present case is distinguishable from that case. Here it is perfectly clear that the transaction between the plaintiff and the 1st defendant was in reality a gift and nothing else. According to the plaintiff, the transfer was without any consideration whatsoever and the recital of consideration in the document was a false recital. In fact his case was that he made over the property to the 1st defendant solely in consideration of her past cohabitation and future cohabitation with him and that it was not intended that he should receive any other consideration for the transfer. It follows, therefore, that, even if the way in which Thasi Muthukannu v. Shunmugavelu Pillai (3) distinguishes the case of Ayerst v. Jenkins (1) is correct, this case fails. The principles recognised in Ayerst v. Jenkins (1) are followed in the case of Deivanayaga Padayachi v. Muthu Reddi (2). In the Thasi Muthukannu v. Shunmugavelu Pillai (3) case it must also be noted that Their Lordships do not express a confident opinion but say at page 419:—

"Even if this conclusion (that is, the case of Ayerst v. Jenkins (1) is confined to case of gift) were not right it must be held that the case of the plaintiff is hardly one in which he can be said to be in pari delicto." They were able to arrive at that conclusion on a consideration of the fact that the plaintiff in that case was a youth of about 20 years of age and that the assignment was brought about by the influence of persons acting in complicity with the defendant and her sister who led the plaintiff into evil ways. There is no such evidence in this case. The plaintiff is a man of about 30 or

That being so, his case even as against the 1st defendant should have failed. It is not necessary, therefore, to consider whether if the plaintiff was entitled to succeed against the 1st defendant he could succeed against the 2nd defendant. The question whether the 2nd defendant was a purchaser for value without notice does not really arise.

The second appeal is dismissed with the costs of the 2nd defendant.

Arbitration—Award—Application to set aside award—Applicant, what must prove—Onus—Court, failure of, to exercise jurisdiction—High Court, whether can interfere—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 115.

The burden of proving that the arbitrators in arriving at an unfair award either refused to hear somebody or heard the matter without giving notice of the hearing lies on the party who wishes to set aside the award on these grounds. [p. 17, col. 1.]

When an application for setting aside the award is refused and the Court commits a material irregularity in doing so, or refuses to exercise jurisdiction, the High Court can interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 16, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—

This is a plain case. An attempt was made in the lower Court to destroy the award by alleging misconduct against the arbitrators in the sense that they did not give the parties, or one of the parties, or some of the parties, a proper hearing, or adequate notice of the date of the hearing of the matter in which they were engaged. There are only two ways in which you can get rid of an award—either by getting it set aside in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 15 and 16 of the Code, in which case it is the duty of the Judge to refuse to file the award and grant a decree in the terms of the award; or if the learned Judge to whom application is made commits material irregularity in the course of the hearing, when he has the parties before him to decide whether or not the award filed was objectionable, then an application in revision may be made to this Court. These matters are really so elementary that it is hardly necessary to repeat them but the distinction, so far as the powers of the High Court are concerned, cannot be better expressed than in the headnote in the well known Privy Council case, Ghulam Khan v. Mohammad Hassan (1). The Privy Council there pointed out that the award having been made and an application to set it aside on the ground of misconduct or any other illegality having been refused, the Subordinate Judge has no option but to pronounce a decree in accordance with it. On the other hand they recognise that if the Subordinate Judge commits a material irregularity or refuses to exercise jurisdiction, for example as Mr. Lalit Mohan suggested here, refuses to hear a valid objection properly raised before him or entertains matters which are outside his jurisdiction, then undoubtedly this Court can interfere under section 115 of the Civil Code—not with the arbitrators nor with the award but with the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge in dealing with the application. Those general observations cover the question we have to determine in this revision. No serious attempt is really made to show that the learned Subordinate Judge did anything which can be brought within the terms of section 115. On the other hand, he gave the parties a very full hearing. In dealing with the application to him to set aside the award, he took evidence, he heard the statements of the arbitrators, and he formed a definite opinion on adequate material. After fully considering the matter and setting out his reasons clearly, he comes to the conclusion that no misconduct on the part of the arbitrators had been made out. The result is that he exercised his jurisdiction properly, and having arrived at certain findings of fact, those are conclusive. Mr. Lalit Mohan suggested that somewhere or other latent rather than patent objections might be found to what the arbitrators did which the learned Judge had not dealt with. These subordinate allegations are so vague that they are extremely difficult to handle. But the answer to them is that if there was any evidence of them at all the parties failed to satisfy the learned Judge of their credibility. On the face of it the award is an admirable and careful document. Any party wishing to set aside an award on the ground that the arbitrators in arriving at an unfair award either refused to hear some body or heard the matter without giving notice of the hearing, undertakes the burden of satisfying the Court that this is what really happened. The objectors in this case have utterly failed to do so and the application in revision must be dismissed with costs. The stay order will be discharged with costs. Costs will include fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts Trotter, C. J.—This is a Reference by the Commissioner of Income Tax which raises a very simple point in the sense that it can be put within a narrow compass on a very few indisputed facts, in another sense it raises a subtle question of law, for it has given rise to a great variety of judicial opinion in very high quarters.

Now the facts are these. A Company called the Deccan Sugar and Abkari Co.,

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, MADRAS v. BINNY & CO. LTD., MADRAS.

Limited was incorporated in 1897 with a share capital of ten lakhs in shares of Rs. 500 face value each. In May 1908 the capital was increased to 22 lakhs by adding 7,000 preference shares of the A class, of Rs. 100 face value each and 5,000 preference shares, of the B class also of Rs. 100 face value each. In 1908 in pursuance of a resolution passed in June the ordinary share capital was reduced, to Rs. 1,66,672, thus making the total capital of the company something over 13 lakhs. Messrs. Binny & Co., Limited, held 200 ordinary shares of Rs. 125 each in this Company. In 1921 the Deccan Company had on its books a surplus accumulation of profits undistributed of practically 5 lakhs of rupees. In July 1921, by a special resolution, which was confirmed in the following month, the articles of the Company were amended, and the two important amendments were these; the first was a preliminary one enabling the Company, by a special resolution, to subdivide or consolidate its shares or any of them. The other was a new article, 133A by which the Company, by a special resolution may at any time take to itself the power to capitalise undivided profits or reserve fund; and that is what purported to take place in this case. Each holder of a share of Rs. 125 became the holder of three additional shares. The capital of the Company was increased by 1,328 shares of Rs. 375 each; and, therefore, the result was that Messrs. Binny & Co. for 200 shares of Rs. 125 each got 200 shares of Rs. 500 each, and in 1921 scrip carrying that change of position was issued.

The question we have to decide is whether this issue of new shares to the share-holders representing their share in the accumulated surplus is taxable as income. I propose to say very little about this matter, because, to my mind it crystallises for our purposes into two questions. The first is, are we concluded by the decision of the Privy Council in Swan Brewery Co. v. Regem (1). The next is, are we at liberty, or is it desirable if we are not covered by the Privy Council decision, to decide contrary to the majority of the House of Lords in Blott's case [Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Blott (2)].

Now, it is best that I should deal with the first contention at the outset. It is suggested that Swan Brewery's case (1) directly covers the present point. But with great respect to certain observations of Lord Sumner in Blott's case (2) I am unable to say that it does cover. If it does, of course, we as an Indian Court are not at liberty to say, as some of the members of the House of Lords did in Blott's case (2), that it was erroneously decided. If it does not decide the point finally for the House of Lords, it decides that finally and conclusively for this Court. That was a decision on an Act known as the Dividend Duties Act of Western Australia, which, to put it shortly, taxed dividends and contained a definition of "dividends" which covered every profit, advantage or gain intended to be paid or credited to or distributed among any members of any Company. It is quite obvious that a distribution of what was conveniently called bonus shares is an advantage to the share-holders and, therefore, one may conclude that, on the words of the Act, their Lordships of the Privy Council had no option but to hold that this was a dividend within the meaning of the Act. Lord Sumner in delivering the judgment of the Board said this:—"In ordinary language the new shares would not be called a dividend, nor would the allotment of them be a distribution of a dividend" (it has to be observed that what is made taxable by the Act is a dividend and nothing more) "The question in issue," His Lordship goes on, "here is whether or not the new shares were a dividend under the Act above mentioned." Now, if that judgment stood alone unexplained by any subsequent utterance of his Lordship, I should infer that not merely was it a decision on the words of that Statute but that was carefully confined to be a decision on the words of the Australian Statute with an intimation that, for that Statute the word could not be capable of bearing the meaning required to be put upon it before the Crown could succeed. But in Blott's case (2), there is no doubt about it that Lord Sumner undoubtedly said that he had intended to lay down a wider principle which so far, as I can see, is this. Ever since the decision in Trevor v. Whitworth (3), it has been the accepted law that a Company cannot buy its own shares. That is used, as I follow the reasoning of Lord Sumner and Lord Dunedin, to found this contention, that, as a Company cannot buy its own shares, that is to say cannot pay its funds into its own coffers and issue scrip to itself, what must be supposed to have taken place, as Lord Sumner says, notionally is that although no such thing in fact happened, the Company paid its profits over to the shareholder and that the shareholder re-paid them and in return got scrip handed to him, which of course would give him a draft on the capital of the Company. In my opinion that reasoning is completely answered by the reasoning of Viscount Haldane and Viscount Finlay. I will just refer very briefly to one or two passages in Lord Finlay's judgment at page 192 of the report. He says this "The general scope and effect of these transactions is beyond dispute. There was an increase in the capital of the Company by the retention of the amounts available for dividends. Though the number of shares was increased by the issue of the new preference shares to the ordinary shareholders, this did not affect the proportions to which they were entitled in the undertaking and in any profits. All the shareholders received these new preference shares, so that the proportion in which they were to share in any profits remained the same. The use of the sums which had been available for dividend to increase capital would enable the Company to carry on a larger and more profitable business, which might be expected to yield larger dividends. These dividends, however, were to be in the future. So far as the present was concerned there was no dividend out of the accumulated profits; these were devoted to increasing the capital of the Company". Then again at page 194, "The effect of this operation (that is the one which he described) was that the amount of the bonus was retained by the Company as additional capital, and that the shareholders got the new preference shares. No option was left to any particular shareholder. He was compelled by the action of the Company to take the preference shares. He could not have sued for the bonus in money, as the resolution which gave the bonus pro flatu declared that it was to be satisfied by the distribution of preference shares. Under these circumstances it seems to me impossible to treat the shareholders for the purpose of super-tax as having received the bonus and paid it back to the Company to be retained as capital. They never received it at all. The case appears to stand exactly as Rowlatt, J., put it in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Blotts (4), 'I do not think that there is a payment of a dividend to a shareholder unless a part of the profits of the Company is thereby liberated to him in the sense that the Company parts with it, and he takes it.' If, I may humbly add a word in such a distinguished company I think it might be put in this way. "That you cannot say that there is a notional payment of a dividend to a shareholder when the position is that, if he sued for it, his action must be dismissed," that is to say, when the whole conception that he is entitled to the dividend is one that the law refuses to countenance. That being so, it is enough for me to say that I think that this Court having regard to the fact that the words of the Indian Statute are for all practical purposes, identical with those of the English Statutes; should respectively follow the opinion of the majority of the highest Court in the Empire.

I must add this that in doing so, the learned Lords were confirming the unanimous decision of a very strong Court of Appeal of three very eminent Lords Justices. I may also add that, of the majority of the House of Lords whose view prevailed, two at least were eminent and distinguishished company lawyers, and the dissentients were in the same unfortunate position, as myself, of being only common law lawyers. I should also like to add this, that I think it is extremely improbable that this arrangement about the distribution of these profits and the manner in which the transaction should be carried through was drafted without reference to the English cases. I do not know whether at the time the resolution was drafted the decision of the House of Lords was available; but, at any rate, the decision of the Court of Appeal in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Blott (5) was available. I have looked at that decision and it expresses the opinion that that decision was determined by the decision in Bouch v. Sproule (6), itself a House of Lords' decision, available to the learned gentleman who drafted these articles and amendments to articles. I also observe that both Viscount Haldane and Viscount Cave agreed with the Court of Appeal in thinking that the matter before them in Blott's case (2) is concluded by the previous decision of the House of Lords. In these circumstances, although I have treated the matter as one of law, I think that it would be an undesirable and inequitable result if we had to come to any other conclusion than that which I have arrived at. Our answer to the reference is that the Company Messrs. Binny & Co., is not liable to pay super-tax on the value of shares newly issued by the Deccan Sugar and Abkari Company, Ltd., in the year 1921. The Company will have its costs on the Original Side scale.

Ramesam, J.—I agree, there are three features in this case as in Blott's case (2), which make it difficult for a Court to say that the additional shares issued amount to income. The first is that there was no option to the share-holders, and it was not open to them, to sue for the additional dividend in the shape of cash or in the shape of other chattles or goods. The resolution of the Company compelled them to take it only in the form of additional shares and in no other. This feature was emphasised by all the Law Lords who formed the majority in Blott's case (2).

The next feature which perhaps is a corollary from (1) is this: The relative situation of each share-holder to the other share-holders in the Company remains unaltered. His proportion out of the total earnings that may be set apart for distribution as dividends among the share-holders remains the same after this operation of the Company. To explain, it further if, for instance, in any year, the amount of profits that is set apart available for distribution among the share-holders is one lakh, the proportion which a particular share-holder gets remains the same after the increase in shares as before. If formerly a share-holder got 32 per cent. on shares of Rs. 125 each, now he will be getting Rs. 40 for each share of Rs. 500, i.e., 8 per cent. on shares of Rs. 500, the total income would be the same amount.

The third feature which again may be regarded as a corollary from the other two, is that the effect is the same as if the Company passed a resolution for expanding its operations and for increasing its machinery. This has been pointed out by Viscount Finlay at page 196 in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Blott (2). It is true that, as Lord Sumner points out, there was a payment in Bouch v. Sproule (6) a dividend warrant was sent out in the form of a negotiable instrument, which had it been presented payment must have been made. But this fact only served to distinguish Bouch v. Sproule, (6) from the case before the House of Lords in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Blott (2). If that distinction is emphasised, it follows that we ought to agree with the decision of the majority in Blott's case (2). It may be that the effect of the operations in question by the Company is to increase the value of a share and, if a particular share-holder sells his enhanced share, he may realise more in the market as pointed out by Viscount Cave. This amounts to only realising his assets in the shape of capital and not in the shape of income.

*Company—Director's position—Director's duty—

Articles of Association—Company formed to promote other Companies—Directors, whether entitled to extra remuneration for doing promoting work*

The Directors of a Company are agents of the Company, and, therefore, stand in the same position as an agent to the principal. They stand in special fiduciary relations to the shareholders, and, therefore, it is highly incumbent on them to act without raising the slightest suspicion of dishonesty, and not to claim any remuneration for doing something which it is their duty to do. [p. 22, col. 1.]

Where one of the objects of a Company is to promote other Companies and consequently it takes upon itself the promotion of another Company a Director is not entitled to claim any remuneration for performing any duties in connection with the promotion of the new Company, over and above what has been fixed as his remuneration by the Articles of Association. [ibid.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 10th July 1922.

Messrs. M. A. Aziz and Shambhu Nat'l Chauhe, for the Appellant.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This small case presents an interesting question of law.

The respondent to this appeal was the plaintiff in the Court of first instance. He sued for recovery, inter alia, of a sum of Rs. 551. He was one of the Directors of the defendant Company who are now appealing in this Court. In paragraph 2 of the plaint the respondent says:—

"The defendant Company was constituted promoter and Managing Agent of the National Transport Service Company, Ltd. In this capacity, the defendant Company entrusted this work to the plaintiff that he should select other Directors for the said Company and perform all the work in connection with the registration and promotion of the said Company. As regards remuneration for this work, it was settled that the defendant Company would pay Rs. 551 to the plaintiff besides travelling allowance."

It is for recovery of this sum of Rs. 551 and for recovery of some other sums with which we are no longer concerned that the suit was brought.

Numerous grounds of defence were set out and among these, one was to the effect that the plaintiff himself being a Director of the defendant Company it was his duty to perform the work of the Company and he could not, therefore, get any remuneration beyond what was sanctioned by the Articles of Association. The learned Judge in hearing the appeal did not frame express issues as to whether the work for doing which the plaintiff claimed remuneration over and above the remuneration fixed by the articles of Association was or was not within the scope of the business of the Company. But he remarked that the plaintiff was asked to do a work which was not within the scope of his general duties and he did it. We do not feel bound by this so-called finding of the learned Judge. We have already mentioned that the plaintiff himself admitted that the Company took it upon themselves to promote another Company and it was to perform the duties in connection with the promotion of this new Company that the remunerations are claimed.

The proposition of law that a Director of a Company is not entitled to any remuneration beyond what has been sanctioned by the articles of Association for doing an act which would be his duty as a Director to do, has not yet been questioned by the learned Counsel for the respondent. This is a clear proposition of law. The Directors are agents of the Company, viz: all the share-holders who constitute the Company, and, therefore, stand in the same position as an agent to the principal. Further, they stand in special fiduciary relations to the share-holders. The case might be slightly different if there were one agent and one principal. The share-holders leave all the business of the Company in the hands of the Directors and it is, therefore, highly incumbent on the Directors that they act without raising the slightest suspicion of dishonesty. On the facts, it is clear that, the plaintiff is claiming remuneration for doing something which it was the duty of the Directors to do. We find in the evidence of Jagannath Prasad Dikshit that one of the purposes for which the Company was formed was the promotion of other Companies. The plaintiff cannot, in our opinion, claim any thing over and above what has been fixed as the remuneration by the articles of Association and the claim was, therefore, not maintainable. Other points raised do not require decision.

We allow the appeal, modify the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the claim as regards the sum of Rs. 551 with proportionate costs. The costs in this Court will include Counsel's fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—This appeal is preferred by the defendant, and it relates to a small strip of land measuring about ten kattas. The plaintiff's case is that she and defendant No. 3 are owners of an estate No. 165 of the Hooghly Collectorate, immediately to the east of some railway 'B' class land, and that the land in suit lies within their estate and not in the 'B' class land, that the land was in possession of their tenants, defendants Nos. 4 to 10; but the first and second defendants have entered on the land, and cut trees, dug a tank and built a privy and established a bazar. On those allegations she claimed khas possession.

The suit was resisted by the second defendant, who asserted that the land was really situated in the 'B' class land of which he is the owner. The first Court found that the land was in the plaintiff's estate and gave her a decree for possession through the tenants along with her co-partner, the defendant No. 3.

The second defendant appealed and the plaintiff preferred a cross-appeal, and the learned Judge dismissed the cross-appeal, and modified the decree of the First Court by allowing the plaintiff possession through tenants of only that portion which lay immediately to the east of the holdings of the tenants Mohes and Hari Das within the estate; in regard to the remainder he gave the plaintiff nothing more than a declaration of her title.

The finding that the land lies within the estate belonging to the plaintiff and defendant No. 3 is final, and the appeal has been argued before us on that footing. The question which is raised is whether the plaintiff as landlord is entitled to demand khas possession of the whole area.

The land in suit must be treated as forming part of those holdings of the plaintiff's tenants, to which it is contiguous. Those holdings are still in existence, and the tenancies have not been determined. The respondent contends that until those tenancies are determined, the plaintiff as landlord has no right to sue at all, and he has preferred a cross-objection urging us to deny to the plaintiff even the partial relief that has been granted to her.

For the present I leave out of consideration the parcels of land adjoining the holdings of Hari Das and Mohes. So far as the rest is concerned I think that there is abundant authority for the proposition that the plaintiff cannot claim khas possession. Decisions like those of Bissesuri Dabeea v. Baroda Kanta Roy Chowdhry (1) and Raj Kumar Mandal v. Ali Mia (2) do not help her when they are examined. On the other hand there is the case of Davis v. Kazee Abdul Hamed (3) followed by many others, and never, so far as I can find, doubted. One decision of particular value is the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad Court in the case of Sita Ram v. Ram Lal (4) in which the vigorous if erroneous exposition by the one dissentient Judge drew from Edge, C. J., a very clear statement of the law. On the authorities I think that plaintiff cannot get more than she has got. On the same authorities I think that she is entitled to the decree which has been made and the cross-objection must be dismissed.

Then regarding the parcels adjoining Mohesh and Hari Das holding the finding is that those plots have been in possession of the tenants within twelve years of the suit, that fact may justify the slight difference which has been made in the relief granted to the plaintiff; practically I think this difference will amount to nothing, for the decree does not direct that either the plaintiff or the tenants will be put in physical possession. There is, therefore, no need to allow the defendant's cross-objection in regard to these two portions any more than in regard to the remainder.

The result is that the appeal and the cross-objection must both be dismissed with costs.

Mukerji, J.—Plaintiff instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises for declaration of title and recovery of possession in respect of a strip of land which is claimed by her as appertaining to her Touzi No. 165 and which the principal defendants viz., Nos. 1 and 2 claim as appertaining to their Railway 'B' class land. The piece of land is made up of portions of holdings of certain tenants of the plaintiff five in number. As the result of two local investigations held by a Commissioner the boundary was ascertained and a map showing the encroachment was prepared. The learned Munsif made a decree declaring the plaintiff's title to the portion found by the Commissioner to have been encroached upon by the defendant No. 2 and awarding the plaintiff possession thereof through the tenants by receipt of rent. The defendant No. 2 preferred an appeal from the said decision. The plaintiff too preferred a cross-appeal; but the same need not be further considered. On the appeal of the defendant No. 2, the learned Subordinate Judge made a variation in the decree, upholding it so far as it declared the plaintiff's title but limiting it, so far as possession is concerned, to the portion of the holdings of two out of the five tenants which had been found to have been encroached upon by the said defendant. The plaintiff thereupon has preferred the present appeal.

Upon the case as laid by the plaintiff herself, the tenancies of the different tenants have not been determined and they are still in possession of portions of their holdings. The plaintiff, therefore, has no cause of action for a suit for khas possession and so far as that relief is concerned the suit must be held to be premature. This principle was enunciated in the cases of Davis v. Kazee Abdul Hamed (3), Hedayetunnessa Begum v. Shibdayal Singh (5) and Womesh Chunder Goopta v. Raj Narain Roy (6) and has been followed ever since in all the Courts in this country. The principle has been very clearly explained in the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Sita Ram v. Ram Lal (4) in which Sir John Edge, C. J., observed as follows:—"The principle, it appears to me, must be the same all the world over, and certainly must be the same in India as in England. That principle is that where a man, whether the owner or merely a tenant, creates a tenancy under him which entitles the tenant to the exclusive use of the land or of the house, as it may be, the man creating the tenancy cannot have any right to actual possession, unless he has by the lease or by agreement with his tenant reserved to himself a right to re-enter and take possession."

(6) 10 W. R. 15.

In that judgment the learned Chief Justice has also pointed out the circumstances under which a landlord whose title has been questioned by any one else than the tenant may institute a declaratory suit, and if any one enters on the receipt of the rents and profits of the land and takes from his tenants the same which were due to him he may also be entitled to a decree putting him into possession, that is, what is known as formal possession as contradistinguished from actual or khas possession. In the same case Bannerji, J., observed that if actual possession was taken during the currency of the lease by a trespasser, such a person would be a trespasser as against the tenants, and not as against the landlord so as to justify the latter in claiming ejectment of the trespasser; if his title is denied he may certainly defend that title by a suit for a declaration of his right; but so long as he does not himself possess the right to enjoy physical possession he cannot eject the trespasser. In the present suit, the tenants never relinquished possession before suit; they filed statements after the institution of the suit, to the effect that they had no objection to the plaintiff getting a decree. This, in my opinion, did not improve matters in any way; and the learned Subordinate Judge in my judgment was right in refusing the plaintiff a decree for khas possession. The learned Subordinate Judge has upheld the decree declaring the plaintiff's title, and this, in my opinion, was the utmost that the plaintiff could get in the present suit. He has, however, given the plaintiff a decree for possession through two of the tenants in respect of the portions of their holdings encroached upon by the defendant No. 2. I am very doubtful if he was justified in making a differentiation in respect of these two holdings from the others, having regard to the fact that the present suit is a simple action for possession based on trespass, alleged to have been committed during the subsistence of the tenancies. It must be remembered that this is not a claim based on an allegation that the trespass is injurious to revision. Even though the trespass is accompanied by a claim of right, it is not necessarily injurious to the reversion [Ram Chandra Sil v. Rammanmani Dasi (7).] Nor has it been alleged that the plaintiff's right to receive rents from these two tenants has been affected in any way or that her rents and profits have been intercepted by the contesting defendant in a manner justifying such a decree. See the case of Raj Kumar Mandal v. Ali Mia (2) where all the authorities on the point have been discussed. As, however, the learned Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiff has succeeded in proving that she has received the rents of these two portions within twelve years before suit, and the effect of the decree will be that, he will be in possession through her said tenants and not in khas possession, I do not think that it matters much.

I, therefore, think that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is substantially correct and I agree that the appeal and the cross-objection should both be dismissed with costs.

Mortgage—Profits in lieu of interest—Stipulation to pay fixed sum as malikana—Mortgagee, whether liable to account—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 77

The principal terms of a mortgage-deed were that the mortgagees were to take possession and to receive the profits in lieu of interest, but they were to pay to the mortgagors an annual sum of Rs. 25 described as malikana. In a suit for redemption of the mortgage:

Held, (1) that the fact that a fixed sum was stipulated every year instead of a variable amount, to be determined after calculating the profit or loss of the particular year did not affect the question of the mortgagee's liability; [p. 26, col. 1.]

(2) that the mortgagees were bound to account to the mortgagors for the malikana they had undertaken to pay. [ibid.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Officiating District Judge, Agra, dated the 24th March 1922.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellants.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for redemption of a mortgage, dated the 23rd November 1880. There had been a previous mortgage, dated the 17th November 1860, between the ancestors of the parties but this was superseded by the later mortgage. The principal terms of the later mortgage-deed were that the mortgagees were to take possession and to receive the profits in lieu of interest. They were however to pay to the mortgagors an annual sum of Rs. 25 described as malikana, the mortgagors agreeing that they had no further claim against the mortgagees beyond this malikana. It is further stipulated in the deed that there shall be no accounting except as to the Rs. 25 which the mortgagors were to receive every year. It is not disputed that this malikana was never paid. Both the Courts below have granted a decree for redemption on payment of the principal mortgage-money after deducting Rs. 25 a year from 1886 to the date of suit.

In appeal three points have been taken by the learned Counsel for the appellants.

The first is that as the mortgage was a usufructuary one the mortgagees were not bound under section 77 of the Transfer of Property Act to account to the mortgagors.

The second is that if this view is accepted the mortgagors' only means of recovering the arrears is by a separate suit and that the claim in respect of it is barred by limitation.

The third point relates to an area of 7 bighas 18 biswas which was taken up by Government at some time between 1860 and 1880 for the Canal Department.

BIKRAMAJIT RAI v. DARSHAN DAS.

Compensation was paid for this to the mortgagees. Later on the land was restored to the original owners on repayment of the compensation money. The defendants' case was that they took this land back as owners and not as mortgagees.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has relied on a ruling in Shafi-un-nissa v. Fazalrab (1), in support of his contention that under section 77 of the Transfer of Property Act there can be no accounting between the parties. In our opinion the ruling has no application to the facts of the present case. In that case the mortgagor had undertaken to pay a certain amount annually in addition to the profits of the land. In the present case the mortgagees undertook to pay Rs. 25 a year out of the profits. But the fact that a fixed sum was stipulated every year instead of a variable amount to be determined after calculating the profit or loss of the particular year does not appear to affect the question. In this view of the case no question of limitation arises.

In view of our finding on the first point the second point taken by the appellants must be decided against them.

Dealing with the third point it is clear that the intention of the Government was to return the property to the parties from whom it had been originally taken including the mortgagees, but in any case it appears from the recital in the second mortgage-deed that the property mortgaged was the same as in the earlier deed. From this it must be inferred that the parties had arrived at a settlement among themselves with regard both to the property acquired by Government and restored to them and as to the compensation money paid.

The result is that the appeal fails on all three points and it is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Where during the pendency of an appeal one of the several respondents dies and no application is made in time to have his legal representatives made parties, if the interests of the several respondents can be distinguished and separated, then the appeal shall abate as against the deceased respondent only, but if no such determination is possible, it shall abate against them all. [p. 27, col. 1.]

Therefore, where several persons buying property jointly by a joint sale-deed are sued for recovery of possession and during the pendency of appeal against them one of them dies, and the Court passes a decree against all of them, without representatives of the deceased being made parties, the decree is null and void against all of them and not only against the deceased, otherwise there will be two inconsistent or contradictory decrees relating to the same subject-matter. Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Azamgarh, dated the 30th November 1922.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by Mahanth Darshan Das for possession of certain property on the ground that it belonged to the math of which he had been duly elected Mahanth. The property in suit had been sold by one Musammât Subhagi to Gobind Rai and five other persons. Musammât Subhagi's claim to the property was that it had been given to her by Sheoraj Das a former Mahant.

The Trial Court found that the property belonged to the math and should not have been transferred by Sheoraj Das but holding that plaintiff had failed to prove his own due election as Mahant dismissed his suit.

RAMACHANDRA SADASHIV U. KESHAV DHONDU.

Darshan Das appealed and made Musammat Subhagi and all her transferees respondents. During the pendency of the appeal Gobind Rai died. No application was made to have his legal representatives made parties to the suit and no notice was taken of his death in the lower Appellate Court.

The learned Judge found that Darshan Das had proved his title and decreed his suit against all the respondents including Gobind Rai.

Only one point has been argued in this Court. That is that the whole appeal had abated as against all the respondents and the decree of the Court below had become null and void.

Order XXII, r. 4 (3), provides that when no application is made to cause the representative of a deceased defendant to be made a party, the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant, and rule 11 of the same Order makes the order applicable to appeals.

The appellants' contention is that though the rule in question only provides that the appeal shall abate as against the deceased respondent, there are cases such as the present one in which it must abate as against all the respondents. The test is whether the result of leaving the decree to stand would be to have two inconsistent or contradictory decrees relating to the same subject-matter. Where the interest of the respondents can be distinguished and separated then the appeal will abate as against the deceased respondent only, but where no such determination is possible it must abate against them all. Several rulings of the Calcutta High Court have been cited in support of this proposition; in particular Sheikh Dendoo v. Shaikh Sachoo (1), Sarat Kamini Dasi v. Chaitanya Chandra Prohoraj (2) and Kali Dayal Bhattacharjee v. Nagendra Nath Pakrashi (3). In the present case the sale-deed is a joint one in favour of six defendants. If the present appeal is not allowed then there will be two decrees both of them final—under one of which the right of Gobind Rai to any part of the property in suit has been denied while in the other it has been allowed. At the same time it will be impossible for any body to ascertain without a suit for partition over what part of the property this right extends.

In my opinion this view is the correct one and must prevail. It has been taken by the Lahore High Court in Sirdari Lal v. Ram Lal (4) and the principle underlying it has been more than once affirmed by this Court in cases under section 368 of the former Code of Civil Procedure e.g., Hem Kunwar v. Amba Prasad (5). In that Code the words "as against the deceased defendant" did not find a place, but the Courts generally held that a distinction ought to be made between the case in which a suit on appeal could proceed in the absence of legal representatives and those in which it could not. It is clear that this is an instance of a case in which the absence of any representative of Gobind Rai makes it impossible that the lower Appellate Court's decree should be allowed to stand.

The appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. The appellants will get their costs in both Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.

Marten, J.—The point in this appeal is one of the onus of proof as to the date of the death of one Baji. The suit is an ejectment suit. The defendants have been in possession under a Court sale since 1889. The plaintiff, who is the appellant, relies for his title on a conveyance in 1910 by one Dwarkabai, who was a sister of Baji. The suit was brought as long ago as February 1911, and has already been remanded once by the High Court for an amendment of the pleadings. On that amended case, the plaintiff's case is that Annapurnabai, the wife of Baji, was a widow at the date of her death in 1908, and that Dwarka accordingly was a reversioner, and the plaintiff sues in right of Dwarka as reversioner. A further amendment was asked for on the remanded trial, which will be found in paragraph 28 of the judgment of the learned Trial Judge, viz., to add Dwarka as a co-plaintiff. But that amendment was refused.

Now the plaintiff is suing for possession, and the onus of proof is on him to make out his title to the property. It is clear that that property was at one time in the ownership of Baji, he being a son of one Anant, who died prior to 1872, Baji married Annapurnabai about 1872, and it appears that some time after that date he left the village. He apparently came back after two years, stayed only a couple of months, and then went away again. There is some conflict of evidence as to when he was last heard of, but it appears that on a judicial enquiry held in Miscellaneous Application No. 64 of 1880, it was held that he was then alive. Next in a mortgage-deed of 1886, Exhibit 64, there is a recital that Baji was wandering from home for many years. That recital is relied on as showing that he had not been then heard of for over seven years, but the learned Judges came to the conclusion that that recital in the face of other evidence was not sufficient to establish that fact.

We come then to the question on whom the onus of proof lies. The appellant contends that defendants must prove that Baji was dead in 1889 when the defendants purchased the property. But it is clear, to my mind, that that is not the right way in which to begin the consideration of this case. Baji is the last person proved to have been the owner. If the plaintiff claims under some reversioner or heir of Baji, the onus is on him to establish his title. That being so, the plaintiff next asks the Court to presume that Baji was dead in 1910 when the plaintiff purchased the property from Dwarka.

It has been held in a large number of cases in India, and only recently by this Appellate Court in Second Appeal No. 856 of 1920 [Gopal Bhimji Arte v. Manaji Ganuji Padval (1)], that the only presumptions in Indian law as to the fact of death are contained in sections 107 and 108 of the Evidence Act. It has further been held that sections 107 and 108 only relate to the date when the suit was brought, that is to say, as to whether a man is alive or dead, as the case may be, at the date of the suit, and not at some particular period anterior to the suit. Accordingly on those decisions it would or might be presumed in the present case, that Baji was dead in 1911 when this suit was filed. But those decisions also establish that there is no presumption as to whether a particular person was dead at any time within the period in question. Consequently, stopping there, there would be no presumption that Baji was dead in 1910, because that was a date anterior to the date of the filing of the suit.

I may quote from what Mr. Justice Crump says in the above recent case. "The result in the present suit would be that the burden of proving that Rakhama was dead at the date of the suit would lie upon the defendants. Therefore, in the absence of evidence the Court would hold that Rakhama was dead at that date. This result does not assist in any way the determination of the question whether Rakhama predeceased Ahilau who died four years before that date. This is the reasoning of the lower Appellate Court, and it is supported by authority apart from the apparent meaning of the section itself. Assuming that this is the correct view the result is that section 108 is inapplicable and the question must be considered apart from it. In that case there is no special rule in the Indian Evidence Act and the burden of proof would lie on plaintiff. Though it is proved that Rakhama disappeared twenty years ago, there is nothing to authorise the presumption that he was dead at the end of the first seven years of that period."

Assuming then in favour of the present appellant that section 107 does not apply for the above reason or for the reason that it is not shown that the appellant was alive within 30 years from the date of the suit, and assuming further in favour of the appellant that section 108 is not applicable either, then we are brought to consider the matter irrespective of sections 107 and 108. The appellant asks us to say that, because according to his view Baji was not heard of for 30 years prior to 1910, that, therefore, the presumption under section 114 is that he was dead at the end of those 30 years.

It seems to me, however, in the first place that the appellant has taken the wrong period. On his case as he has framed it after due deliberation on the remand by the Court, it is necessary for him to prove that Annapurnabai was a widow at her death in 1908, for otherwise Dwarka would not be a reversioner. Therefore, the 30 years would be the 30 years prior to 1908. On the other hand, as I have already pointed out, by the judicial finding in 1880, Baji was found to be alive then, and, therefore, the appellant does not satisfy the test of 30 years which he asks us to adopt.

But irrespective of that, and even assuming we have to take the period as being 30 years before 1910, admittedly there is no authority that he can produce for the proposition that under Indian law when a man has not been heard of for 30 years, he is presumed to be dead at the end of that time. On the contrary the passage I have already quoted from Mr. Justice Crump's judgment would appear to negative that proposition. There can hardly be any magic in 30 years as compared with 20 apart from the fact that 30 years is mentioned in section 107.

Further in Narayan Bhagwant v. Shriniwas Trimbak (2) it will be found that over 30 years had elapsed between the disappearance of Trimbak, the person in question there, and the date when that suit was brought. There Sir Lawrence Jenkins held that the lower Court arrived at no error of law in holding that it was not proved that Trimbak had predeceased his brother Appa who died in 1880.

Then in Moolla Cassim v. Moolla Abdul Rahim (3) which was an appeal from Burma, it will be found on reading the judgment of the learned Judges of the Burma Court at page 176 that on the dates there, more than 30 years had elapsed. They say, for instance, "Moolla Ahmed" "had not been heard of for more than seven years in fact for more than 30 years—before the date of the institution of the suit." Notwithstanding that, they held the onus of proof was on the person there who alleged that Moolla was alive at the particular date.

In the present case the question is of proving the man was dead, but in my opinion it is merely an accident as to whether the particular fact that has to be proved, is whether the person is alive or has survived at particular period or whether he is dead. In each case we have merely to consider on whom the onus of proof lies.

The point as to these 30 years is dealt with in the judgment of the learned Trial Judge in paragraph 8 and the conclusion he arrived at is this. "So I simply presume that Baji is dead and there is absolutely no evidence in the case directly or indirectly proving when he died. On the contrary plaintiff's own admission shows that apart from the legal fictions of presumptive death or civil death Baji's wife till her death conducted herself as a wife of a living husband in private life, and in legal business with others as regards her property. Men of Baji's age are yet alive and so there is no presumption of his death, but for the rules in sections 107 and 108. Plain it is that I simply presume Baji's death for this trial, but make no presumption as to the time of his death either after the expiry of seven years or after the expiry of 30 years."

In my opinion on the Indian authorities the learned Judge arrived at a correct conclusion. Speaking for myself I wish to say that sitting in this Court I merely follow the previous decisions on these points without expressing any opinion of my own on law in question. Nor do I express any opinion on the question as to what is the corresponding law in England, viz., whether the period of seven years may be any period of seven years, or whether, as has been held in India, it must be confined to a period of seven years before suit. There is a conflict of opinion on that point between the Allahabad and the Calcutta Courts as to the English law on the point, and for the purpose of this case the matter may rest there. Whatever the law may be in England, I am sitting here as an Indian Judge, and all we have to do is to administer Indian law as laid down by the Courts of this country. In view of the carefully considered judgments of my brothers Shah and Ormump in the recent case, I think that it is quite unnecessary for us in the present case to consider the whole question de novo. It is sufficient for us to say that this latest decision is one binding on us in this Court.

The result is that, in my opinion, the appellant has failed to discharge the onus of proof which lies on him to show either that Baji was dead in 1908 or in 1910. Consequently in my judgment the judgments of the lower Courts, were correct, and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Fawcett, J.—I concur that the appeal should be dismissed with costs, and agree generally with the reasons given by my learned brother.

The appellant's main ground of appeal is that lower Courts were wrong in their interpretation of sections 107 and 108 of the Evidence Act. But this is certainly not correct in regard to the judgment of the Subordinate Judge who tried the suit, for in paragraph 17 of his judgment he has referred to the main cases that deal with the construction of sections 107 and 108 and he has rightly held that under those rulings all that he can presume under those sections is that Baji was dead at the date of the suit, and that he could not presume that he had died at any particular time. The Assistant Judge in dealing with this part of the case says that in February 1911 when the plaint was filed Baji will have to be taken to be no longer living and that in March 1889 Baji was alive. The latter conclusion is no doubt one which is not justified by section 108 under the rulings already referred to. But this does not vitiate the judgment he has given against the appellant, and as has been shown fully in my learned brother's judgment, sections 107 and 108 do not really help the appellant's case. His first difficulty is that he has to show that Annapurnabai was a widow in 1908, and that throws on him the burden of proving that Baji had died prior to 1908. I fully concur with my learned brother that there is no ground for answering that issue in the affirmative.

It was said by Mr. Kane that the claim in the plaint as a reversioner of Baji was one of mere false description and that the plaintiff should also be held to be claiming as an heir of Baji. But that argument is clearly not open to the appellant, in view of the proceedings under which he was allowed to amend the plaint so as to claim as a reversioner, but the request to add Dwarka as a co-plaintiff was disallowed.

Then it was said that the onus of proving the date of Baji's death should fall upon the respondents, because if he was dead in 1889, they merely purchased Annapurnabai's interest in the property as a widow and the suit being within twelve years of her death would be in time. On the other hand, if he was alive in 1889, they could only claim by a title from adverse possession as against Baji, so that the burden would be on them to show that Baji was alive in 1889. There seem to me to be two objections to allowing this argument. First of all, the plaintiff has not got over the initial stage of sustaining his title as a reversioner of Baji, to which I have already referred. Secondly, supposing the question of adverse possession by the respondents arises, the Evidence Act clearly puts them in a better position than the appellant. For under section 110 of the Evidence Act their admitted possession from 1889 throws the burden of proving that they are not the owners of property upon the plaintiff-appellant. And apart from that, I think, that, under section 103 the burden of proving that Baji was not alive in 1889 would really lie on the appellant for there is a strong probability, that he was alive in 1889, and if so, the respondents clearly obtained a good title to the property by reason of adverse possession.

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Fourth Court, Mymensingh, dated the 6th of September, 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court at Netrakona, dated the 30th of June, 1920.

Babu Jatindra Nath Sanyal, for the Appellant.

Babu Nagendra Nath Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for khas possession of a piece of land upon declaration of plaintiffs' jote right thereto. The plaintiffs alleged that the said land together with other lands belonged to one Ishan Chandra Lahiri in his zemindari right and was in his exclusive possession, and that they took settlement of jote right therein from him and thereafter were wrongfully dispossessed by the defendants. The contesting defendant on the other hand alleged that Ishan Chandra Lahiri had no zemindari right in the said land nor was he in possession thereof and that the land formed part of a chawk belonging to him and his predecessors and had been in possession for three generations.

The Trial Court found that the chawk in question in which the disputed land was included had been in the joint possession of the said Ishan Chandra Lahiri, the contesting defendant and other co-sharers and that Ishan Lahiri had only $\frac{1}{8}$ th share therein, and accordingly it gave a decree to the plaintiffs for joint possession with the defendants to the extent of the $\frac{1}{8}$ th share of Ishan Lahiri.

Against this decision the plaintiffs and the contesting defendant filed an appeal and a cross-appeal. The plaintiffs' appeal was based upon the grounds that as the disputed land had been in exclusive possession of Ishan Lahiri and as the plaintiffs were bona fide tenants under him, they were entitled to the exclusive possession of the land and also that there having been no issue framed as to the share of Ishan Lahiri in the land in suit the determination of an $\frac{1}{8}$ th share in his favour was wrong. The contesting defendant's cross-appeal was based upon his alleged right to the 16 annas of the chawk and exclusive possession thereof for upwards of twelve years.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that Ishan Lahiri was in separate possession of the disputed plot, but that possession was not adverse to the contesting defendant or the other co-sharers, and that Ishan Lahiri as well as the contesting defendant were in separate possession of separate parcels of joint properties and applying the equitable principle that one co-sharer cannot disturb the possession of the other without a suit for partition decreed the plaintiffs' suit for khas possession.

The principle relied upon by the learned Judge is well-settled and has been laid down in a long series of cases; but in my opinion, it cannot be called in aid unless it is found that the co-sharers are in possession of separate portions by mutual arrangement for the sake of convenience. Unless such mutual arrangement is proved the co-sharer who is dispossessed cannot recover possession, and his only remedy lies in a suit for partition. The plaintiffs, in my judgment, cannot have higher equities than their lessor whose only remedy lies in a suit for partition. I have been referred on behalf of the respondent to the decision of this Court in S. A. No. 296 of 1020 [Shiam Lal Saha v. Fulia, (1)] decided on the 10th March 1922 but it will be seen that the decision in that case was based on the finding that the co-sharers were each in possession of some property exclusively for convenience, and the cases of Kumudini Mazumdar v. Rasik Lal Mazumdar (2) and Jagannath Prasad v. Badri Prasad (3), which that decision purports to follow, were also cases in which a mutual arrangement was proved. As no such arrangement has been proved or even alleged in the present case, the equitable principle above referred to does not apply here. The view taken by the learned Munsif seems to me to have been the right one; but as the plaintiffs themselves dispute the share which was found in favour of their lessor, Ishan Lahiri, and they claim exclusive possession and not joint possession and claim it on the footing that their lessor was entitled to the 16 annas share in the land and was in exclusive possession thereof, the plaintiffs are not entitled to any relief in this suit.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed, the decrees of the Courts below reversed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Where the common object of the members of an unlawful assembly is to insult and attack tazias and they commit a riot in prosecution of that object, they commit one offence only and not two and are not liable to be punished separately under sections 147 and 296, Penal Code [p. 36, col. 1]

Application for revision under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, against the order of the Sessions Judge, Gonda, dated the 3rd July, 1924, in an appeal preferred against an order of the Joint Magistrate, Gonda, dated the 11th April, 1924.

Messrs. R. Alston and A. P. Sen, for the Applicants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—These applications have been made in revision of the orders of the Sessions Judge of Gonda upholding the convictions of the applicants for offences connected with the Gonda Muharram riots of 1923. It is admitted that on the 23rd of August 1923, certain Muhammadans entered a Hindu temple and caused some damage. As the result Hindu feeling stirred up and on the following day when the procession of tazias went through the city stones were thrown along the route and ultimately the Police were compelled to fire on the mob. Thirty-four persons were tried by the Joint Magistrate of whom twenty-three were convicted and of those 23 the Sessions Judge upheld the convictions of the 16 persons who have now moved this Court in revision. Although there are 10 separate applications filed by Counsel, the grounds stated for revision are for the most part the same.

In the first place it is pleaded that the applicants are prejudiced by a joint trial. This plea is based on the argument that this was not a single riot but a number of separate riots. I find, however, that all the persons who attacked the tazias were actuated by a single motive, and, in my opinion, a continuous series of attacks with the same common object, even though the composition of the crowd may vary, constitutes a single riot and not a number of separate riots. The mere fact that one of the accused threw stones at the tazias in one street and another in another street a few minutes later does not prevent them from being tried jointly as long as they were both members of the same crowd actuated by the same motive.

The only other legal point is, whether separate sentences should have been inflicted under sections 147 and 296, Indian Penal Code, and to this point I will refer later.

Ordinarily speaking this Court is not disposed to interfere in revision in criminal cases where the only question to be decided is whether the lower Court did not take a correct view of the evidence. In the present case, however, I have been asked to go further into the evidence than is usual in a revision proceeding because the learned Sessions Judge refused to allow the Counsel who represented the accused in his Court to reply to the arguments addressed on behalf of the Crown. It is not alleged, that the action of the lower Court was illegal and as I understand section 423 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, an Appellate Court is not required by law to give a second hearing to the appellant. I am aware that an opposite view has been taken by the Calcutta High Court, based on an interpretation of section 421, but whether that view is or is not right is immaterial, for I have not been asked to remand these cases to the lower Appellate Court, but only to give greater latitude to Counsel in my own Court. In my opinion an appellant has not got a right under law to reply in an Appellate Court, but permission to do so is a privilege which should not ordinarily be refused. I have, therefore, at the request of Counsel, allowed wider scope to the arguments than should ordinarily be granted in revision, in order to ascertain whether there was in the mind of the Judge any misunderstanding or misapprehension of the evidence which might have been removed had he granted a further opportunity to Counsel.

I have heard the case of each appellant on these lines, and have considered whether the lower Court has based the conviction in each case on a proper appreciation of the evidence both for the prosecution and the defence. I am not prepared to take account of the objection that the lower Appellate Court's orders are too brief or summary. He has dealt with each case separately and all his orders read together form a judgment of considerable length and there is no question that he has dealt with each case on its merits. Nor can I interfere in any case where the lower Court has given proper consideration to the evidence and come to a reasonable conclusion. Thus where the lower Court has convicted persons who were known to but not identified by more respectable prosecution witnesses, I am not prepared to find that the Court acted unreasonably or with material irregularity. Obviously in a riot where several thousands of persons are engaged and brickbats are flying in all directions there can be no presumption that any of the officials protecting a procession would identify any particular rioter. Again where the lower Courts have agreed in believing the statements of witnesses against some and not against the other accused persons,

I find no ground for interference, first, because the principle falsus in uno falsus in omnibus cannot be universally applied in India, and, secondly, because many of the persons named were really present but mistakenly supposed by the witnesses to be rioting.

I shall now deal with the individual applications in order.

(1) Banwari Lal is a cloth merchant whose shop is on the route of the procession. At this point there was a fusillade of brickbats and no less than 24 witnesses affirm that they saw this Banwari Lal taking an active part in the attack. This man pleads an alibi which has not been accepted by the lower Courts and I must presume it to be false. He gives no satisfactory reason for being falsely charged, and I have no doubt that he has been rightly convicted.

(2) Faqir Chand alias Dattu. This man was injured in the attack on the temple the night before, and went to the Thana in the morning to make a report. His defence is that he was too ill with fever to take part in the riot, but in view of the fact that he had already gone to the Thana this defence on the face of it is unsatisfactory and there is good evidence that he also took part in the riot.

(3) Prag and Kedar who are father and son live in a village, a short distance from Gonda. There is ample evidence that both of them among many other villagers took part in the riot and presumably came into the town for that purpose. Their defence was that they spent the day in their fields, but the discrepancies in the evidence which they produced were clearly pointed out by the Court of first instance. It is alleged that the lower Appellate Court disregarded the alibi evidence, but it appears that only one witness is now relied upon by these applicants, and I cannot bind that the evidence of this one witness answers the ample evidence given on behalf of the prosecution. No doubt like several of the other accused these persons are men of some substance, but that unfortunately is no reason for their not participating in a religious riot. I find that the case against these two men was sufficiently proved.

(4) Bindeshwari Prasad who is a Zemindar's Karinda is stated by no less than seven witnesses to have been seen throwing bricks at the procession. It appears that at the same part of the route there was a Mr. Tandon a respectable Pleader who was also named as one of the rioters. Both Courts have believed that Mr. Tandon took no part in the riot, but, on the other hand, was himself in danger from the stones. This applicant suggests that he should receive the same benefit of the doubt as Mr. Tandon, but I do not find that the two cases are similar, or that the lower Courts came to a wrong conclusion in convicting him.

(5) Chhotey Lal is a shop-keeper who was seen by numerous witnesses, but he cannot rely on the same defence as Bindeshwari Prasad because he states that he was confined to his bed and unable to get up. I consider that the lower Courts were fully justified in declining to accept his defence.

(6) Mukhdum is not a person of any position and his main line of defence is that he is an enemy of the Police. His defence is worthless and the prosecution evidence against him is strong. The only point in his favour is that he is 60 years of age, and he, therefore, pleads for a lenient sentence. I do not, however, think that the sentence already passed when modified in the manner which I contemplate will be excessive.

(7) Kashi Ram is a liquor contractor. His house and shop is situated at the place where the first attack was made upon the procession. The Muhammadan Deputy Magistrate who accompanied the procession saw no bricks thrown from this man's house and his next door neighbour has already been acquitted by the Sessions Judge. The applicant produced evidence which does not appear to have been appreciated by the lower Court. He says that a number of ladies were sitting on his roof being members of his own family and their friends. The reasons given by the lower Court for doubting the evidence of Dr. Sadi Lal are not correct. The reason why this gentleman went to the house of the applicant is quite clear, and the lower Court seems to have been wrong in supposing either that his own dispensary is directly on the route, or that it was a suitable place from which ladies could view the procession. Further there is medical evidence that this man was ill; there is the evidence of the Excise Inspector that he is not a person who would be likely to take part in a religious riot; there is the presumption that a publican is the last person to engage in an exploit of the kind, and there is also a suspicion that he might have annoyed those members of the Khilafat party who at about this time were strongly advocating prohibition. Lastly I must admit that I think it very improbable that a person in Kashi Ram's position would throw bricks from the roof of his own house where a number of ladies were sitting. On these grounds I feel that I should interfere in the case of this applicant and give him the benefit of the doubt.

(8) Mulhu. This man has no special ground for interference with the orders of the lower Court. Eighteen witnesses saw him throwing stones and his defence that he is an enemy of the Muslims and a supporter of the Sudhi movement renders his participation in the riot extremely probable.

(9) Bindeshwari Pujari is the custodian of the temple which was attacked by the Muhammadans on the previous night. Several witnesses saw him taking an active part in the crowd near the door of the temple and he was hit with buckshot in the mouth. All persons who were actually hit by the fire of the Police are ipso facto probably rioters, for it is proved that the shots were only fired at the prominent members of the crowd and although possibly some persons who had no guilty intention may have been accidentally wounded, there is no reason to suppose that Bindeshwari was one of them.

(10) Ghirrao Singh and five others were all wounded by buckshot and filed a joint application. Of the others

ALIMUDDIN V. EMPEROR.

I need only say that there was ample evidence in corroboration of their injuries to prove that they were active members of the crowd, but Ghirrao Singh's case is peculiar. Both the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge have stated that he produced no defence. This is incorrect. He produced his defence witnesses to prove that he was an innocent spectator. The fact that both the lower Courts were ignorant of this defence is sufficient to bear out his claim that he was not properly tried. As a re-trial under the circumstances is undesirable I consider that the only proper course to pursue is to order his acquittal.

In my opinion the applicants have made out a good case when they say that separate punishment under sections 147 and 296, Indian Penal Code, should not have been awarded. A riot denotes a common object and the common object of all these persons was to insult and attack the tazias. Their object, therefore, is expressed in the charge under section 296 and when they rioted in prosecution of that object they committed one offence only and not two. Doubtless they are liable to separate punishment under section 323 for the injuries caused in the course of the riot but they are not liable to two consecutive sentences under sections 147 and 296, Indian Penal Code.

On these grounds I pass the following orders on these applications:—

Kashi Ram and Ghirrao are acquitted and their convictions and sentences are set aside. The convictions of all the other applicants are upheld but the substantive sentences of imprisonment passed under sections 147 and 296 will be concurrent and not consecutive; and one fine and not two will be levied in each case.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 430—Security for good behaviour—Evidence, nature of—Prosecution, what must prove—Failure to furnish security—Order directing imprisonment of accused—Revision—High Court, when will interfere.

It is very difficult for the High Court to interfere in revision in cases under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but when a person is sentenced to imprisonment for failure to furnish security under that section, the High Court has to be satisfied that the evidence is of a character which will reasonably support the inference that it is necessary in the interests of public security to send the accused to prison or to bind him down.

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Agra, dated the 26th November 1923.

Mr. Saila Nath Mukerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision by one Alimuddin alias Allia who was sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment on failure to furnish security under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is very difficult for this Court in revision to interfere in these cases, but this Court has to be satisfied that the evidence is of a character which will reasonably support the inference that it is necessary in the interest of public security to send the man to prison or bind him down. Alimuddin was convicted of theft in 1916. That cannot have been a very bad case as he was sentenced only to 15 days' imprisonment. However, a history sheet was started and he came under the suspicion of the Police. In April 1921 he was bound down for one year under section 110 although the order was not enforced. Evidently he has been a marked man ever since. Between February and May 1923 four dacoities were committed in the Agra District within the Police Circle of Khaliluddin, Circle Inspector. In the last of these dacoities, one Beni Singh was caught on the spot and he made a confession in which he indicated that the four dacoities were the work of one gang. Among the members of that gang, it is said was a Muhammadan from Agra. He was not able to name the Muhammadan and was not able to identify him. The result was that the Muhammadan from Agra was not put on his trial for dacoity. The Police have come to the conclusion that the accused is the Muhammadan from Agra. As he was neither named nor identified by Beni Singh it seems to me there is no justification for the inference that Allia had anything to do with these dacoities.

I think the reason why the Police have taken proceedings against this man is because they believe that he was connected with these dacoities. The other evidence in the case seems to me to be too vague to support the charge. On two occasions in September and October, 1922, he was charged of having committed offences, but his house was not searched and the complainants in those cases have given the reasons why they suspected Allia and the reasons really are very unsubstantial. None of the witnesses can say anything recent about the accused. There is evidence that he associates with two bad characters, but this evidence is very unsatisfactory. One witness, for instance, says that he learned this fact from a statement made to him by the accused himself. In cross-examination he denied that he ever had any conversation with the accused. Another witness who testified against the accused when asked to identify him in the Court pointed to a Pleader's clerk.

All this evidence, however, even if believed, is to the effect that the accused has the reputation of dealing in stolen cattle or stealing cattle. He says of himself that he is a butcher by profession and this is admitted by some of the prosecution witnesses. Many butchers rightly or wrongly are suspected of dealing in stolen cattle, but the evidence, in my opinion, against Allia is much too vague. I cannot help thinking that but for the fact that the Police suspected that, in spite of Beni Singh's failure to name and mention Allia in connection with the dacoits, they believed he was concerned with those dacoits, and hence this case. I must accept the application and set aside the order under section 110 and the applicant will be released.

An accused has no right of reply under section 423, Criminal Procedure Code, but the privilege of replying should never be refused by an Appellate Court.

When a Hindu temple is entered into and its property damaged, the offence under section 417, Penal Code, cannot be dissociated from the offence under section 295, Penal Code, which only had expression in the entry into the temple. The two offences are really one and it is improper to pass consecutive sentences of imprisonment for each of them.

Criminal revision under section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, against the order of the Sessions Judge, Gonda, dated the 7th July 1924, in an appeal preferred against an order of the Joint Magistrate, Gonda, dated the 11th April 1924.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Applicants.
The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

BAHRA V. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision of the order of the Sessions Judge of Gonda upholding the conviction of seven persons by the Joint Magistrate of Gonda of offences under section 295-149 and 457-149, Indian Penal Code. The first ground of revision is that the learned Sessions Judge erred in law in refusing a right of reply to the applicants on their appeal. I have already discussed this point in connection with the application* made by certain Hindus who were convicted of another riot at Gonda on the 24th of August, 1923. In my opinion accused persons have no right of reply under section 423 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but the privilege of replying should never be refused by an Appellate Court. The refusal leaves it open to the appellants to urge that they might have been able to reply to the arguments brought against them on behalf of the Crown, and so have induced the Court to change its opinion as to their guilt. I have, therefore, as in their case, permitted Counsel to address arguments on the question of evidence in order that I may make sure that the Sessions Judge has not misappreciated any of the points which might have been raised in reply by the appellants.

It appears that the learned Sessions Judge took a somewhat more lenient view of this case than the Magistrate. The latter considered that Muhammadans broke into a Hindu temple without provocation on the night of the 23rd, 24th of August and damaged some of the temple property. The Sessions Judge considered that the case was exaggerated, and that the Muhammadans entered an open temple irritated by the sounds of Hindu Music when they were themselves engaged in mourning. I have been asked to hold that the Sessions Judge has failed to appreciate the evidence at its right value and that he ought not to have convicted any of the applicants. I have been through the evidence and I see no reason to believe that the learned Sessions Judge made any mistake in his appreciation of the value of the evidence or convicted any person on insufficient perjured testimony.

On the other hand, I find that the learned Sessions Judge made two mistakes. On his own view of the evidence no offence was committed under section 457 but only an offence under section 447, Indian Penal Code. This offence, namely the entering of the temple, cannot be dissociated from the offence under section 295, Indian Penal Code, which only had expression in the entry into the temple. Consequently it was improper to pass consecutive sentences of imprisonment for these two offences which are really one. The second mistake, a technical one, was made by the learned Sessions Judge when he bound over the applicant Tasadduq under section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The sections under which Tasadduq was convicted do not justify the application of section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and this part of the order of the lower Court must be set aside.

I have been asked to reduce the sentences still further on the ground that in the view of the Sessions Judge himself the case was much exaggerated and was really a more or less trivial matter. I am not of opinion that an entry into a Hindu temple at night by a band of Muhammadans themselves engaged in a Muhammadan religious ceremony can ever be a trivial matter, and in this particular case it gave rise to a very serious riot in which many persons were injured and many more have been sent to prison. The orders of the Court are that the convictions be altered in each case to convictions under sections 295 and 447, Indian Penal Code, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code, and the separate sentences of imprisonment be made to run concurrently. In each case one order of fine only will be maintained. Further in the case of Tasadduq the order binding him over under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is set aside.

Accused No 1 effected insurances of his stock of paddy said to be lying at a mill belonging to accused No. 2, with three Insurance Companies. The mill and the paddy were subsequently burnt. Accused No 1 gave notice of the fire to the Insurance Companies and followed this up by loss claims in which a much larger quantity of paddy was stated to have been destroyed by the fire than could possibly have been stored in the godowns of the mill. In the enquiry which followed accused No 2 supported the statement of accused No 1 as to the quantity of paddy which had been destroyed, although he must have known that the quantity destroyed was considerably less.

Held. (1) that the act of accused No 1 in sending in a claim to the Insurance Companies which was false to his knowledge amounted to an attempt to cheat the Companies and was not merely a preparation to cheat. [p 42, col 1]

(2) that the accused No. 2 having engaged in a conspiracy with accused No 1 to cheat the Insurance Companies and an act (i.e., the sending in of false claims) having been done in pursuance of the conspiracy and in order to the cheating, accused No 2 was guilty of abetment of the offence committed by accused No. 1 under the second clause of section 107 of the Penal Code. [ibid]

A mere act of preparation for the commission of an offence is not such an act towards its commission as amounts to an attempt to commit the offence within the meaning of section 51 of the Penal Code [p. 40, col 1.]

Whether any given act or series of acts amounts to an attempt of which the law will take notice, or merely to preparation, is a question of fact in each case. [ibid]

Criminal appeal from the order of the District Magistrate, Rangoon, in Criminal Regular Trial No. 155 of 1923.

Mr. Glanville, for the Appellants.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—On various dates in the month of February, 1922, the first appellant, Po Hmyin, effected three fire insurances on his stock of paddy said to be lying in the mill premises at Imperialwe belonging to the second appellant Tun Aung, and his father. These insurances were as follows.—(a) one for Rs. 50,000 in the West of Scotland Insurance Office, Ltd.; (b) one for Rs. 75,000 in the Yorkshire Insurance Co.; and (c) one for Rs. 25,000 in the Sphere Marine and Fire Insurance Co., Ltd.

At the time of making his proposals, the first appellant produced cover notes, issued by Messrs. Gillanders Arbuthnot & Co., showing that the mill premises themselves were insured against loss by fire. These cover notes were issued to the second appellant and his father, and were doubtless, lent to the first appellant to enable him to prove that the buildings in which he had stored his stock were protected.

On the 3rd March, 1922, the mill buildings and everything therein were burnt down and this fact was communicated by the mill owners to their Insurance Company. This was by letter, Exhibit J, which is dated Rangoon, the 5th March, 1922.

On the same date, Po Hmyin wrote Exhibits V and Y to the Sphere and the West of Scotland Companies respectively, communicating the same information regarding the stock of paddy in the mill.

A significant point with respect to these two letters is that they are type written on paper of the same size and quality as Exhibit J; the entire method of typing, including the dating, is also exactly similar.

There is no such letter on the file addressed to the agents of the Yorkshire Company, but in all probability one was sent to them as well.

Exhibits U, Z and DD are fire or loss claims on the three Companies, signed and forwarded by Po Hmyin. They are on printed forms and all contain a declaration to the effect that 75,040 baskets of paddy, valued at Rs. 1,72,558 were destroyed or damaged by the fire which consumed the mill.

These declarations formed the basis of three charges of attempted cheating against Po Hmyin; the case for the prosecution being that the declarations were false. The second appellant was charged with abetment of the three offences. Both were convicted and sentenced to suffer two years' rigorous imprisonment on each charge, the sentences to run concurrently. Both appeal.

The first point taken is one of law, viz., that even assuming the falsity of the declaration, there was no "attempt" as contemplated by section 511, Indian Penal Code. That section provides that whoever attempts to commit an offence and in such attempt does any act towards the commission of the offence shall be punished. It has been judicially held that a mere act of preparation for the commission of an offence is not such an act towards its commission as amounts to an attempt. The learned Counsel contends that Po Hmyin's acts in this case did not amount to more than preparation for an attempt to cheat.

Whether any given act or series of acts amounts to an attempt of which the law will take notice or merely to preparation, is a question of fact in each case; In the matter of R. Mac Crea (1).

In the same case, Knox, J., said, "It is, no doubt, most difficult to frame a satisfactory and exhaustive definition which shall lay down for all cases where preparation to commit an offence ends and where attempt to commit that offence begins. The question is not one of mere proximity in time or place. Many offences can easily be conceived where with all necessary preparations made, a long interval will still elapse between the hour when the attempt to commit the offence commences and the hour when it is completed. The offence of cheating and inducing delivery is an offence in point. The time that may elapse between the moment when the preparations made for committing the fraud are brought to bear upon the mind of the person to be deceived and the moment when he yields to the deception practised upon him may be a very considerable interval of time. There may be the interposition of inquiries and other acts upon his part. The acts whereby those preparations may be brought to bear upon the mind may be several in point of number, and yet the first act after preparation completed will, if criminal in itself, be beyond all doubt, equally an attempt with the ninety and ninth act in the series."

These weighty and opposite observations exactly fit the case before me. It is urged that the act of Po Hmyin in approaching the Insurance Companies with his claim represented only another stage in his preparation to cheat them and that the real attempt would have begun when, the Companies having called upon him to produce his evidence in support of his claim, he proceeded to do so.

In support of this contention the Counsel points out that insured persons who have suffered loss or damage by fire often put forward exaggerated or inflated claims, that Insurance Companies do not admit such claims forthwith but invariably institute inquiries with a view to assessing the damage, and that, therefore, an attempt to deceive them does not take place until false testimony in support of the claim is adduced.

This argument would, I have little doubt, carry considerable weight in cases where the insured has merely overvalued his property in his claim. But the allegation in the present case was not that the claimant had grossly misrepresented the value of his stock in the mill, but that his statement as to the quantity of paddy he had stocked before the fire was false. According to him, he had 75,040 baskets; according to the prosecution he could not possibly have had one-fifth of that quantity, since the mill godowns could not contain much more. Hence if the Crown had succeeded in establishing its case, Po Hmyin, when he presented his claims to the Insurance Companies, made a deliberately false statement. This was an act done in pursuance of the preparations he had made for committing a fraud and it was an act which was brought to bear upon the mind of the persons to be deceived. The appellant might have held back after he had sent Exhibits V and Y, the notices regarding the fire; the sending of these notices was another act of preparation. But when he followed up these notices with the actual claim papers he, in my view, definitely "crossed the Rubicon" and committed himself to a representation of fact which, if proved to be false to his knowledge, must be regarded as an overt act towards the commission of the offence of cheating, an act which had gone beyond the stage of preparation.

I hold, therefore, provided the necessary facts are established that Po Hmyin attempted to cheat the Insurance Companies.

As to the facts, one of the outstanding features of the case, one which was strongly relied upon by the appellants, was the assessor's report when the claim papers were presented. The Companies acting in consultation, appointed an assessor to proceed to the scene of the fire and to report on the loss caused. He did so and his firm submitted the report, Exhibit O which contains the following passage: "On our arrival there we found the mill and godowns completely gutted and the paddy still blazing. The paddy was in three different piles and in our opinion must have been well over 65,000 baskets." There is also a quotation from the owner's "Stock Book" showing a total of 75,040 baskets, which the assessor valued at Rs. 1,58,632.

I am unable to place any reliance on this report. The evidence shows that the inquiry, if it can be called an inquiry, was most perfunctory, and it is more than probable that the assessor's estimate of the quantity of burnt and burning paddy was based very largely on what he saw in the Stock Book. In any case, the estimate was that of a person whom I cannot, on the evidence, regard as an expert. He does not give any satisfactory explanation as to how he arrived at his figures. He took no measurements himself, either of the heaps of burning paddy or of the godowns, the outlines of which he saw, and he made no notes of what he observed. Only two hours were spent at the place; part of this was taken up in making inquiries as to the origin of the fire.

The next important point is in connection with the godowns, of which there were three. The second appellant admitted that he had handed a ground plan of the mill buildings to Messrs. Gillanders Arbuthnot at or about the time he insured them, and Mr. Griggs of that firm deposed that Exhibit A is the plan. Tun Aung denied it but I see no reason to disbelieve the witness, who is in no way interested, seeing that the cover notes for the mill were cancelled before the fire. The plan shows two godowns, each measuring 50 feet by 10 feet, and a third measuring 61 feet by 35½ feet. Elevations are not given, but the evidence establishes the fact that the godowns were not more than 12 feet high while the two smaller ones sloped down to 9 feet. Taking these measurements and judging by the estimates given by Mr. Thorn, an Engineer, of Messrs. Steel Brothers & Company, who has had long experience of mill godowns, the capacity of the Impalwe godowns could not have been much more than 15,000 baskets. There is a considerable body of evidence in support of this estimate. The most notable of the witnesses being Po Hlaing and Ba Gyaw, the former owners of the mill. They both swear that the two small godowns could not hold more than 3,000 baskets each, and in this they are corroborated by others. As to the large godown, the most liberal estimate places it at 10,500 baskets.

We have it then that the three godowns, when full, were capable of holding some 15 or 16 thousand baskets of paddy. Of these there were at least 4,000 baskets belonging to various small traders, thus leaving some 12 thousand as Po Hmyin's as compared with his claim of 75 thousand.

The latter figure appears, it is true, in Po Hmyin's Stock Book, but there is no entry in this of the place where the paddy was stored, and since Po Hmyin is a resident of Daikū, which is far away from Impalwe, it is more than possible that a large portion of his stock was at the former place. Be that as it may, I am unable in the face of the conclusive evidence as to the size of the godowns, to accept the statement that such a large quantity of paddy was stored in a small out-of-the-way mill.

For the same reason I must reject the evidence for the defence relating to alleged extensive purchases of paddy made by Po Hmyin. Rebutting evidence has been adduced to show the falsity of much of this defence but in the circumstances, it is, in my view, unnecessary to consider it.

I should mention here that the defence, at very late hour, deputed a trained surveyor to prepare a plan of the mill buildings; this was done in January 1923, about nine months after the fire and no weight can be attached to it.

On the evidence I hold it fully proved that Po Hmyin had less than 15,000 baskets of paddy at the mill when the fire took place and that he must have known this. His declaration that he had 75,040 baskets was, therefore, deliberately false and I must confirm the convictions.

The second appellant was held guilty of abetment in that he (1) let Po Hmyin use his mill for storing paddy, (2) lent him his cover notes on the mill, (3) stated to witnesses that 75,000 baskets of Po Hmyin's paddy were in the mill when it was burnt, and (4) stocked 'kauk-hmaw' (refuse) in the godowns and pretended it was paddy.

Of these points, it is unnecessary to deal with any besides the third. It is quite clear that Tun Aung told several persons that Po Hmyin had stored 75,000 baskets and to the Police he said (when reporting the fire)—"over 60,000 and about 70,000." Knowing the capacity of his godown as he must have done, it must be held that he also was stating what he knew to be false. Remembering also the remarkable similarity between Exhibits J, V and Y, as pointed out above, I am irresistibly led to the conclusion that he engaged with Po Hmyin in a conspiracy to cheat the insurance Companies, and since an act (i. e., the making of the claim by Po Hmyin) took place in pursuance of the conspiracy and in order to the cheating, he was guilty of abetment under the second clause of section 107. The convictions in his case also will, therefore, be confirmed.

As to the sentences, the claim was an impudent one for a very large sum of money and there can be no doubt that a substantial sentence of imprisonment was called for. I have been asked to consider the facts that the appellants were for a long time under trial that they have suffered mentally, and that they have incurred much expense; they were, however, on bail during the trial and their sufferings were brought on themselves by their own act.

At the same time, I take into consideration the circumstances that this appears to be the first prosecution of its kind, at least in this Province and the facts that the appellants belong to a class of society to whom even a short term of rigorous imprisonment would be a severe deterrent.

In the case of each appellant, therefore, I reduce the sentence on each charge to one year's rigorous imprisonment, the sentences to run concurrently.

The appellants will be called upon to surrender to their bail and will be re-committed to prison.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 144, object of—Liberty of individual, respect for—Magistrate, duty of—Proper procedure—Vague and indefinite order

Section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, is not intended to restrict the liberty of an individual if there is no apprehension of a breach of the peace on account of any act to be done by him. [p. 44, col. 1.]

The object of section 144 is to enable a Magistrate in cases of emergency to make an immediate order for the purpose of preventing an imminent breach of the peace, but it is not intended to relieve him of the duty of making a proper enquiry into the circumstances which make it likely that such breach of the peace will occur [ibid]

If it is found that a man is doing that which he is legally entitled to do and that his neighbour chooses to take offence thereat and to create a disturbance in consequence, it is clear that the duty of the Magistrate is, not to continue to deprive the first person of the exercise of his legal right but to restrain the second from illegally interfering with that exercise of legal right [ibid]

An order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, merely reciting that in the opinion of the Magistrate there is sufficient ground for proceeding under that section does not sufficiently comply with the requirements of the law [p. 3, col 2]

A vague and indefinite order which does not state any facts relating to the case or does not define the limits within which it is to operate is bad in law [p. 44, col 2]

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Monghyr, dated the 20th May 1924.

Messrs. Atul Krishna Ray and Raghu Nandan Prasad, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against an order passed by the District Magistrate of Monghyr, dated the 20th May, 1924, purporting to be one under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The order runs thus. "From an information received I consider there is a very serious danger to Mr. R. E. Blong and an imminent likelihood of a disturbance of the public peace if he proceeds back to Mahal Maheshri or Charkapathar, accordingly I issue an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, forbidding him to return to Mahal Maheshri or Charkapathar and as it is a case of emergency I pass this order ex parte." It appears that after this order was served on the petitioner he filed a petition objecting to the order. The learned District Magistrate heard the Pleader for the petitioner, but by his order dated the 26th May, 1924, he upheld his previous order of the 20th May, 1924. The point taken by the learned Vakil for the petitioner against this order is that it contravenes the provision of section 144 inasmuch as it does not state the material facts of the case; Secondly it is argued that the order is vague and indefinite. From the order as it stands it is difficult to make out what the material facts were which led the District Magistrate to pass his order of the 20th May, 1924. The order, as it stands, no doubt, complies with the provision contained in paragraph 1 of sub-section (1) of section 144. It shows that in the opinion of the District Magistrate there was sufficient ground for proceeding under this section and immediate prevention or speedy remedy was desirable. But under section 144 something more is necessary to be done than a mere recital of the fact that in the opinion of the District Magistrate there was sufficient ground for proceeding under section 144. The second paragraph of sub-section (1) of section 144 provides that when a Magistrate is of opinion that there is sufficient ground for proceeding under this section and immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable, such Magistrate may, by a written order stating the material facts of the case and served in manner provided by section 134, direct any person to abstain from a certain act.

The order, as it stands, does not state any facts relating to the case in order to show that there was any justification for making the order under section 144. From the order, as it stands, all that can be gathered is that there is danger to the petitioner himself and that there is an imminent likelihood of a disturbance of the public peace if the petitioner proceeds back to Mahal Maheshri or Charkapathar; but what the material facts were do not appear from the order. It, however, appears on a reference to the petition filed in this Court that the petitioner is the Manager of Mr. Chrestien, Mica merchant and zemindar of Taluka Maheshri, whose Head Office is at Charkapathar. Some time ago the petitioner was charged with having shot down a certain person named Chedi Singh of Maheshri, and that he and 21 other officers of Mr. Charestien were charged under various other sections of the Indian Penal Code, that the petitioner along with those officers was committed to the Sessions, and the trial was held with the aid of four Assessors, and after a trial extending over two months, the Assessors gave their unanimous opinion that none of the accused was guilty and that the learned Sessions Judge accepting the opinion of the Assessors acquitted the petitioner and other accused persons. From papers on the record it appears that certain arms and ammunition, belonging to the petitioner, were taken possession of and were in deposit in Court, that after the disposal of the Sessions case the petitioner wanted to take his arms and ammunition whereupon the Superintendent of Police represented to the District Magistrate that if the petitioner goes back to Maheshri with his arms and ammunition, there was likelihood of a breach of the peace and that the life of the petitioner was in danger. It is nowhere suggested that the breach of the peace, which was likely to take place if the petitioner returned to Maheshri or Charkapathar, would be occasioned by him. On the other hand, it appears from the order of the 20th May, 1924, that the breach of the peace was likely to be created by the other proprietors of Mahal Maheshri with whom Mr. Chrestien is in dispute and that it was in order to avert any danger to the safety of the petitioner himself that the order of the 20th May, 1924, was passed.

To my mind section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, is not intended to restrict the liberty of an individual if there is no apprehension of a breach of the peace on account of any act to be done by him. The object of section 144 is to enable a Magistrate in cases of emergency to make an immediate order for the purpose of preventing an imminent breach of the peace; but it is not intended to relieve him of the duty of making a proper enquiry into the circumstances which make it likely that such breach of the peace will occur. If it is found that a man is doing that which he is legally entitled to do and that his neighbour chooses to take offence thereat and to create a disturbance in consequence, it is clear that the duty of the Magistrate is, not to continue to deprive the first of the exercise of his legal right but to restrain the second from illegally interfering with that exercise of legal rights. Vide in the matter of Abdool v. Lakhi Narain Mandal (1).

If I am right in the interpretation of the order of the learned District Magistrate and if the only reason for making the order under section 144 was to save the life of Mr. Blong the petitioner and if on account of his return to Maheshri or Charkapathar there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace to be occasioned by the persons who are in dispute with him, the clear duty of the Magistrate was to take preventive action to bind those persons who were likely to cause a breach of the peace and not to restrict the petitioner from exercising his lawful rights.

In the second place the order restricts the petitioner from going back to Mahal Maheshri or Charkapathar. Now in so far as the order directs him not to go to Mahal Maheshri or Charkapathar the order is vague and indefinite. Mahal Maheshri, I am told, is a very big estate consisting of about 155 villages and extending over about 100 miles and Charkapathar is a village in Mahal Maheshri where the petitioner has got his head quarters. To restrict the petitioner from going anywhere in his zemindari, and I am told that Mahal Maheshri is the only zemindari of which the petitioner is the manager in the District of Monghyr, I am clearly of opinion that the order is vague and is not justified by the circumstances as disclosed in the petition filed in this Court. It is indefinite inasmuch as it does not name any specific place in Mahal Maheshri where he is prevented from going.

Then if the order prohibits him from going to Mahal Maheshri, I see no reason to make the further order restraining him from going to Charkapathar which is in Mahal Maheshri. The order is, therefore, vague and indefinite. For these reasons I am of opinion that the order of the 20th May, 1924, cannot be supported. This order is set aside.

Section 397 and not section 398, Indian Penal Code, applies to a case in which a dacoity has been committed, not merely attempted, and weapons were not merely carried by the dacoits but were actually used by them, if only by being shown or brandished, even without verbal threats of using them. Appeal against the judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge, Bilaspur, dated the 15th April 1924, in Sessions Trial No. 624 of 1924.

Mr. P. Lobo, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Shekh Ghassu and two other Musalmans, Rajab Khan and Qadir Khan, and two Chamars, Phulsai and Bhelsu, have been convicted of dacoity and each of them has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for three years. The appeals of the four other than Shekh Ghassu bear the numbers from 94 to 97, and all five will be considered together. The judgment of the Sessions Court would have made the case plainer if it had been accompanied by a map or had contained a statement of the relative positions of the places mentioned. The map filed as Exhibit P. 20 is of little assistance as it is not drawn to any scale nor is it possible to say with any certainty to what two places each of the distances noted on it relates.

But from that map and statements appearing in the depositions and the ordinary map of the district, together with the information supplied by an Inspector of Police who was present in Court at the hearing of the appeals, the positions and distances appear to be approximately these. The village of Nirtu, one of the places mentioned, is four and a half or five miles due north of Bilaspur, where the Musalman accused live. Going north from Nirtu we come to Sendri, something less than a mile away, and then two miles further on, to Semartal, where the Chamar accused and the approver Baiju Chamar live. About half way between Sendri and Semartal is what is called the Koshta tank. Seven miles a little to the north of north-east from Semartal is the Kadesar tank in the village of Newsa, and between a mile and a half and two miles further on in the same direction is Beltara where the dacoity was committed.

The commission and the circumstances of the dacoity itself are beyond all doubt, and the fact that the approver Baiju and the two Chamar accused who confessed have separately stated most of those details correctly put is equally beyond doubt that those three took part in it, and that the story they tell is to that extent at least true. From the number of the details stated by them of the inception of the raid and the journey to and from Beltara which have been proved to be true by outside evidence, it is also clear that they have given us a true version of at least all the facts.

In this connection it must be mentioned that some confusion has been imported into the case by the idea that the witnesses were talking of a gun when they spoke of a banduq. Its length as stated by them, the finding of two discharged automatic pistol cartridges outside the house of Rambharos after the dacoity, and the failure of all the people who met the gang on its way to the village to notice anything like a real gun, which would be difficult to conceal, all prove that the weapon used was an automatic pistol.

GHASSU V. EMPEROR.

It remains only to examine the truth of the approver's story as to the identity of the persons concerned with him in the crime, the detail on which an approver is most apt to go wrong intentionally even when he sticks to the truth in every other. The proof of the complicity of the two Chamars, Phulsai and Dhelau, is complete. Both of them made confessions, stating details otherwise proved to be true which they could not possibly have known without being present, and could not even have learnt if they had been "tutored" as they assert. Both of them were also in possession when the matter was investigated of certain articles taken at the dacoity. Their guilt is established without the assistance of the depositions of Baiju and of several other witnesses who saw them with others in the gang that certainly committed the dacoity.

Before discussing the case against the three Musalmans it is necessary to examine the evidence of five witnesses which the learned Additional Sessions Judge has rejected as unreliable though quite possibly true. The first is Rambharos Kalar (P. W. No. 2), the man who was robbed. In his deposition he stated that among the men who entered his house he could swear to one only, Qadir Khan, who had a lamp in his hand and carried a pistol also. The learned Judge says: "He had expressly stated before in the Court of the Committing Magistrate that he could not identify any of the dacoits. This improvement in his memory is most suspicious and I cannot trust him in this matter." Qadir Khan was not among the accused when that statement was made to the Committing Magistrate, as he was arrested later, and the witness, as he explained, had from the beginning told the Police that he could identify one of the dacoits if he saw him. His statement to the Magistrate was obviously that he could not identify any of the accused then before him as among the dacoits, which was perfectly true.

The value of the testimony of Piyare Bhat (P. W. No. 28) is considered by the learned Judge to be reduced by the fact that he said in Court that he recognised Ghassu, Rajab, Phulsai and Dhelau among the eight men whom he saw in Newsa just before the dacoity was committed, but at an "identification parade" held in the Jail he picked out only Ghassu and Rajab. But he was well acquainted with Phulsai and Dhelau who live in his village and had already said they were there. The statement of Suleman (P. W. No. 5) that he saw Ghassu and Qadir Khan between the Koshta tank and Sendri on the day of the dacoity is accepted as reliable which it certainly is.

Of Lalji Brahmin (P. W. No. 23), who saw Dhelau, Ghassu, Phulsai and three others together about 8 o'clock the next morning at Semratal going towards Bilaspur, the learned Judge says his "evidence is extremely vague on this point and he seems to have been awakened to recollection by after-events." I am unable to find any vagueness in Lalji's deposition which is particularly definite in every detail, including the date, and also very convincing. As for his not having connected the men he saw with the dacoity till some time later, the same may be said of all the witnesses who speak of seeing the gang on its way to or from Beltara. None of them connected the men they saw with the dacoity for a long time after, but when their recollection was awakened by later information they were able to say with certainty that on a certain day of the week just about that time they saw these people together.

Dilesar Koshta (P. W. No. 25) speaks of the same incident as Lalji, and he says it was on a Friday in the second half of Asarh. His evidence is rejected because he may have been speaking of either the 20th or 27th of July. But Lalji's evidence puts it beyond doubt that he is speaking of the 20th; Phulsai and Dhelau and Baiju were not seen in company with Musalmans on a Friday on the road between Bilaspur and Beltara more than once during the month of Asarh or probably during the year 1923. Of the witness Marjat Chamar (P. W. No. 26) the learned

GHASSU v. EMPEROR.

Judge holds that his "testimony is of no avail for he states he denied all knowledge of this when he was first questioned but that when G. I. stated to him about accused Dhelau's admission of having met the witness, he also nodded assent to it." Marjat is another witness who, when he was first questioned naturally did not connect his casual meeting some time before with Dhelau in the company of a number of strangers with the dacoity. But when the connection was pointed out to him he would naturally be "awakened to recollection" and the recollection would be quite honest and correct. As, however, Marjat says that he recognised none of the gang but Dhelau who told him Phulsai was with them and had just gone to the village, his deposition is of little consequence except as corroboration of the general story of the journey to and from Bilaspur.

Ghassu's participation in the crime is proved then by the evidence of Suleman (P. W. No. 5), Lalji Brahmin (P. W. No. 23), Dilesar Koshta (P. W. No. 25) and Piyare Bhat (P. W. No. 28), in addition to that of the approver Baiju and the confessions of the two Chamar co-accused. There is the deposition of Raghunath Sahai (P. W. No. 15) to whom he paid an old debt of thirty rupees all in small change a few days after the dacoity. It also appears from the statement of Jawahir Lal Sonar (P. W. No. 40) that Ghassu was at that time in possession of more gold than he might be expected to have, but that fact cannot be regarded as more than general corroboration of the more direct evidence of his guilt. It is, however, proved by the evidence of Nabidat Khan (P. W. No. 31), Jhadu Mehra (P. W. No. 33), Abdul Rahman (P. W. No. 32), and Azim Ali (P. W. No. 34) that between the dacoity and his arrest Ghassu was in possession of much more opium than is permissible and was selling it. In the circumstances opium is as certainly a part of the stolen property as any of the personal ornaments that have been identified.

There is also corroboration of the allegation of Ghassu's connection with the crime in the statement of Sher Ali (P. W. No. 44), which proves that Ghassu sent his son and the witness to summon Phulsai from Semartal for a conference of some sort; Phulsai was undoubtedly one of the dacoits, and he and Ghassu have nothing else in common. The evidence of Sukru Panka (P. W. No. 24), further proves that shortly before the dacoity there were people in Ghassu's house with, at least one "gun" of the sort that is proved to have been used at the dacoity by the two discharged cartridges picked up afterwards.

Against Rajab there is the evidence of the approver Baiju and the confessions of the two co-accused Phulsai and Dhelau, and the depositions of Suleman (P. W. No. 5), Dilesar Koshta (P. W. No. 25), Piyare Bhat (P. W. No. 28) and Khasru Teli (P. W. No. 29). Malen Mehra (P. W. No. ?) also proves that Qadir Khan was at Rajab's house a day or two before the dacoity; Qadir Khan is proved, as will be shown later, to have been one of the dacoits and that fact is, therefore, also evidence against Rajab.

As against Qadir Khan the deposition of the approver Baiju cannot be used, as it was not recorded in his presence. But in addition to the confessions of Phulsai and Dhelau, who were tried jointly with him, there is quite enough evidence to establish his guilt. Property clearly proved to be part of the property stolen in the dacoity was found in his possession when he was arrested at Cawnpur. He first of all declared that this was his own, but he has now fallen back on a futile denial of its having been found in his house at all. There is also the statement of Rambharos Kalar (P. W. No. 2) the complainant, which has already been shown to be quite reliable, and that of Suleman (P. W. No. 5) which was accepted as true in the Sessions Court, as it undoubtedly is. It is beyond question that the guilt of all the five accused who have been convicted is established, and all their appeals will be dismissed.

The Local Government has applied for an enhancement of the sentence passed on each accused, and it is convenient to discuss the matter in this judgment. The facts are these. A gang of eight dacoits raided the house and removed property worth less than three rupees short of Rs. 5,000. One of them carried a pistol, with which he fired two shots to frighten the people of the house; he also threatened to shoot with it, holding it in his hand. All the others knew he had the pistol and joined in the threats, and those others were also all armed with sticks, some of which were used on the people of the house. Each of them was charged in addition in the Sessions Court with being armed with a deadly weapon while attempting to commit dacoity (section 398, Indian Penal Code).

Section 398 has certainly no application to the case; the dacoity was committed, not merely attempted, and any weapon in the hands of any of the dacoits was used, not merely carried, if only by being shown or brandished even without verbal threats of using it. It is proved that all the dacoits had sticks and in a country where many, if not most, murders are committed with such sticks it can hardly be suggested that they are not "deadly weapons." Every one of the dacoits was, therefore, guilty of an offence punishable under section 397 with imprisonment for not less than seven years, whether he used a pistol or merely a stick.

They must be held all equally punishable under that section from another point of view. With all respect, I am unable to accept the implied though unexpressed view taken by Drake-Brockman, J. C., in Emperor v. Bhura Ahir (1) that the words of section 397 of the Penal Code exclude the operation of the provisions of section 114 of the same Code, or even of section 34. The matter is, however, of academic interest only, as it is shown by the result to have been in the case mentioned. If a man takes an active part in a dacoity in which another uses a deadly weapon as a part of the common plan of operations, he certainly ought not to get any less punishment than the man who actually uses the weapon whether he can legally get it or not.

The circumstances of this crime also make the sentences most inadequate. The Musalmans met in Bilaspur for the purpose of committing a dacoity somewhere and after enquiry ascertained that the house of Rambharos in Beltara was suitable for the purpose. The whole affair was planned with care and carried out with almost impudent daring, in that spirit of lawlessness and contempt for authority of which the prevalence demands a deterrent sentence. The property recovered was less than a tenth of that stolen, and the dacoits are still in possession of as much as is worth more than Rs. 4,500. The learned Judge's only stated reason for imposing the light sentences he did was that "no serious act of violence" was committed. The whole affair was a series of the most serious possible acts of violence, and the learned Judge was probably referring to the fact that no serious hurt was inflicted on any body. That was due to the absence of resistance, and cannot be counted for righteousness to the dacoits, who went there fully prepared to commit murder if necessary and threatened to commit it.

The two Chamar accused were merely tools in the hands of the Musalmans. They were ill paid and have given up practically all of the very small share in the booty that was given to them. For these reasons I consider that the sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment passed on each of them, though insufficient, is not inadequate to such a degree as would justify enhancement. The case of the Musalmans is, however, very different. A very small amount of property was recovered from Qadir Khan, but it is clear that each of them has still just about fifteen hundred rupees' worth of the stolen property hidden away somewhere. The least punishment that could have been inflicted on them under section 397, under which they ought to have been convicted.

For these reasons the sentence I consider the least that is adequate for each of three Musalman accused is one of rigorous imprisonment for eight years, which will include solitary confinement for three months, and a fine of fifteen hundred rupees, with further rigorous imprisonment for two years in default of payment of the fine. The sentences of Shekh Ghassu, Rajab Khan and Qadir Khan will be enhanced accordingly, and it will also be ordered that so much of the fine as is recovered will be paid as compensation to Rambharos Kalar.

Whipping Act (IV of 1909), s. 3—“Punishment,” meaning of—Sentences of imprisonment or fine, if can be added to whipping

The word “punishment” in section 3 of the Whipping Act means “the total of punishments awardable.” In lieu of punishing an offender with imprisonment and fine, the Court may punish him with whipping but it cannot sentence him to whipping and also impose a fine.

ORDER.—The word “punishment” in section 3 of the Whipping Act, has been interpreted as the “total of punishments awardable” by the learned Judges who decided Queen-Empress v. Dagadu (1). In lieu of punishing the offender by sentencing him to imprisonment and imposing on him a fine, the Court may punish him with whipping. The portion of the sentence, imposing the fine, must, therefore, be set aside. I accordingly do so and direct that the fine be refunded.

A Magistrate should not cross-examine frequently the prosecution witnesses, nor should he disallow as irrelevant the questions which the complainant may wish to put to defence witnesses with a view to show their partiality. However, even if he acts in such a manner, it cannot be held that his conduct gives rise to a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the complainant that his case will not receive a fair trial at the hands of the Magistrate.

Application under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code, for transfer of a case under sections 435 and 457, Indian Penal Code, from the District of Sultanpur to some other district.

ORDER.—This is an application for transfer of a case pending in the Court of a First Class Magistrate at Sultanpur under section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I have heard arguments at great length with respect to every ground of the application and have also read the exhaustive explanation furnished by the District Magistrate of Sultanpur. There is no doubt that proceedings reveal some lapses of procedure on the part of learned Deputy Magistrate. I am unhesitatingly of opinion that the learned Magistrate should not have taken upon himself the task of frequently cross-examining the prosecution witnesses nor was he right in disallowing certain questions on the ground that they were irrelevant, which the complainant wanted to put to the defence witness, Babu Ganpat Sahai. I purposely refrain from incorporating the nature of those questions in my order but this much I can say that the tendency of the questions which the applicant wanted to put to that witness was to show that the witness was not impartial. On the whole, however, I am not prepared to hold that the learned Magistrate acted in such a manner as to give rise to a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the applicant that his case will not receive a fair trial at the hands of the Magistrate, in whose Court it is pending. I feel convinced that the learned Magistrate is quite capable of doing complete justice and that he has not in any manner developed any bias against the complainant. The application is, therefore, dismissed.

The petitioner was convicted under section 429, Penal Code, by the Deputy Magistrate of Sasaram and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two months and to a fine of Rs. 50 or in default one month's rigorous imprisonment. On appeal the learned District Magistrate has changed the sentence to one of one month's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200 or in default to two months' rigorous imprisonment. On the authority of the case of King-Emperor v. Sagwa (1) this latter sentence amounts to an enhancement of the sentence passed by the Trial Court, for supposing the fine is not paid the petitioner would have to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment and still be liable to the fine. To regularise this sentence the imprisonment in default of payment of fine of Rs. 200 will be reduced to rigorous imprisonment for one month in default.

The Court has got to be satisfied before convicting a person of an offence under section 457 of the Penal Code, when the offence charged is of house trespass with intent to commit adultery, that there was no consent or connivance by the husband.

A charge stating that the accused did a particular act in order to commit a certain offence "or any other offence punishable with imprisonment" is improper as the accused should know the specific offence with which he is charged.

BALARAM KUNDU v. EMPEROOR.

When however the accused does not suffer any prejudice the defect in the form of the charge is curable by the provisions of section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. Gregory and Babu Pannalal Chatterjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Khandkar, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an open Rule which was granted at the instance of the accused who had been convicted of an offence under section 457 of the Indian Penal Code. Two points were urged before us on behalf of the petitioner. First, it is said that the conviction cannot stand having regard to the frame of the charge. The charge was in this form. That the accused on a certain date "committed house breaking by night by entering into the hut of Purna Pal through a window and quitting the same through the eastern door between the hours of sunset and sun-rise in order to the committing of adultery with Purna Pal's wife or any other offence punishable with imprisonment".....and it is stated that having regard to these words "or any other offence punishable with imprisonment" the charge is vague and bad and that the accused has been prejudiced thereby. There is no doubt that the charge in this form "or any other offence punishable with imprisonment" is an improper form in which to frame a charge for it is elementary that the accused should know the specific offence with which he is charged. But he was charged with a specific offence of house breaking by night in order to commit adultery with Purna Pal's wife and no other evidence was laid by the prosecution except with regard to this charge. Under the circumstances, therefore, we think that the defect in the charge is cured by the provisions of section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The first point, therefore, fails.

Secondly, it is urged that the conviction cannot stand because there is no evidence that the lady's husband did not consent to or connive at the act and it is said that having regard to the provisions of section 497 of the Indian Penal Code, no conviction under section 457 can follow unless there is evidence that the husband did not consent or connive if the charge under section 457 is one of house trespass with intent to commit adultery. As against this it is urged that the real offence under section 457 is the committing of lurking house trespass but having regard to the provisions of section 441 of the Indian Penal Code we think this is not so. Accordingly, it seems to us, that the Court has got to be satisfied before convicting a person of an offence under section 457 when the offence charged is of house trespass with intent to commit adultery that there is no consent or connivance by the husband. The husband was not in this case the complainant as he was absent at the time of the commission of the alleged offence and the actual complaint was lodged by a constable to whom the complaint had been made. The husband, however, was examined in the course of the trial as a Court witness and he answered one question put to him by the Court in these terms: "I want redress for the wrong done to me and to my wife." Moreover, it does appear that the entry of the accused into the house was a forcible entry and not through a open door or window as was suggested by the defence. In the circumstances, we think that there is evidence on the record that the husband did not consent or connive at the attempt of the accused to commit adultery on his wife. We do not think that it is necessary that the husband should have been specifically asked whether he actually consented or connived at the accused's attempt to commit adultery if there is otherwise evidence on the record that there is no such consent or connivance.

In the circumstances, the Rule is discharged.

The petitioner must surrender to his bail-bond and serve out the rest of the sentence.

Bombay District Municipal Act (III of 1901), ss. 3 (12), 96—Bye-laws of Kurla Municipality—Bye-law 132, meaning of—Street, definition of—Open space between buildings, whether street.

While the owner of a large area of building land is erecting buildings thereon, the open spaces between the buildings cannot be considered as streets within the meaning of section 3 (12) of the Bombay District Municipal Act, until the buildings are finished, as the owner has a right to prevent all other persons from using his private land.

Bye-law 132 of the Bye-laws of the Kurla Municipality means that no point of a building must be at a greater height from the ground than the distance from the farther edge of the street on which the building abuts, to the end of the vertical line drawn from that point at the top of the building.

Criminal appeal against the conviction by the City Magistrate, Bandra.

Mr. G. N. Thakur, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. W. Desai, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT:—We think this Rule must be made absolute. The accused was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50 for contravening the Bye-law No. 132 of the Kurla Municipality, read with section 96 of the Bombay District Municipal Act. It was for the prosecution to prove that the building contravened the bye-law. The accused had given notice of what he intended to build, and the Municipality did not answer the request within a month, so the accused was entitled to build, provided he did not contravene the provisions of the Act or any bye-law then in force. The complainant contended that Bye-law No. 132 had not been complied with, and if the open space between block A, on the plan, and the block opposite it, is a street, then it must be admitted that the bye-law had been contravened. But it was for the prosecution to show that that space was a street. The Magistrate says "the defence has not shown that the occupier of the building has a right at all hours to prevent all other persons from using it or part of it as aforesaid."

We must assume that the buildings had not been completed at the time that the charge was laid, and so the owner of the premises would still be considered as the occupier of the building, which was being erected, and it would be in his power to prevent all persons from using the space between the buildings until they were let out to tenants. The result must be that while the owner of a large area of building land is erecting buildings thereon, the open spaces between the buildings cannot possibly be considered as streets until the buildings are finished, as clearly the owner has a right to prevent all other persons from using his private land. It was, therefore, open for the Municipality to refuse permission under section 96 of the Act within the time allowed. Otherwise the owner was entitled to go on with the building and it cannot be said that any of the open spaces on his private property which were not built upon were streets within the meaning of the definition of street in section 3 (12) of the Bombay District Municipal Act. That being the state of the evidence in this case, it seems there is no evidence that this vacant space was a street, and, therefore, no bye-law has been contravened.

We may also mention that we do not think that the construction placed by the Magistrate on Bye-law No. 132 is correct. It clearly means that no point of the building must be at a greater height from the ground than the distance from the farther edge of the street, on which the building abuts, to the end of the vertical line drawn from that point at the top of the building. The Rule is made absolute, the conviction and sentence set aside and the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

Mr. Mohammad Hafiz, for the Applicant,

ORDER.—This is an application in revision of an order passed by the Additional Sessions Judge of Gonda setting aside the order of a Magistrate of the First Class discharging Chheda Khan applicant, and committing the said Chheda Khan to Sessions on a charge under section 395, Indian Penal Code. There is no question that the learned Additional Sessions Judge was acting within his powers in ordering the commitment of the applicant and there is no illegality in his order. The case presents some peculiar features which it is advisable to narrate in detail. A dacoity was committed in the house of Harihar Dat in January 1924 in the absence of the owner. A report was made at the Police station naming among others Chheda Khan. The Police Officers who investigated the case held different opinions as to the offence committed and the persons who should be charged. As the result of the orders of the Circle Inspector who was the senior investigating officer, proceedings against Chheda Khan were dropped. Ultimately, however, certain other persons were committed to Sessions on a charge of dacoity and four were convicted. Both the Sessions Judge and the learned Judicial Commissioner on appeal criticized the Police investigation and the Judicial Commissioner passed an order to the following effect:—

"In view of the evidence adduced in this case it is desirable that the prosecution of Chheda should have been proceeded with and his guilt or otherwise determined by a competent Court. The charge against Chheda will be enquired into and dealt with according to law."

The Magistrate, to whom the inquiry was entrusted, recorded the prosecution evidence and also that of the Circle Inspector and discharged the accused. It is well established that a Magistrate is not compelled to commit to Sessions any case in which he considers that a conviction is impossible. I need only refer to the case reported in Dharam Singh

KHANJAN V. EMPEROR.

v. Joti Prasad (1). In that case, however, the Magistrate not only disbelieved the evidence for the prosecution but he also recorded evidence for the defence which, in his opinion, rendered a commitment to Sessions improper. The judgment in that case followed an earlier ruling in Fattu v. Fattu (2) and is on all fours with the still earlier ruling reported as Lachman v. Juala (3) and with that of the Bombay High Court reported as In re Bai Parvati (4). A Magistrate, however, must exercise a proper discretion in ordering the discharge of any person charged with an offence triable only by a Court of Session. It is not enough for the Magistrate merely to doubt some portions of the prosecution evidence. He must be satisfied that the prosecution will fail and rightly fail in the Sessions Court. In the present case a perusal of the Magistrate's order does not show that he had any convincing reasons for discharging the accused. He did not hear the defence evidence and the discrepancies which he noticed in the statements of the prosecution witnesses are not such as to render a conviction impossible or even unlikely. The mere fact that the complainant is a personal enemy of the accused is a very doubtful argument. The complainant himself admits the fact and argues that on account of this enmity the accused organised a dacoity at his house. It is apparent from the last page of the Magistrate's order that he has not fully appreciated the case-law to which he refers. In the present case also in addition to the fact that the Magistrate's reasons for discharging the accused are not convincing there is an order by the highest judicial authority in Oudh that the accused should be put on his trial. In face of that order the Magistrate was ill-advised in refusing to commit the accused to Sessions. This is obviously a case in which a definite pronouncement should be given by the Court empowered to try the offence with which the accused is charged. I, therefore, decline to interfere with the order passed by the learned Sessions Judge and dismiss the application.

It is absolutely necessary, in order to convict under section 436 of the Penal Code, to prove that the building which the accused destroyed came within one of the three classes mentioned in the section, and the words "ordinarily used" do not mean that other buildings are from time to time used for purposes such as those stated in the section but they mean that that particular building is itself used. [p. 55, col. 2]

Certain villagers were convicted under sections 304 and 436, Penal Code, for having made an attack on the Chamars of the village, resulting in the destruction by fire of their chaupal, and the death of a child therein. It appeared that on being attacked, the Chamars fled from the spot and left the child inside the chaupal. There was no evidence that the chaupal was ordinarily used as a human dwelling or for one of the other purposes specified in section 436. Nor did the accused know that the child was inside when they set fire to it.

Held, that under the circumstances no offence under section 304 or section 436, Penal Code, had been established. [p. 56, col. 1.]

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the Appellants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.JUDGMENT.

Walsh, Actg. C. J.—This is an appeal against a conviction of eight people for a variety of offences which may be compendiously described as an unjustifiable and lawless attack enforced upon some low caste inhabitants of the village over a grievance, or a fancied grievance, resulting in serious injury, including the fracture of an arm to two men, the unfortunate death of a little child who was deserted by the Chamars who fled from the spot, the destruction of a chaupal of small value, but which no doubt cost money to these Chamars, and a general riot. It is probably idle to protest against the multiplication of the sections which the lower Courts persist in making in order to cover every conceivable offence that the facts may possibly establish in the course of a trial. It is not as a rule a convenient practice and this is a good example of the serious consequences which may arise from surplusage. With all respect to the learned Judge who tried this case, he has overlooked certain legal difficulties. How this child got into the chaupal no one knows precisely. It is not alleged that the accused knew that the child was inside; it would be difficult, and even wrong, to assume against them that they knew, or ought to have known, that it was likely to get inside. The natural conduct of a father, or anyone else at a disturbance of this kind, with a child in his arms, is not to leave it behind, and the natural conduct of a child is not to slip from a comfortable seat in the arms of a man on to the ground, and it is impossible to resist the conclusion that this child was deliberately left behind when its life might have been saved by the man who had the charge of it. But none of this speculation can be fairly brought within a measurable distance of the inference that the accused persons were likely to know that the child was within the zone of danger. If on the other hand, as my brother pointed out in argument, it were proved against them that they knew that the child was there at the time they set fire to this inflammable erection, it is not a case under section 304; it would be a case under section 302, and the only fair inference to draw as regards the conviction under section 304 is, that the Judge did not have the case presented to him in such a way as to give him an opportunity of working it out. It is unreasonable to drag in section 304 which has no application, and in that respect the appeal must be allowed and the convictions quashed. Much the same must be said about 436. Here again the mistake the Judge has made is probably due to the multiplicity of offences and to his failure really to study the section in the light of the facts with which he had to deal. Whatever the reason of the Legislature may have been the fact remains that the section is narrowly confined to the destruction of any building; (the word "any" in that sense meaning a certain building, or a particular building) which is ordinarily used as a place of worship, as a human dwelling, or as a place for the custody of property. It is absolutely necessary, in order to convict an accused under this section, to prove that the building which he destroyed came within one of those classes, and the words "ordinarily used" do not mean that other buildings are from time to time used for such purposes, but they mean that that particular building is itself used. Of course, if there were evidence that this chaupal had been used as a human dwelling, it would be brought within the section, but in the absence of evidence of that kind, no offence under section 436 is established, and it is really a startling thing to find two people sentenced to ten years imprisonment under a section which has no application whatever to the offence charged. Looking through the sections which are germane to this matter, we come to the conclusion really that section 426, the mere commission of mischief, happens to be the only one which is applicable. It does not really matter, as the learned Judge has said, that the worst part of this case is the lawlessness, the rioting and the injury done to the person, and in our opinion, even if this chaupal had been ordinarily used so as to come within section 436, a sentence of ten years imprisonment is wholly disproportionate to any possible aspect of the crime from a moral point of view, provided that that part of their misconduct, namely the setting of fire, is reasonably included in, and taken to aggravate, the general lawless conduct of which they have been convicted under sections 147 and 325. We think we ought to differentiate between the degrees of guilt in this case. It is obvious that Mul Chand and Khanjan were the ring-leaders. Indeed they were the persons interested in the complaint against these Chamars. We think the punishment ought to be severe on the ground stated by the learned Judge, namely, the necessity for a deterrent punishment with a view to putting a stop to this type of lawlessness. It need hardly be said that none of our observations on the legal aspects of the case ought to be taken as in the least discounting the very serious risk of setting fire to any thatch or any building or erection in an Indian village where the climate is excessively dry. In a high wind terrible devastation and possible loss of life may follow. The result is that we agree with the learned Judge in taking the serious view which he did of the offence. We allow the appeal and quash the convictions under sections 304 and 436. We confirm the convictions under sections 147 and 325 and vary the sentences by sentencing Khanjan and Mul Chand to five years rigorous imprisonment each in the aggregate. It may be distributed in any way they like between the two sections. Probably the lawful would be two years under section 147, and three years under section 325 to run consecutively; but that is of no consequence, they get five years each in the aggregate, and the rest of them three years each in the aggregate.

Ryves, J.—I agree in the proposed order. It seems to me that the charge under section 304 on the facts of the case is quite impossible. To bring a case under section 304 it is necessary to apply section 299; "Whoever causes death by doing an act with the intention of causing death, or with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, or with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death, commits the offence of culpable homicide". The offence of culpable homicide may be murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder. In this case the charge is not of murder, that is to say, the accused are not charged with having intended to cause the death of the child. Therefore, the case against them must come under the second clause of that section, or the third clause. Did they when they set fire to the chaupal intend causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death? The answer on the finding must be no, because they did not know that the child was there and, therefore, they could not have intended to cause any bodily injury to it. Lastly, they must have known that they were likely by such act to cause death, namely, that by setting fire to this chaupal they were likely to cause the death of the child or of some other person. On the finding again, it seems impossible to hold that there was any likelihood in their minds that setting fire to this chaupal would do anything more than consume the materials with which it was built. A chaupal is not ordinarily a place of dwelling, it may be used as such no doubt, but there is no evidence in this case that it was so used. When the Chamars ran out of the chaupal these accused could not possibly have any reason whatever to think that they had left behind a child inside. It seems to me that the death of this unfortunate child was a pure accident, and the person really responsible for it was the father who left it behind when he ran away. I agree also that section 436, on the evidence in this case, is not applicable.

No Tribunal can properly clutch jurisdiction by intentionally ignoring facts of aggravation which make the offence really cognizable only by a higher Tribunal, and where the accused himself has objected to the jurisdiction, in the lower Courts, the High Court will interfere in revision and set aside the conviction.

High Court Proceedings, 26th October 1885, No. 517, 2 Weir 21, followed.

Section 417, Penal Code, deals with cheating generally; but section 420 deals with that aggravated species of cheating which involves delivery of property or destruction of valuable security.

A Second Class Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try an offence under section 420, Penal Code, though one under section 417 is triable by him.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment, dated the 24th of July 1923, of the Court of the Sub-Divisional, First Class Magistrate, Goody, in Criminal Appeal No. 31 of 1923, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Tadpatri, in C. C. No. 122 of 1923.

Dr. S. Swaminadan, for the Petitioner.
The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The facts as set forth in the charge do undoubtedly constitute an offence under section 420, Indian Penal Code. Objection to jurisdiction was taken by the accused on the ground that the offence was not cognisable by a Second Class Magistrate and the objection was again pressed in appeal. It was overruled, the reason given being that there is no distinction between sections 417 and 420. This is of course clearly wrong. Section 415 defines cheating. It consists of two parts (1) fraudulently or dishonestly inducing the person deceived to deliver any property or to consent that any property shall be retained (2) intentionally inducing the person deceived to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived, if the act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property.

Section 417 deals with cheating generally; but section 420 deals with that species of cheating which involves delivery of property or destruction of valuable security. Section 417 prescribes punishment for simple cheating and section 420 lays down the sentence for the aggravated form of the offence. An offence under section 417 is triable by a Magistrate of the Second Class whereas that under section 420 is not so triable. The distinction was ignored by the lower Courts. In High Court Proceedings, 26th October 1885, No. 517 (1) the learned Judges observe thus: "But the doctrine that no Tribunal can properly clutch jurisdiction by intentionally ignoring facts of aggravation which make the offence really cognizable only by a higher Tribunal still holds good, and where the accused has himself objected to the jurisdiction, it is possible that the High Court would feel itself bound to interfere; that it is not then a mere matter of discretion even with the High Court whether the conviction should be allowed to stand."

With respect I follow the decision and hold that the Second Class Magistrate had no jurisdiction to deal with the case.

Apart from this I must say that the accused has been unnecessarily harassed. If technically he was guilty of cheating, the punishment inflicted is out of all proportion to the offence. I cannot help remarking that the conduct of the complainant, the Reddy, is open to grave reproach. He dealt with public monies as if they were his own, kept back the complainant's brass vessel and indulged in vile abuse.

The sentence and conviction are set aside and the order of compensation is also reversed.

Section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code protects an accused person from punishment for giving false answers to Court, but does not protect him when he goes out of his way to a Court which is not trying him and makes a false charge against other persons.

Application for revision under sections 435/439, Criminal Procedure Code, against an order of the Sessions Judge, Gonda, upholding an order of the District Magistrate, Gonda, dated the 30th November 1923.

Mr. Moti Lal Saksena, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision of an order of the Sessions Judge of Gonda declining to interfere with an order of the District Magistrate of the same district ordering the applicant to be prosecuted under section 182, Indian Penal Code. The applicant is one of the persons accused of taking part in the Muharram riots at Gonda in 1923. When that case was still before the Magistrate, this man went to the District Magistrate and made a report against the Circle Inspector of Police. It appears that the District Magistrate thought that this report was false and known to be false by the applicant. He accordingly ordered his prosecution under section 182, Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge refused to interfere with the order pointing out that it had been delayed for over six months and it was purely an attempt to take advantage of the fact that the Judge himself had only recently taken over charge of the District. The main ground of revision is that the applicant being an accused person is protected by section 342, Criminal Procedure Code. But this section only protects an accused person in Court. It does not protect him when he goes out of his way to a Court which is not trying him and makes a false charge against other persons. It does not appear that the District Magistrate acted illegally or failed to show a proper discretion in this matter. There is no ground for interference in revision and the application is rejected.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 136 (1)—Banking Company—Duty to publish statements on specified dates—Omission in good faith, whether justified

The omission of a limited Banking Company to publish the statements specified in section 136 (1) of the Companies Act on the dates indicated in the section, cannot be justified by the fact that the omission was due to a change in the closing date of the financial year of the Company and that the officers of the Company imagined in good faith that this justified a change in the dates on which the statements were required to be published. The officers of the Company are in such a case liable to be dealt with under sub-section (4) of section 136.

Application in revision against an order passed by the Acting Third Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader (with him Mr. A. Kirke Smith), Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This application arises out of the information filed by the present petitioner in the Court of the Third Presidency Magistrate in respect of a default said to have been committed by the Union Bank of India, Limited, and by their Managing Director and Agent.

SALEH SHAH V. EMPEROR.

under section 136 of the Indian Companies Act. The default alleged was that in accordance with the requirements of section 136, sub-section (1), this limited Banking Company failed to publish a statement on the first Monday in February 1922, on the first Monday in August 1922, and on the first Monday in February 1923. The learned Presidency Magistrate after hearing the parties made this order:—"There is no case for process. Complaint dismissed under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code."

The present application is made by the original complainant for a revision of this order praying for a further inquiry. We have heard the parties in connection with the point arising in this application. The learned Government Pleader for the Crown contends that the order of the Magistrate is wrong, but he informs the Court that under the circumstances he is instructed not to press for any further inquiry into this matter. The learned Counsel for the opponents, the Company and its officers is unable to satisfy us that the provisions of section 136 have been complied with. The explanation offered is that as there was a change in their financial year, in the sense that in 1922 the financial year ended on March 31, 1922, they put up a statement as required by section 136 on the first Monday in May 1922, on the first Monday in November 1922, and then lastly, on June 5, 1923. It is conceded, however, by the Counsel on behalf of his clients, and quite properly conceded, that it is not possible to justify this kind of departure from the provisions of section 136, whatever be the good faith of the officers of the Company in acting upon the view that a change in their financial year as indicated above would justify their action. The words of section 136 are clear, and the only complaint in the present case is that at the proper dates indicated in that section these statements had not been put up. There is no complaint that the statements as put up do not otherwise satisfy the requirements of that section. We are wholly unable to appreciate the reasons which led the Magistrate to make the order. In fact there is no defence to this information, and we cannot understand how this complaint could have been dismissed under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code, or how it could be said that there was no case for process. It is quite clear that the Company and their officers have rendered themselves liable to the penalty provided in sub-section (4) of section 136 of the Act. This is the first case of its kind brought to our notice; and having regard to the facts stated on behalf of the Company, to the fair attitude taken up on behalf of the Company and its officers and to the fact that the Crown has not pressed for any further orders, we think that it will be sufficient, under the circumstances of this case, to note that the Company and its officers have been guilty of a default under section 136 of the Indian Companies Act and have rendered themselves liable to be dealt with under section 136, sub-section (4). Beyond this we do not consider it essential, under the special circumstances of this case, to make any further order.

Application against an order of the Sub-Judge, Larkana.

JUDGMENT.

Raymond, A. J. C.—This is an application under section 195 (6), Criminal Procedure Code, for the revocation of the sanction granted by the F. C. Sub-Judge, Larkana, for the prosecution of the applicant Saleh Shah under section 193, Indian Penal Code, in respect of contradictory statements made by him in two judicial proceedings. The circumstances under which these statements were made may be briefly described. One Gul Mahomed Shah, the father of the applicant, was murdered whilst asleep in his kote at about 4 A. M. on the 6th September 1918 and the applicant was suspected of being concerned, in the crime. About a fortnight after the offence, whilst the Police were still engaged in the investigation the applicant promised to make a full and true disclosure of the facts connected with the murder provided he was granted a pardon. This was done and after the applicant's statement was recorded by the District Magistrate, Larkana, four persons were placed on their trial on a charge of murder of Gul Mahomed Shah in Sessions Court, Larkana, after the usual preliminary magisterial proceedings. In the Sessions Court, Saleh Shah narrated, with great wealth of detail the circumstances under which the unfortunate Gul Mahomed Shah was done to death, mentioning the names of the accused before the Court as the persons concerned in the foul deed, and explained his own complicity in the murder and the motives that inspired him to have his own father assassinated. Two of the four accused were found guilty by the Sessions Court of the murder of Gul Mahomed Shah and sentenced to transportation for life and their appeals to this Court were dismissed.

Now early in 1919 after the completion of the aforesaid proceedings one Ali Gohar Shah who described himself as a cousin and maternal uncle of Gul Mahomed Shah deceased, filed a suit in the Court of the F. C. Sub-Judge, Larkana, against Saleh Shah and his mother for a declaration that he was entitled to property moveable and immoveable of Gul Mahomed Shah and for possession thereof, as the defendants became disqualified from inheriting the property owing to their being concerned in the murder of Gul Mahomed Shah whose death had been encompassed by their intrigues and at their instigation. In this case Saleh Shah was examined as a witness and in his evidence he wholly resiled from the evidence given by him in the Sessions Court and denied all knowledge of the offence at the time of its commission and emphatically declared that his evidence in the Sessions Court was the result of Police pressure and that it was not true. The learned Sub-Judge who was then Mr. Barasing after an exhaustive inquiry came to the definite conclusion that Saleh Shah was not concerned in the murder of his father and that his evidence in the Subordinate Court was true and he dismissed the suit of Ali Gohar. An appeal was filed against his judgment to this Court, but as will appear from the decree the parties arrived at a settlement in consideration of Saleh Shah making a payment of about Rs. 20,000 to Ali Gohar and the appeal was withdrawn. The next step was the presentation of an application by the Public Prosecutor for Larkana, under instructions from the District Magistrate to the same Sub-Court of Larkana, then presided over by Mr. Thawardas for sanction to prosecute the applicant in respect of the contradictory statements made by him in Sessions Court and in the Subordinate Court and sanction has been accorded by the Sub-Judge, authorising the institution of criminal proceedings against Saleh Shah under section 193, Indian Penal Code, in respect of four statements set out in his order on the ground that one or the other of them is false or the applicant had reason to believe to be false.

The necessity for the application for sanction to the Subordinate Judge, Larkana, is demonstrated by the judgment in the case of Purshottam Ishvar v. Emperor (1) where it was held that where an alternative charge of giving false evidence is based on contradictory statements made before different Courts it is necessary that sanction of each of these Courts must be obtained under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, before a Court can take cognizance of the charge. We are informed though there is no indication of it in the paper-book that a similar application for sanction was made contemporaneously to the Sessions Court, Larkana, which has also granted it, after the disposal of the application by the Subordinate Court.

Now the sanction granted by the Subordinate Judge is, as I have remarked, in respect of two contradictory statements made by the applicant in his Court and that of the Sessions Judge. Both of them were undoubtedly made in a judicial proceeding. The prosecution theory is that as it is difficult to establish which of the two statements is false the charge against the applicant must be one under section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, and this is the only section under which an alternative charge can be framed. To attract the applicability of this section in this case and justify a charge in the alternative it is essential to remember that it is only when the statements constitute a "series of acts" that an alternative charge can be framed under section 236, Criminal Procedure Code.

The interpretation to be attached to the words "series of acts" used in section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, has been laid down in the Full Bench case of Purshottam Ishvar v. Emperor (1). It was held in the case that although a statement recorded under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, is not evidence in a stage of judicial proceedings, but comes within the meaning of the words "evidence in any other case" used in section 193, Indian Penal Code, it can be linked with a statement which is evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding following on the investigation so that the two can be said to be a "series of acts" on which an alternative charge can be framed under section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, of intentionally giving false evidence under section 193, Indian Penal Code. In the present case the stages wherein the two apparently irreconcilable statements were made, are entirely disconnected, the criminal trial wherein the point at issue was as to the persons that had committed the murder of Gul Mahomed Shah was distinct from the civil suit filed by Ali Gohar Shah. Had the suit not been instituted there would have been no occasion for the applicant to make any statement in Court and the fact that he disowns all knowledge of the murder in his evidence in the Civil Court cannot, in my opinion, by any stretch of language be deemed to fall under the category of a "series of acts" because it contradicts his previous statement in the Sessions Court. In the case referred to above the question arose whether the statement made by a witness on oath under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, during the course of a Police investigation and a statement made by the same witness at the trial contradictory of the previous one constitute a "series of acts" within the meaning of section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, so that an alternative charge could under that section be framed in respect of the statements and it was held that it could as there was a common relation between a Police investigation, as enquiry by the Magistrate preliminary to commitment and a final trial in the Sessions Court and to the statements made at these different stages the words "series of acts" would be applicable. Further as remarked by Macleod, C.J. "A series of acts means two or more acts connected together by some common relation. Clearly a statement on oath before a Committing Magistrate and a statement on oath at the trial of the same accused on the same charge would constitute a series of acts". I am prepared to concede that the statements of the applicant in the Sessions Court and in the Sub-Court are diametrically opposed to each other but I cannot conceive a common relation between the two statements or anything approaching the relationship existing, say, between a statement in the Committing Magistrate's Court that A has committed the murder and a statement in the Sessions Court that A has not committed the murder. The crux of the enquiry in the Sessions Court was whether the accused named by the applicant were guilty of the murder of Gul Mahomed Shah, the question before the civil Court was whether the applicant himself was also implicated in the murder, and though no doubt in both the inquiries the circumstances leading to the murder of Gul Mahomed Shah formed the subject of investigation, the two statements could not be described as "series of acts". As, therefore, sections 236, Criminal Procedure Code, is the only section that provides for the framing of a charge in the alternative and as, in my opinion, an alternative charge would not be justified in the present case as the statements made by the applicants in the Sessions Court and in the Civil Court do not fall under the category of a "series of acts", I would revoke the sanction granted for the prosecution of the applicant.

Kennedy, J. C.—I must confess that I am in much doubt as to this matter, but on the whole I do not think I ought to differ from the opinion of my colleague. The difficulty arises from the fact that the power of the Court to charge and convict an accused person who has made two contradictory statements, without ascertaining which of the contradictory statements is false, is put beyond doubt only by the Illustration to section 236 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the form in the Schedule. In such a state of affairs it is not to be wondered at if the powers of the Court are ill-defined.

If the powers of the Court are as the prosecution wish us to assert, then the result of the assertion is to create a new substantive offence which does not occur in the Penal Code, namely "tergiversation". In any case where the same man has advisedly made on oath two contradictory statements he is punishable. To hold this would be to lay down that in no case was a perjurer to change his mind and to tell the truth. The law would, therefore, compel the sinner to abide by his sin and would offer him no opportunity for penitence. In the absence of clear authority that this is the law I should hesitate to pronounce it such.

It is true that the dictum of Pratt, J., in Purshottam Ishvar Amin v. Emperor, (2) tends to support that view. But that dictum was not necessary for the decision of the case before him, and it does not appear that anything in the judgments of the other Judges supports it.

No doubt any two acts may form a series if you choose to regard them as such. And it is arguable that two acts of testimony by the same man constitute a series without more. So do two acts of homicide at the interval of a year. Would it be permissible to charge the accused in the alternative in such a case?

I think there is much to be said for the view that the series of acts referred to in section 236 implies two or more acts connected by some more intimate relation than that of consecutiveness in time. This view is also supported by the example. The two acts of swearing referred to therein occur one before the Committing Magistrate and one in the Sessions Court so there is this connection between them that they occur in the preliminary and final stages of the same trial. Here there is a clear connection other than temporal and I think there could be no doubt that two such acts of swearing would form a series. Similarly in the Bombay case quoted above the two acts occur one in the Police investigation and one at the trial of the same offence.

(2) 60 Ind. Cas. 593; 23 Bom. L. R. 1 at p. 21; 22 Cr. L. J. 241 (F. B.).

SHEO RAM v. EMPEROR.

I cannot find in the books any case in which two contradictory statements formed the basis of a charge when those contradictory statements were recorded in two utterly unconnected cases as here, where the accused was at the time when he gave one deposition an approver in the Sessions Court and when he gave the second, a defendant in a civil suit.

The present case is of course a bad case. If applicant's deposition in the Sessions Court was false he assisted by false evidence in getting two persons sentenced to transportation for life. If his statement in the Civil Court was false he succeeded in retaining by such false evidence an estate worth several lacs, on the other hand even in this case much inconvenience is likely to be caused by proceeding in the alternative. Suppose the learned Judges who decided Emperor v. Sailendra Kumar Das, (3) laid down what it is argued they laid down. They are Bench of which no one can speak otherwise than with deep respect. If it is essential (as I do not think it is essential) for the sanctioning Court to come to the conclusion whether the statement made before it, is true or false, then in this case you would have the Subordinate Court compelled to express its view on the correctness of the finding of his predecessor in the civil suit and the correctness of the findings of the Sessions Court and of this Court in the criminal matter. Contrariwise the Sessions Court would have to ascertain whether the judgment in the Civil Court (which might have been that of this Court) was correct. This would be unseemly.

As I have said I do not myself think that any such duty lies on the sanctioning Court. I should say that all that was necessary for such a Court was to see whether the two statements were irreconcilable and whether the other elements existed which rendered a trial for perjury in the alternative necessary.

But as I have said there is the best authority the other way. I think, therefore, there is much to be said for the view that the two acts of swearing must be closely connected. I do not say that the example is exhaustive. I think it quite probable that a charge would lie in respect of two contradictory statements made by a witness in the course of two successive Session trials of different batches of accused for the same or closely allied offences. But I am not fully prepared to hold in the present case that the act of swearing in the Sessions Court and the act of swearing in the Civil Court form a series. I, therefore, agree with the proposed order, with the understanding that this order is no bar to the prosecution obtaining sanction and prosecuting on either of the alleged statements. My colleague agrees with this last part.

Northern India Canal and Drainage Act (VIII of 1873), s. 70 (12)—Opening closed outlet, proof of—Irrigation of fields, whether sufficient.

A person cannot be convicted under section 70 (12) of Northern India Canal and Drainage Act, for opening an outlet closed under the orders of the Canal Authorities, when the only fact against him is that he irrigated his fields with the canal water.

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Rohtak, dated the 9th November, 1922.

ment. The petitioners in both these cases were charged with opening an outlet of water which had been closed under the orders of the Canal Authorities, and on conviction under section 70 (12) of Act VIII of 1873, were sentenced by the Trial Magistrate to pay a fine of Rs. 50 each in Criminal Revision No. 1716 and a fine of Rs. 40 each in the other case. On appeal the learned District Magistrate upheld the convictions and the sentences.

The petitioners have now come up in revision to this Court, and three points have been urged by the learned Counsel appearing on their behalf, viz., (1) that there is no direct evidence in proof of the charge under which they have been convicted; (2) that the trial was bad for misjoinder, and (3) that after the witnesses for the prosecution were examined the accused were not asked to explain the evidence against them as required by section 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I do not think it necessary to discuss all these points in detail in this judgment as I am clearly of opinion that the petitions must succeed on the first point alone. I have carefully gone through the record and do not find any evidence in support of the fact that the petitioners were guilty of opening the outlet. The mere fact that the fields were irrigated by the accused is not sufficient to show that they had also a hand in opening the outlet in question. In fact the learned District Magistrate himself observes in his judgment that it is difficult to obtain evidence in such cases and remarks further that if the agents of the petitioners broke the rule the principals are undoubtedly guilty. I do not think there is any warrant for such a proposition, and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary I must hold that the accused are not guilty of the offence of which they have been charged.

I accept the revisions and acquit the accused. The fines, if paid, shall be refunded.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 376—Rape, proof of—Probabilities of case.

Accused was charged with rape of a girl of seventeen in a place where the girl could not easily have been forced to go against her will. There was no physical proof of the rape, and the inference from the medical evidence was that at the time of the alleged offence the girl was not a virgin.

Held, that the offence had not been established against the accused.

Appeal.

Mr. Sagar Chand, for the Appellant.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant has been convicted of rape of a girl of 17. The learned Magistrate has described the scene of the alleged rape, has shown how inaccessible it was, but has swallowed with ease all the great improbabilities of the story.

There is no physical proof of the rape; indeed the inference from the medical evidence is that at the time of the alleged offence, the girl was not a virgin. No trace of semen was found on her clothes and there is no evidence that the appellant was injured, as he should have been, if the evidence of P. W. No. 2 is truthful.

I do not believe that the girl was forced into the magbara; she must have gone there willingly. It would take considerable effort to force a girl of 17 through a low arch only 3 feet high, if she were a resisting party.

In addition, there is a discrepancy regarding the stick used by the witness Nura and the whole case strikes me as false.

I accept the appeal and acquit the appellant.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala and Mr. M. L. Sandal, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which have given rise to this appeal are briefly as follows:—The decree-holders, who are the respondents in this appeal, brought a suit of mortgage and obtained a decree. In execution of the decree the mortgaged property was sold and on 29th March, 1921, an application was made to the Court under O. XXXIV, r. 6, Schedule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, for the passing of a money-decree against the mortgagors. The judgment-debtors, who are the appellants in this Court, filed objections to the granting of the application, once on 30th April, 1921, and then on 7th May, 1921. In fact, the objections were that the application was barred by time and the decree-holder had prepared the account without giving credit for all the sums realised and without calculating the interest by the proper method. The lower Court decided the question of limitation alone and held that the application was time-barred. An appeal was preferred to this Court, and by a judgment, which will be found printed at page 37 of A. L. J., Vol. 21, Raj Narain Mal v. Santi Lal (1) this Court allowed the appeal, holding that the application was within time. Thereafter the judgment-debtors, who were dissatisfied with the judgment of this Court, presented an application for permission to appeal to His Majesty in Council. That application was granted and the order of this Court will be found printed at page 686 of the same volume of A. L. J., Santi Lal v. Raj Narain (2). When the case went back to the Court below to find out what was the amount really due to the decree-holders and thereupon to frame a decree, the judgment-debtors came forward with a fresh objection on 20th March, 1923. The objection taken was that the application for a personal decree was not properly signed. It appears that it was not signed by any of the plaintiffs and the legal practitioner, Babu Kanhaiya Lal, who signed it, held no vakalatnama on behalf of the plaintiffs. The Court below held that this objection could not be heard as it was barred on the principle of res judicata. The judgment-debtors have come to this Court again and the contention is that there can be no res judicata by implication in an execution proceeding.

On behalf of the decree-holders the order of the Court below has been sought to be supported both on the ground on which it proceeded in the Court below and also on the ground that the application, dated 29th March, 1921, was not required by law to be signed and at any rate the objection to this effect had been waived.

The first question to be decided is whether the plea of res judicata is sound.

(2) 79 Ind. Cas. 87, 21 A. L. J. 686, 9 O. & A. L. R. 832; 45 A. 741; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 149.

SANTI LAL v. RAJ NARAIN.

We think it is not. The application, which was pending in the Court below, was the same application, with respect to which the objection of 1921 had been taken. When it went back before the Court again, to dispose of the remaining objections of the judgment-debtors, fresh objections were taken. To argue by way of analogy, when suit is pending (the application is in the course of a suit), a defendant, with the permission of the Court, may be allowed to take a fresh defence to the suit. The matter, however, would be entirely in the discretion of a Court, viz., whether to allow an amendment to the written statement or not. The law on the point is laid down in O. VI, r. 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the matter is entirely within the discretion of the Court. The object of an amendment is to determine the real question in controversy between the parties. We, therefore, are of opinion that the plea of res judicata taken on behalf of the decree-holders, plaintiffs cannot be sustained.

Coming, however, to the question now raised in this appeal, we are of opinion that the application of the decree-holders should not be thrown out on the ground taken by the judgment-debtors.

The application was, as already stated, one, under O. XXXIII, XXXIV, r. 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is nothing in that rule which requires that an application to the Court should be in writing, much less is there anything to show that the application should be signed by any body. All that the rule lays down is that the Court is authorised to pass a decree, where the judgment-debtor is personally bound to pay the balance. Under the circumstances, the fact, that the application was not signed by the decree-holders, will not affect the case.

From the facts of the case, already stated, it will be seen that it is not the case that the decree-holders repudiated the action of Babu Kanhaiya Lal, who purported to sign the application on their behalf. On the other hand they entirely adopted the application made on their behalf. They resisted the objection preferred by the judgment-debtors in the Court of first instance and filed an appeal in this Court. When the case went back they were prepared to proceed on the very application which had been filed on 29th March, 1921.

Assuming, however, that a written application would be necessary on behalf of the decree-holders, such application may certainly be allowed to be signed at any stage of the proceedings. Under section 153 of the Code of Civil Procedure the Court is authorised to amend any defect or error in any proceeding in a suit. If the application is offered to be signed by the decree-holders or any body on their behalf, authorised to do so, we see no reason why the application should not be allowed to be signed by them, by way of amendment.

It appears that Babu Kanhaiya Lal, Vakil, who signed the application for the decree-holders, appeared at a certain stage of the execution proceedings for the judgment-debtors. His vakalatnama, on their behalf, is dated 21st June 1917. We have heard it. We find that he was engaged for a particular purpose, viz., to file an application objecting to the execution of the decree, under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That application was struck off for default of prosecution and he made another application for the restoration of it. The application was finally disposed of on 22nd December, 1917, and the purpose for which Babu Kanhaiya Lal had been engaged came to an end. There was, therefore, nothing to prevent Babu Kanhaiya Lal from being engaged on behalf of the decree-holders for making the application under O. XXXIV, r. 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

We are satisfied that, although the decision of the Court below on the question of res judicata was not right, the Court was fully justified in brushing aside the objection of the judgment-debtors.

We dismiss the appeal with costs, which will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale. We hope the matter will now be expedited.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the death of Kuppasami in the year 1885, there appear to have been some negotiations regarding a provision for suitable maintenance to his widow Alamelu. In 1890 Exhibit I was executed by which the surviving co-parceners gifted to Alamelu certain portions of family property in lieu of her right to maintenance. She was in enjoyment of the property from the date of the deed till her death. The defendant is now in occupation of it claiming under a Will executed by Alamelu. The lower Courts have found that the Will is genuine and that finding must be accepted.

The question to be decided is, did Alamelu have an absolute interest in the property? On behalf of the plaintiff it is argued that the deed of gift was unregistered and could consequently confer no title on Alamelu. This argument is perfectly correct. But Alamelu was in enjoyment of the property for over the statutory period, in fact, for about 28 years. Exhibit I is not operative as a deed of gift as it was not registered. But to ascertain the nature and character of Alamelu's possession, the deed may be looked at—[See Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (1) and Nadepena Appamma v. Saripelli Chinnavadu (2)]. In the deed, what do we find? The recital is, that these lands were given to Alamelu with absolute rights including the right to sell, make gifts and alienations. For ascertaining the nature of the right which she was setting up, the recitals in the deed may be referred to. The document was properly admitted in evidence for this purpose and the finding that she perfected her title by adverse possession is not open to question.

Then it is said that in maintenance deeds the words "with absolute rights, etc." ought to be construed in a manner different from the way in which they would be construed if those words occurred in other documents. I do not think there is any warrant for this proposition. In fact, in Jageswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (3) and also in Muthu Venkatanarayanan Chetty v. Authipanduranga Naidu (4) similar contentions were overruled.

In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Sale by managing members—Legal necessity for portion of amount—Sale, validity of.

Where a portion only, for instance, about three-fourth, of the consideration for a sale, effected by the managing members of a joint Hindu family is found to be for legal necessity, the Courts will set aside the sale as regards the share of the property of the member contesting the sale, on his payment of a proportionate share of the amount found to be for necessity.

Gobind Singh v. Baldeo Singh, 25 A. 330 A. W. N. (1903) 57, and Nathu Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal, 80 Ind. Cas. 228, relied on.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 26th May, 1920.

Mr. P. L. N. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought a suit to set aside a sale-deed of their share executed by their mother and certain other members of their joint family for a total consideration of Rs. 3,800 and for possession thereof on the ground that the sale had been made without legal necessity. The defendants pleaded legal necessity.

The Trial Court found that only Rs. 491 were chargeable against the plaintiffs for legal necessity and that the remaining amount chargeable against their share was not so taken. It, however, passed a curious decree upholding the sale in case the defendants-vendees paid Rs. 146 to the plaintiffs and in case of their failure to do so, decreed the plaintiffs' claim conditional on their paying Rs. 491 to the defendants-vendees which had been advanced for legal necessity and thus avoiding the sale-deed. The plaintiffs went up in appeal and the defendants filed a cross-objection. The lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiffs' share in the property sold amounts to 1 pie 6 krant and 2/3 dant. It has further found in agreement with the Court of first instance that out of the sale consideration the amount chargeable against the plaintiffs share to the extent of Rs. 491 was for legal necessity. It has accordingly decreed the plaintiffs' claim conditional upon their paying Rs. 491 aforesaid to the defendants-vendees. The defendants-vendees come here in second appeal. Their first contention is based on a misapprehension as I have already stated above. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has found the extent of the plaintiffs' share. That ground of appeal therefore fails.

The second ground of appeal has no force because the property sold apparently included the *khata*s pertaining to the share sold.

Another point argued before me was that on the finding of the Court below as to the extent of the plaintiffs' share, the amount found to have been for legal necessity would have exceeded the value of that share. There is nothing on the record to warrant this assumption and this ground of appeal must therefore fail.

It has been argued before me that as the major part of the sale consideration was for valid necessity this sale should not be set aside. It is not easy to draw a line of demarcation in such cases nor has the learned Vakil for the appellants been able to show me any authority for such a proposition. Out of the total consideration chargeable against the plaintiffs' share Rs. 491 only was for legal necessity, whereas Rs. 146 were found to have been without any such necessity. The view of the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court on this question of setting aside the sale finds support from the Division Bench ruling of this Court to be found in the case of Gobind Singh v. Baldeo Singh (1). See also, in this connection, the unreported case of *Nathu Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal decided on the 3th May, 1921, by Lindsay and Kanhaiya Lal, JJ. Therefore, the decree of the lower Appellate Court seems to be correct. I

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60 (1) (k)—Provident Funds Act (IX of 1897), ss. 2 (k), 4 (1)—State Railway Open Line Code, Vol. II, App. I, rr. 22, 30—"Compulsory deposit," what is—Deposit, whether ceases to be compulsory on death or retirement—"Discharged" in r. 30, meaning of—Deposit, whether liable to attachment after retirement

The State Railway Provident Institution is governed by the Rules contained in the State Railway Open Line Code, Volume II, Appendix I, and the General Fund Rules have no application to it. [p. 70, col. 1.]

The word "discharged" in rule 30 of the Rules contained in the State Railway Open Line Code, Volume II, Appendix I, does not necessarily mean "dismissed"; it is wide enough to include the case of a servant who has been permitted to retire or take his discharge. [ibid.]

A compulsory deposit is a deposit which goes into the fund as a compulsory deposit, within the meaning of section 4 (1) of the Provident Funds Act, and is at that date received and classified as such, and so long as such a deposit subsists in the fund it continues to be a compulsory deposit, irrespective of the fact that it is liable to withdrawal on the death or retirement of the depositor under rule 22 of the Rules contained in Appendix I, Volume II of the State Railway Open Line Code. [p. 71, col. 1.]

Such deposits as the above are protected from attachment under section 60 (1) (k) of the Civil Procedure Code read with section 4 (1) of the Provident Funds Act. [p. 72, col. 2.]

A compulsory deposit includes the sums deposited by the depositor himself and the contributions in respect of those deposits made by the Railway and the interest or increment accrued on them. [p. 70, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Richardson, J.—By our order, dated 26th January, 1922, Rule No. 515 of 1921 Raj Kumar Mukherjee v. W. J. Godfrey (1), was made absolute on the footing that the amount standing to the credit of W. J. Godfrey in the State Railway Provident Institution was attachable at the instance of the then petitioner, Raj Kumar Mukherjee, in execution of a decree for money which he had obtained against Godfrey in the Sealdah Court of Small Causes. Inasmuch, however, as the rule was unopposed, there being no appearance for Godfrey and the Administrator of the Fund, to whom no notice of the Rule had been given, not being represented, liberty was expressly reserved to the latter to come in and move to have the order discharged. In pursuance of the liberty so reserved, the present Rule was obtained on behalf of the Secretary of State for India. At the hearing, the learned Advocate-General appeared for the present petitioner, the Secretary of State, and the learned Vakil, Mr. Mohendra Nath Roy, for the creditor.

There is no dispute that the amount standing in the Fund to Godfrey's credit was not attachable so long as he was employed as a servant of a State Railway. The question is whether the amount became attachable on his retirement from such service.

It now appears that the Rules regulating the General Provident Fund to which we were referred on the former occasion, do not apply to the State Railway Provident Institution, which is governed by the Rules contained in the State Railway Open Line Code, Volume II, App. I, rule 10 of the General Fund Rules is therefore out of the way. The corresponding rule 30 of the relevant Rules is otherwise framed and in the view we take gives rise to no difficulty. It is in these terms:—

(1) — (1922) A. L. R. (C) 196.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA V. RAJ KUMAR.

"Neither compulsory deposits, nor bonuses, i. e., money added by Government to compulsory deposits, nor the interest thereon standing at the credit of a depositor, whether in actual service, discharged or deceased, can be attached by a Court of Law, but voluntary deposits and the interest thereon standing at the credit of a depositor on any given date are free to attachment on that date."

It is conceded that the amount at Godfrey's credit consists entirely of deposits which, when they were made, were 'compulsory deposits' within the meaning of this rule and of the Provident Funds Act. There is no question of any voluntary deposits.

As to the word 'discharged' it does not necessarily mean 'dismissed.' It is wide enough to include the case of a servant who has been permitted to retire or take his discharge.

The question is whether rule 30 is in accordance with the law on the subject.

The Civil Procedure Code section 60 (1) (k) exempts from liability to attachment "all compulsory deposits and other sums in or derived from any fund to which the Provident Funds Act, 1897, for the time being applies in so far as they are declared by the said Act not to be liable to attachment."

That leaves the matter to be controlled by the Provident Funds Act and rule 30 seems merely to express the draftsman's view of the result of sub-section (1) of section 4 of that Act Act IX of 1897 as amended by Act V of 1903). The question turns on that sub-section the meaning of which, apart from any difficulty as to the term 'compulsory deposits,' is clear enough. "Compulsory deposits," it says, "in any Government or Railway Provident Fund shall not be liable to any attachment under any decree or order of a Court of Justice in respect of any debt or liability incurred by a subscriber to, or depositor of, any such Fund and, neither the Official Assignee nor a Receiver appointed under Chapter XX of the Code of Civil Procedure shall be entitled to, or have any claim on any such compulsory deposit." The words are quite plain and general. No "compulsory deposits" are attachable.

But then it is argued that these deposits with which we are concerned, though they were compulsory deposits when they were made and so long as Godfrey continued in the Railway service, ceased to be compulsory deposits when he retired. The argument is based on the definition in section 2 (2) of the Act and on rule 22 of the Rules.

As defined in the Act "compulsory deposit" means a subscription or deposit which is not repayable on the demand, or at the option of the subscriber or depositor, and includes any contribution which may have been credited in respect of, and any interest or increment which may have accrued on, such subscription or deposit under the Rules of the Fund."

Rule 22, so far as it is material, is as follows:—

"Save with the particular sanction of the Government of India no compulsory deposit or bonus shall be withdrawn excepting;

(i) on the decease of the depositor;

(ii) on his leaving the public service."

The contention is that if the Act and rule 22 be read together; Godfrey's deposits became repayable on his demand when he left the public service and thereupon were automatically removed from the category of compulsory deposits.

In my opinion that is a mistaken construction of the statutory definition. The definition speaks with reference to some Fund in which the deposit is made, and as it seems to me it crystallizes the nature of the deposit at the time at which it is made. A compulsory deposit is a deposit which goes into the Fund as a compulsory deposit and is at that date received and classified as such. It is conceivable that the Rules of a Fund might subject the general right of withdrawal conferred by such a rule as rule 22 to restriction or condition so that the whole amount at a depositor's credit might never become freely payable or repayable on his demand. But quite apart from that, a depositor presumably continues to make compulsory deposits till he dies in service or retires and I can see no ground for a different classification of such deposits or a different description being applied to them after his death or retirement. In other words, as long as the deposits subsist in the Fund, so long, at any rate, both as matter of legal construction and in the common and ordinary way of speaking, they are properly and correctly described as compulsory deposits. If that be so, under section 4 of the Act, they are not liable to attachment.

Though there is no decision binding on us, the question is not free from authority and the view I have expressed is supported by the judgment of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in Veerchand v. B. B. & C. I. Railway Co. (2) the facts of which are on all fours with the facts of the present case. The case of Miller v. B. B. & C. I. Railway Co. (3), on which reliance has been placed for the creditor, was there cited but was not followed. I am content to adopt the brief statement of the learned Chief Justice. "The deposit," he said, "when it was made was not repayable on demand and therefore at that time was a 'compulsory deposit' and having once acquired that character with its attendant consequences, it continued (in my opinion) to retain it."

I have dealt with the case on the footing that no distinction exists between the deposits made by the depositor himself on the one hand and the contributions in respect of those deposits and the interest or increment accrued on them on the other. I have assumed that there is a sense in which these accretions to the original deposits can be said to be 'repayable' or 'not repayable' on the demand of the depositor. I do not forget, however, that Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., founds an argument on the frame of the statutory definition. If the word be interpreted as meaning one thing and including another and a different thing the meaning of the word as first defined would seem to be enlarged so as to include the second thing. It is as if the Legislature had said the word shall mean and include (1) the first thing, and (2) the second thing. In the view suggested for the creditor, therefore, on the depositor's death or retirement a distinction might have to be drawn between the deposits made by the depositor himself then repayable on his demand and the additions to those deposits to which the limitation of not being repayable on his demand was never applicable or essential and which must, therefore, be understood as coming otherwise within the meaning of the term "compulsory deposit." The learned Chief Justice concluded:—"I do not suppose it was ever intended that the Fund should as to part be and as to part not be, a 'compulsory deposit.'"

As to the cases in this Court, in Seth Manna Lal v. Gainsford (4), the main question decided was that the fund there in question, which had been established by the Corporation of Calcutta, was subject to the Provident Funds Act. It is not clear whether the subscriber whose deposits it was sought to attach was or was not at the time in the employ of the Corporation.

In Hindley v. Joy Narain Marwari (5) the Provident Fund was that of the East Indian Railway. The depositor had died and a decree for money had been obtained against his father as his legal representative. An attempt made in the course of executing the decree to attach the amount standing to the credit of the deceased in the Fund, was frustrated by Rankin, J.

"Whether," said the learned Judge, "the employee is in the service or out of the service, whether he be alive or dead, his share is unattachable in the hands of the institution." That decision is in point and the general observations which the learned Judge makes on the nature of these Funds may also be usefully referred to. For if there be any doubt as to the meaning of the Act, it is permissible to have regard to the state of things to which the Act was intended to apply, the conditions in which it would operate, and the class of persons which it was intended to benefit.

In the result this Rule must, in my opinion, be made absolute. Our order dated 26th January, 1922, in Civil Rule No. 515 of 1921 Raj Kumar Mookerjee v. W. J. Godfrey (1) should be discharged, and in the amount standing to the credit of W. J. Godfrey in the Railway Provident Institution has been attached or re-attached by the Sealdah Court of Small Causes, the attachment should be withdrawn.

Ghose, J.—I am of the same opinion. The Provident Funds Act seems to be an instance of fragmentary legislation as it does not provide for all the circumstances under which the sums standing to the credit of depositors are payable and complications have arisen in the decision of the case on account of the Rules framed from time to time for the administration of the Fund and the resolution of the 29th of July, 1919, to which our attention was drawn. Rule 10 with reference to which we had decided the case at the previous hearing has now been shown to have been excluded in its operation as regards subscribers to the State Railways Provident Fund. Rule 30 which is applicable to servants employed on State Railways has been relied on by the learned Advocate-General. Under this rule the money in deposit is not liable to attachment. It is contended on behalf of the creditor by Babu Mohendra Nath Roy that this rule is ultra vires of the Act. His main contention is that the money was not a compulsory deposit when it was sought to be attached and reference was made to rule 22 which provides, amongst other things, that no compulsory deposit or bonus shall be withdrawn except on the depositor leaving the public service. It is urged that when the money is payable on the employee leaving the service, it is payable on his demand and it therefore ceases to be a compulsory deposit within the definition in section 2 (4) of the Act and is consequently liable to attachment. The observations of Russel, J., in Miller v. B. B. & C. I. Railway Co. (3) are relied on in support of this argument and it is contended that the case of Veerchand v. B. B. & C. I. Railway Co. (2) which is a decision on the question in controversy, was wrongly decided and ought not to be followed. It may be observed in passing that there was an appeal from the decision of Russel, J. but the Court of Appeal apparently refrained from expressing any opinion on this question [see Veerchand v. B. B. & C. I. Railway Co. (2)].

It seems to me that the money in deposit is included within the definition of "compulsory deposit" in the Act. The deposit was not payable on the demand or option of the subscriber but was payable only under certain circumstances. In my opinion it cannot be said that the deposit was payable on demand by reason of the fact that it became payable under the rules on one of the events happening afterwards, and that the character of the deposit that it was not repayable on demand remains unaltered. Hence it is not excluded from the definition of compulsory deposit. The money, therefore, is not liable to attachment under the provisions of section 4 (1) of the Provident Funds Act. In this view I should follow the decision of Jenkins, O. J., in Veerchand v. B. B. & C. I. Railway Co. (2) and I need not refer further to the Rules or to the policy of the Act on which arguments were addressed to us.

I agree in the order proposed by my learned brother.

The “day fixed for the hearing of the suit” in O. XVIII, r. 2 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code does not mean or include the day on which issues are framed.

For the purpose of determining whether a certificate of payment of Pleader's fee has been filed in time according to rule 1 of Chapter 21 of the General Civil Rules, the first day of hearing is to be interpreted as the first day fixed for hearing after the framing of issues.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 2nd November, 1922.

Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. Hari Kishen Kaul, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bhagwati Shanker, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an order of the District Judge of Benares upholding the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge admitting a certificate for Pleader's fee which was said to have been filed after the first day of hearing. The facts are that the certificate was filed on the 24th of April, 1922, the issues were framed on that date, and the case was fixed for final disposal on the 12th of May. The Rule governing the question is rule 1 of Chapter 21 of the General Rules (Civil). As it stood at the time, this rule prescribed that no fee to any legal practitioner should be included in any decree or order unless the Judge was satisfied that the fee was paid at or before the commencement of the hearing of the suit. An explanation appended to the rule ran, “By the word ‘hearing’ is meant the hearing referred to in O. XVIII, r. 2 (1)..... but not the day to which such hearing is adjourned.” Order XVIII, r. 2 (1) provides that “on the day fixed for the hearing of the suit or on any other day to which the hearing is adjourned, the party having the right to begin shall state his case and produce his evidence in support of the issues which he is bound to prove.” It seems to me clear that in this Rule of the Civil Procedure Code “the day fixed for the hearing of the suit” does not mean or include the day on which issues are framed. It is true that elsewhere in the Code, as, for instance, in O. VIII, r. 1 the first day of hearing is used to mean the first day on which the parties appear in Court, but having regard to the express reference made in the explanation to rule 1 of Chapter 21 I take it that for the purpose of determining whether a certificate of payment of Pleader's fee has been filed in time, the first day of hearing is to be interpreted as the first day fixed for hearing after the framing of issues. This interpretation is supported by the recent amendment of the rule in question published in the U. P. Government Gazette on the 12th of April of this year. This amendment has altered the rule by allowing the payment of the fee to be made before the conclusion of the hearing of the suit, and has done away with the explanation. The certificate was filed within the time prescribed by the Rule, and the appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Mr. E. Castellino, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Tolasing Khushalsing, for Defendant No. 1.

Mr. Issardas Godharam, for Defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

ORDER.—This is an application in Suit No. 1344 under the following circumstances:—

In that suit for specific performances by the plaintiff-vendee against the defendants-vendors, a consent decree was passed on the 8th September, 1922, by which the plaintiff was, on payment to the defendants of Rs. 1,22,800 and interest, to obtain specific performance: "the decree being executable at the end of six months by either party." The plaintiff has not paid and the defendant No. 1 supported by the other defendants applies for rescission of the contract, as far as the plaintiff is concerned.

It is argued for the plaintiff, firstly, that the words "in the same case" in the concluding paragraph of section 35 of the Specific Relief Act apply to the preceding paragraph only when the purchaser is in possession of the subject-matter, and not as here, when the vendors are in possession; secondly, that the present decree being a decree by consent could only be varied by consent and that the order now sought for the defendant No. 1 would vary the decree; and thirdly, that the Court should grant the plaintiff a further extension of six months in the period of payment of the purchase amount under the decree.

The defendants rely on the broader construction of the words "in the same case" adopted in Kurpal Hemraj v. Shami Rao Raghunath (1). It is also urged for the defendants that the plaintiff when he himself urges that a decree by consent cannot be varied except by consent, cannot in the same breath ask for a variation of the decree by a further extension of the period of payment, in the decree.

As to the construction of the words "in the same case", the narrower construction argued for the plaintiff undoubtedly rests on the high authority of learned commentators: Collett on Specific Relief, V Edition, page 282, and S. C. Bannerji on Specific Relief (1909 Edition), page 588. Owing to the conflicting authorities on either side it is advisable to consider the section in detail.

Chapter IV of the Specific Relief Act which opens with section 35 deals with rescission of contracts, and the opening section purports to recite cases when rescission may be granted. Three cases are cited in the first paragraph. The second paragraph deals with further relief in addition to rescission, viz., payments of rents and profits, in cases when the purchaser of the lessee is in possession of the subject-matter; and finally comes the concluding paragraph now in question empowering the Court which passes the decree of which default has been made, to rescind the contract either as regards the party making the default or in its entirety.

Undoubtedly the opening words of the concluding paragraph "in the same case" are not very happily chosen. Both Collett and Bannerji agree that the intention of the Legislature was to legalise in India the English practice, under which the party not in default can obtain rescission not merely by a separate suit but also by application in the suit in which the decree for specific performance has been made. If the Legislature had intended the concluding paragraph to apply to cases restricted to the preceding paragraph alone, it would have been more natural either to use the words "in the last case" rather than the words "in the same case", or to omit these words altogether and not to add a separate paragraph at the end, but to make this a portion of the previous paragraph, adding the words "and the Court may."

(1) 72 Ind. Cas. 321; 25 Bom. L. R. 234; (1923) A. I. R. (B.) 211; 47 B. 589.

Again on equitable grounds, there seems no reason why the relief and the forum in the concluding paragraph should be restricted to cases where the purchaser is in possession of the subject-matter. On the contrary it would be easy to recite cases when such a relief and such a forum would be even more appropriate to the cases when the purchaser is not in possession.

I conclude therefore that even if the words "in the same case" are not very happily chosen, difficulty is not removed by restricting their construction to the previous paragraph alone, as is argued for the plaintiff, but that, if anything the difficulty is thus increased and that the reasons for extending these words to clause "c" of the first paragraph are stronger, and valid. I agree, therefore, for these reasons with the construction in the Bombay case cited above, relied upon for the defendants. In the present decree, the further words "this decree be executable at the end of six months by either side" are also perhaps not very happily chosen. The meaning, however, appears clear, viz. that the party not in default was at liberty to apply to the Court at the end of six months. These words, therefore, do not do violence in this particular case to the general conclusion arrived at before.

As to the second argument for the plaintiff it does not appear to me in the first place that there is any question of varying the decree. The real question is whether the defendants have or have not under section 35 the legal remedy they apply for, against the plaintiff who is admittedly in default? In any case the general rule that a decree by consent can only be varied by consent enunciated in cases such as Lachiram Dagduram Marwadi v. Jana Yesu Mang (2) has exceptions as pointed out in Shanker Sakharam v. Ratanji Premji (3).

Lastly as to the oral application of the plaintiff further to extend by six months the period of payment granted in the decree, no affidavit or other circumstances are before me to justify the extension. Nor is the plaintiff able to accept the offer of the opposite party to give security for payment before such extension could be granted. As far as I can judge in the present condition of the values of properties in Karachi such a further extension would introduce an element of instability in the contract, which, for aught I know, might not be equitable, to either party concerned. I am unable, therefore, to grant the extension.

It is urged for the plaintiff that the defendants have already received Rs. 20,000 from the plaintiff before the suit. If so, it may be as in many other bargains that the defendants had the better of the bargain, because I presume, the plaintiff entered the market at the time of boom and has to complete the bargain at the time of a slump and tightness of the money market.

I must, therefore, grant the defendant No. 1's application and rescind the contract as far as the plaintiff is concerned.

As the application was argued on the construction of section 35 of the Specific Relief Act, I make no order as to costs.

The proviso to section 90 of the Insolvency Act makes it quite clear that it was not intended to fetter the Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction under section 36 by any limitation imposed by the Code of Civil Procedure. [p. 77, col. 1.]

The Court has power under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act to summon before it persons who reside at a greater distance than 200 miles. [ibid]

Mr. S. N. Banerjee, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by two persons to set aside an order for their examination under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act made on the 18th August, 1922. By the said order, which was made at the instance of a creditor who had proved his debt and in the presence of the Official Assignee, the applicants were ordered to attend before the Registrar in Insolvency on the 14th September, 1922 to be examined regarding the insolvents, their dealings and properties and they were required to produce their books of account for the year 1920 and a mortgage executed by the insolvents in their favour on the 4th December, 1920. The applicants in fact attended before the Registrar in pursuance of the order on the 14th September, 1922, when the matter was adjourned until the 30th November. The applicants thereupon returned to Darjeeling where they reside, and came down again to Calcutta on the 20th November, one of them was attacked by fever on the 23rd November and they both returned to Darjeeling on the 26th of that month. The application is based on two grounds, (1) that the order should not have been made as the applicants reside more than 200 miles from Calcutta, (2) on the ground that they were not paid travelling and boarding charges. The second ground has not been pressed. So far as the first ground is concerned the applicants rely on section 90 (1) of the Insolvency Act and on O. XVI, r. 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Section 90 (1) provides that in proceedings under the Act the Court shall have the like powers and follow the like procedure as it has and follows in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction with the proviso that nothing in the sub-section is in any way to limit the jurisdiction conferred on the Court under the Act. Order XVI, r. 19 exempts a witness from personal attendance unless he resides within the local limits of the Court's Original Jurisdiction or within 200 miles with the limitation therein provided.

Section 36 (1) of the Insolvency Act provides that the Court may, on the application of the Official Assignee or of any creditor who has proved his debt, at any time after an order for adjudication has been made, summon before it the insolvent or any person known or suspected to have in his possession any property belonging to the insolvent or supposed to be indebted to the insolvent or any person whom the Court may deem capable of giving information respecting the insolvent, his dealings or property.

A perusal of the sub-section makes it clear that the person to be summoned does not, at any rate in all cases, fall within the category of an ordinary witness to whom the provisions of O. XVI relate. It deals rather with the discovery and recovery of property than with the ordinary testimony which a witness can give, and the proviso to section 90 (1) of the Insolvency Act makes it clear that it was not intended to fetter the Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction under section 36 by any limitation imposed by the Code of Civil Procedure.

I think the contention of the applicants is not well founded and that the Court has power under section 36 to summon before it persons who reside at a greater distance than 200 miles. I need hardly add that proper travelling and other expenses should be tendered and that so far as possible the convenience of persons required to attend should be considered.

As the application fails the applicants must pay the costs.

Prior mortgagee obtaining foreclosure decree—
Puisne mortgagee's remedy.*

If a prior mortgagee obtains a decree for foreclosure against the mortgagor without joining the puisne mortgagee as defendant, because the suit against him is barred by time, the puisne mortgagee's right to redeem the prior mortgagee is not dead; in fact his only remedy is to redeem. [p. 78, col 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 27th January 1921 in Civil Appeal No. 114 of 1920.

FACTS.—The suit from which this appeal arises was brought on a mortgage bond, dated 13th July, 1910, executed by Raoji, the deceased father of the first two defendants, for Rs. 1,000. The debt was payable by instalments of Rs. 50 each. Interest at Re. 0-12-0 per cent.

per mensem was agreed to be paid with each instalment and in default of such payment compound interest was to be paid. In default of three instalments the whole debt was to become due.

Defendants Nos. 3 and 4, the prior mortgagees of the mortgaged property, sued on their mortgage and obtained possession. They assigned half of their interest in the mortgaged property to Sitaram, defendant No. 5. The first two defendants denied knowledge of the document sued on, and pleaded that the property was joint ancestral property of the family and that the mortgage was not for the benefit of the family. Defendants Nos. 3 to 5 stated that the plaintiff was a party to their case. He was joined on his own application but as his joinder took place after the suit against him was time-barred, he was discharged by the Appellate Court. It was contended that the plaintiff could not ask the defendants to redeem him but that he should redeem them. The plaintiff stated that the mortgaged property was the self-acquired property of the mortgagor and not joint family property.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first of the two contentions of the learned Pleader for the appellant is based solely on the assumption that the appellant here was impleaded in the previous suit. But he was not. The record of that suit as it stands at present does not show his name in the list of defendants, as it was ordered by this Court to be erased from that list. The fact that he was believed for some time to be one of the defendants and was accordingly treated as one of them makes no difference whatever, as that belief was wrong and was corrected.

In the second place it was argued that though the present plaintiff-appellant was not a party to the previous suit, the right to compel him to redeem is dead along with the right to sue him for foreclosure, as was held in Raghunath v. Sheolal (1) a ruling which

(1) 39 Ind. Cas. 849; 13 N. L. R. 69.

KRISHNA IYER V. GYANADIKKAM PILLAI.

- was approved by a Full Bench of this Court on the 9th of July, 1921, in Jagēshwar v. Moti (2). It was there held that the prior mortgagee could not sue the puisne mortgagee to enforce his right to be redeemed, not that the right to be redeemed was dead. The essential distinction between that case and this is that there the prior mortgagee was the plaintiff while here he is a defendant.

The point is very clearly explained in paragraph 1395 of Jones on Mortgage where the learned author says:—"When a party in interest, other than the owner of the equity of redemption, is not made a party to the bill, the foreclosure is not generally for this reason wholly void. It is effectual as against those persons interested in the equity who are made parties. The sale vests the estate in the purchaser, subject to redemption by the person interested in it, who was not made a party to the proceedings. His only remedy, however, is to redeem. He cannot maintain ejectment against the purchaser. He cannot have the sale set aside by intervening by petition in the foreclosure suit. His only right is the right of redemption." The appeal is dismissed and the appellant must pay all the costs.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was brought on an arrangement, which was made between the plaintiff and the defendant; that the defendant was to take an assignment of a decree which the plaintiff obtained against one Ananthanarayana Ayyar on payment of Rs. 400 in the circumstances that have happened here. Two points were taken before me in second appeal. The first point is that as Ananthanarayana Ayyar has become an insolvent, the defendant is not bound to accept the assignment of the decree and is not bound to pay the money due under the contract. Reliance is placed on a case reported in Jatindra Nath Basu v. Peyer Deye Debi (1) a decision of the Privy Council. There the decree that was agreed to be assigned subsequently became barred by limitation, as the assignor did not take steps in time to keep the decree alive; their Lordships held that as the plaintiff had agreed to take the assignment of a subsisting de-

GAYANI DAS v. DWARKA MANDAR.

Cree, there was a duty on the part of the decree-holder to keep the decree alive and that as he failed to perform that duty and the decree became valueless, the assignee was not bound to take the assignment. That case has no bearing on the present case. Here, there is no difficulty of the decree having become barred as it was expressly kept alive. The judgment-debtor has become an insolvent, but that does not mean that the decree has become entirely infructuous. No doubt, it may be that the amount of the money realisable in execution of the decree had become reduced, but that is no ground for saying that the agreement to assign has become invalid.

The second point taken is that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue for the amount that the defendant agreed to pay but can only sue for damages against the defendant for not accepting the assignment. I do not think that there is any ground for this contention. The defendant agreed to pay for and take the assignment of the decree and the plaintiff was always ready and willing, as found by the lower Court, to make the assignment to the defendant. The plaintiff is entitled to the price arranged under the contract and need not sue for damages. It may be that the recovery of the price is in the nature of a specific performance of the contract, but that does not affect the question; for, in such a contract as this, the payment of the price is the proper remedy that should be allowed. There is no invariable rule that in cases relating to moveable property, damages only should be given. The point was not taken in the First Court nor was it made a ground in the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court. The point, therefore, should not have been allowed by the Subordinate Judge to be argued at all. However, I consider that there is no substance in the contention. Both the points taken failing, the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE NO. 105 OF 1921.

February 29, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Das and Mr. Justice Ross.GAYANI DAS—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT versusDWARKA MANDAR AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 3—Landlord and tenant—Land given for cultivation—Lessee settling tenants—Lessee, whether raiyat—Suit for recovery of possession against landlord—Limitation—Raiyat, test of.

Where a landlord, under a parwana, gives a person "permission to cultivate" certain land, the latter is a raiya, and limitation for a suit by him for recovery of possession, on dispossession by the landlord, is governed by Art. 3 of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act [p. 20, col. 1.]

The mere fact that such a person settles tenants upon the land does not change the nature of his holding. [ibid.]

In order to determine whether a tenant is a raiya or not, the test is not the use which the tenant has made of the land but the purpose for which the land is leased. [ibid.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 24th February 1921.

Mr. S. P. Varma (with him Mr. Jadubans Sahay), for the Appellant.

Mr. K. P. Jajyaswal (with him Messrs. Susil Madhab Mullick, Satya Saran Bose, Nirode Chandra Roy and Subodh Chandra Mozumdar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT:—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the appellant for possession of certain lands described in the schedule annexed to the plaint as:

"1100 bighas of nakdi jote situate in Mauza Dildarpur Mal, Tauzi No. 4395, and Mauza Dildarpur Tauri, T. N. 52, Thana Nathnagar, District Bhagalpur, included within the following boundaries."

Then follow the boundaries, not of the demised lands but of the mauza within which the demised lands are situate.

The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit on a variety of grounds. In my opinion the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is right and must be affirmed.

It is unnecessary to deal with all the grounds made in the memorandum of appeal. It is sufficient to say that the plaintiff's suit is clearly barred by limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that if the plaintiff was ever in possession of the disputed lands, he was clearly dispossessed on the 7th of March, 1917. The suit was instituted on the 3rd of January, 1920. The plaintiff's case is that he was dispossessed by the defendants first party acting in collusion with the defendants second party. It may be stated that the defendants first party are the proprietors of the mauza in question; the defendants second party are the lessees under the defendants first party; and the plaintiff's case is that on the expiry of the lease, in favour of the defendants second party, he obtained a hukumnama from the proprietors allowing him to cultivate 1100 bighas of land within the mauza. Clearly then the case in the plaint is one of dispossession by the landlords; and to such a suit Art. 3, Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies. Mr. Varma, on behalf of the appellant, argues before us that his client is not a raiyat and, therefore, Art. 3 has no application to the suit; but the hukumnama upon which he relies shows that he is a raiyat. The critical words in that document are as follows:

"I permit you under this parwana to cultivate the said lands—boundaries whereof are given below—for this year."

It is contended before us that there is evidence that the plaintiff settled tenants upon the land. That may be so; but the test is not the use which the tenant has made of the land but the purpose for which the land is leased. Clearly under the hukumnama the land was let to the plaintiff to enable him to cultivate it. That being so, Art. 3, Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act clearly applies.

It is unnecessary to go into the other points raised in the appeal, because, in our opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge was right in dismissing the suit on the ground of limitation.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. There will be two sets of costs payable to the defendants first party and the defendants second party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 47—
Decree, execution of—Dispossession in execution Party dispossessed, remedy of—Suit for recovery of possession, whether maintainable.

A person who has been dispossessed under the terms of a decree to which he was a party is not competent to bring a suit for recovery of possession. His remedy is by way of an application to the Execution Court. [p. 81, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Officiating District Judge, Agra, dated the 11th April, 1922.

Mr. S. K. Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In 1906 two simple mortgages were executed over the property in suit one in favour of the plaintiff and the other in favour of one Bhagirath. The defendant acquired the right of Bhagirath and brought the property to sale under his mortgage. The plaintiff was made a party to the suit. It should be mentioned that the plaintiff had also acquired the equity of redemption from the original mortgagor and was in possession of the property in that capacity. The decree in the defendant's suit was for sale of the property subject to the prior lien of the plaintiff though it is said that that lien was not entered in the final decree. On the property being brought to sale, the defendant purchased it himself. He thereupon obtained possession through the Court as against the plaintiff. He also obtained mutation of names in the revenue papers. It is admitted in the plaint and has been admitted throughout the proceedings that the plaintiff has lost possession. He brings the present suit, not for recovery of his mortgage money under his prior lien, but to be restored to possession of the property.

His suit has been dismissed by both the Courts below and it appears to us that it has been rightly dismissed both on the merits and as being barred by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff is not entitled to possession as mortgagee, because the mortgage in his favour was a simple mortgage. He is not entitled to possession as owner of the equity of redemption, because the equity of redemption has been sold and purchased by the defendant. His only right, if any, under the decree was to bring the property to sale for the enforcement of his prior lien. The suit is also barred under section 47. The plaintiff was a party to the decree. He has been dispossessed under the terms of the decree and his remedy for recovery of possession was by application to the Execution Court. It is not possible now to treat this suit as an application under section 47, because the defendant obtained possession in the year 1915 and the present suit was not brought till the year 1920.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

A suit to avoid a contract on the ground of misrepresentation and fraud, based on the allegation that a certain term was inserted in the contract without the plaintiff's knowledge, is a suit arising out of the contract and is liable to be stayed under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, where the parties have agreed to refer all disputes arising out of the contract to arbitration. [p. 84, col. 2]

Per Madgavkar, A. J. C.—The question of staying a suit under section 19 of the Arbitration Act is one of discretion by the Trial Court to be judicially exercised, rather than an absolute right of the defendant. [p. 87, col. 1]

A defendant claiming a stay of a suit must show, that the suit is in respect of a matter agreed to be referred. [p. 87, col. 2]

An application by a defendant for stay of a suit must be distinguished from an application for a stay of the arbitration proceedings in which a different set of considerations would arise. [p. 87, col. 2]

A suit to avoid a contract on the ground of misrepresentation and fraud is not a suit relating to a dispute arising out of the contract and is not, therefore, liable to be stayed under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, on the ground that the parties had agreed to refer all disputes arising out of the contract to arbitration. JUDGMENT.

Kincaid, J. C.—The facts of the case underlying the two appeals before us are quite simple but they involve a question of great importance.

On the 19th February 1920, the plaintiff Sodawaterwala signed an indent on the defendants Volkart Brothers for 1040 Axle Arms. The defendants were to get them from Henry Rogers Sons & Co., in two lots of 520 in each lot. The first lot was to be of May-June 1920 shipment and the second lot to be of July 1920 shipment. The defendants communicated with Rogers & Sons and received the reply that they could not guarantee the shipment. They, therefore, on the 8th March 1920 sent to the plaintiff the following paper, for signature:—

“DEAR SIRS,

“We beg to acknowledge receipt of your notice dated the 8th March 1920 advising the execution of our indent 1040 Axle Arms from Henry Rogers Sons & Co. Limited, shipment in 2 lots of 520 Axle Arms each 1st May-June, and 2nd lot in July 1920, both unguaranteed. Price and all other conditions as per indent No. 1580, dated 19th February 1920, which is in order.”

This document was in duplicate and the plaintiff retained the original and signing the counterpart returned it to the defendants.

The 1st lot of the Axle Arms arrived in October 1920. The plaintiff did not take delivery, but, on the 29th October 1920, he asked the defendants Volkart Brothers to store them. Volkart agreed, provided the plaintiff signed the following document which he did.

Appendix and Indent No. 1480 for 520 Axle Arms and 3 bags keys per S. S. “City of Marseilles” (All other terms as per original indent including arbitration clause).

“We shall feel obliged if you will have the goods removed to your godown for our account at our sole risk. We agree to pay all expenses for cartage, etc., piling and storage in addition to insurance and godown rent. We also agree that Messrs. B. B. may insure these goods for its value and we shall pay for and remove them within 10 days. We agree to pay to you

Rs. 1,000 as deposit and balance to be paid within 10 days.”

The plaintiff admittedly paid the Rs. 1,000. But he did not pay the balance. The defendants stored the Axle Arms in their godown. In the meantime, the exchange fell and so did price and the plaintiff began to repent of his bargain. He took delivery of neither the 1st lot nor the 2nd lot.

On the 6th November 1920 Sodawaterwala wrote to say, that in the indent the words “unguaranteed shipment” did not occur. He, therefore, declined absolutely to take delivery of the 2nd lot. He agreed to take delivery of the 1st lot provided, Volkart Brothers paid him “the difference of price and exchange ruling in the months of May and June.” Volkart Brothers protested. The 2nd lot of Axle Arms came in December 1920 and as the plaintiff would not take delivery, Volkart Brothers sold the goods by public auction at a loss of some Rs. 13,000.

Now in the indent was a clause 10 which ran as follows;—“Disputes of whatever nature arising out of this contract to be referred to the surveyors’ arbitration of two European merchants in Karachi, one to be chosen by each party, whose decision we agree to accept as binding and final, but should the two surveyors, or arbitrators (as the case may be) be unable to agree, they shall refer the case to an umpire, whose decision shall be final and binding upon both parties.”

On the 8th February 1921, Volkart Brothers nominated Mr. L. Brachi as their arbitrator and called upon Sodawaterwala to nominate his. On 15th February 1921 he nominated Mr. Gartley. In July 1921, Sodawaterwala filed a suit in the Court of Kennedy, A. J. C. for the return of Rs. 1,000. Messrs. Volkart Brothers filed an application under section 19 of the Arbitration Act to stay the suit. On the 7th February 1922, Kennedy, A. J. C. granted the stay application. On 21st November 1921 Sodawaterwala filed in the Court of Raymond, A. J. C. a second suit against Volkart Brothers for a declaration that the contract between the parties was void on the ground of fraud. Volkart Brothers applied under section 19 of the Arbitration Act for a stay of the suit. On the 24th July 1922 Raymond, A. J. C. rejected the application. Against Mr. Kennedy's decision Sodawaterwala has lodged Appeal No. 13 of 1922. Against Mr. Raymond's decision Messrs. Volkart Brothers have lodged Appeal No. 29 of 1922. Both appeals have been heard together.

I wish at the outset of my judgment to express my appreciation of the great ability shown by the learned Pleaders on both sides. Their industry has greatly lightened our labour.

Mr. Dipchand has argued that Mr. Kennedy was wrong in holding that the indent was a contract. A contract requires unqualified acceptance. The terms in the indent were never accepted by Volkart Brothers. They modified it on receipt of a letter from Rogers & Sons. Thus, there was no contract between the parties until Volkart Brothers on the 8th March sent Sodawaterwala their acceptance memo. This Sodawaterwala signed and the contract was completed. But as the defendants were guilty of fraud and the parties were not ad idem, the contract was void. If the contract was void, the submission clause was void. As this objection strikes at the root of the contract, and is outside the jurisdiction of the arbitrators, it must be decided by the Court.

Before I examine the law on the point, I wish to scrutinize the plea itself. What has Sodawaterwala said in his plaint before Raymond, A. J. C.? He has declared (1) that the words "to be unguaranteed" were subsequently inserted by the defendants in the alternative:—

(2) That it was the defendants' duty to inform the plaintiffs of the new words and their silence amounted to a misrepresentation.

I shall deal with plea (1) later; it was on plea (2) that Mr. Dipchand has chiefly relied. But in my opinion even if the facts stated by Sodawaterwala were true, it would not render the contract void.

Section 17 of the Contract Act contains the following explanation:—

"Mere silence as to facts likely to affect the willingness of a person to enter into a contract is not fraud, unless the circumstances of the case are such that, regard being had to them it is the duty of the person keeping silence to speak, or unless his silence is in itself equivalent to speech".

Illustration.

(a) A sells by auction to B a horse which A knows to be unsound; A says nothing to B about the horse's unsoundness. This is not fraud in A.

(b) B is A's daughter and has just come of age. Here the relation of the parties would make it A's duty to tell B if the horse is unsound.

Thus the only circumstances in which Volkart Brothers' silence would amount to fraud would be (1) if it was their duty to speak and (2) if their silence was equivalent to speech. It has not been contended that their silence was equivalent to speech. It has been contended that it was their duty to speak. But they stood in no fiduciary relation to Sodawaterwala. It has been said that Volkart Brothers "took advantage of his (the plaintiff's) illiteracy. But Sodawaterwala is not illiterate. He has signed all the documents in the transaction before us. Then it has been urged that he knows no English. But he has conducted the whole lengthy correspondence in English. There was thus no duty on Volkart Brothers to draw his special attention to the words "both unguaranteed". They were in the document written in a language which he or his staff well understood. If it was not Volkart Brothers' duty specially to draw Sodawaterwala's attention to the change in the wording, there was no fraud.

But as a matter of fact the words "strike at the root of the contract" are vague and of little meaning. What the Court has to decide is whether the disputes between the parties "arise out of the contract", see clause 10 of the Indent. Mr. Dipchand has relied strongly on the case of Monro v. Bognor Urban Council (1). Therein the plaintiff a contractor had agreed to construct for the Bognor District Urban Council certain sewage works. There was a clause binding the parties to refer their disputes to the Council's Engineer. The plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that the contract was void, owing to fraudulent misrepresentations in the specification of the soil in which the work had to be done. The specification described the soil as other than what the plaintiff alleged the soil actually was. The Urban Council applied for a stay. But the Court of Appeal rejected the application on the ground that the action was not an action on the contract at all. Pickford, L. J. observed:—

"Nor do I think that it is an action in relation to or in connection with the contract. In the one sense it is an action in relation to and in connection with the contract because if there had never been any contract there would never have been any cause of action, there would never have been any representation and there never would have been any action for damages. But it is not in relation to or in connection with the contract, in my opinion, within the meaning of the arbitration clause". The question, therefore, for the Court to decide is whether the claim comes within the submission to arbitration. In the case just referred to their Lordships held that the misrepresentation was something quite distinct from and previous to the contract. We have to see whether that is the case here.

I shall now again revert to the two pleas of the plaintiff. But before I do so, I wish to emphasize my opinion that pleas such as his should be examined with the utmost rigour. They are not pleas that an honest man would make, save in the most exceptional circumstances. They are pleas, too, which if allowed, would be capable of the most dangerous extension. If all that is needed for the rejection of a stay application is for the opposite party to allege that he was misled or browbeaten or hypnotized when signing the contract, it is clear that the provisions of the Arbitration Act will become valueless. In the Court such a possibility can only be contemplated with dismay. A suitor cannot hope to have his case heard for several years. To deprive him, therefore, of the right to submit his disputes to the speedy decision of an arbitration tribunal is to do him the most serious wrong and to do the commerce of Karachi a very grave injury.

I shall now return to the plea of the plaintiff. The first is that the defendants deliberately forged an interpolation in the acceptance memo after Sodawaterwala had signed it. Now that forgery could not have occurred before the completion of the contract but after. It is, therefore, clearly a dispute which arises out of the contract itself. Mr. Dipchand, however, did not rely so much on this plea as on the second. That plea was that Mr. Sodawaterwala misread the acceptance memo and believed it to be something different from what it was. I have already expressed the opinion that even if the plea were true it would not vitiate the contract. Apart from that, however, it is a dispute that, in my judgment, arises out of the contract. Sodawaterwala signed the document in March. In October he made no objection to it but asked the defendants to store the first lot of Axle Arms. It was not till after this that he found out that the contract which he had signed was somewhat different from what he believed it to be. Surely, that is a dispute arising out of the contract. It is in fact a question as to what the contract was into which the parties entered. I am fortified in this view by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Produce Brokers Co. v. Olympia Oil & Cake Co. (2). In that suit there was a clause in the contract which referred to arbitration all suits arising under the contract. The arbitrators in the course of their award interpreted the contract in the light of an existing custom. It was argued that the arbitrators had gone beyond their jurisdiction, because the scope of the submission was to ascertain the contract as it really was. This objection was overruled. Lord Loreburn observed. "When an arbitrator has power, as here, to decide all disputes arising out of a contract, including questions of law, surely he must decide what the contract is and he cannot decide that without introducing the custom." And Lord Atkinson added:—"Prima facie one would suppose that authority to decide disputes arising out of a contract necessarily conferred authority to decide what were the terms of that contract. It would appear to me to be impossible for any Judge or arbitrator to determine, whether any particular dispute arose out of a contract unless and until he knows what that contract is."

This view was adopted by Greaves, J. In the matters of an Arbitration between Baijnath v. Kalooram and Alihkey Mohammed. (3) There a plea was advanced as here, that there had been an interpolation in the contract. But Greaves, J. held "that it was competent for the arbitrators under the terms of the submission to decide whether or not the particular term was in the contract as originally made. It must be noted that Mr. Dipchand has strenuously contended that the contract was void because the parties were not ad idem". But I find some difficulty in following this reasoning. Under section 20 of the Contract Act, it is only where both parties are under a mistake of fact that an agreement is void. Now Volkart Brothers were under no mistake of fact. The only person who has alleged a mistake of fact is Sodawaterwala. But section 22 lays down "A contract is not voidable merely because it was caused by one of the parties to it, being under a mistake as to a matter of fact." Thus the only dispute which the defendant can raise is that the contract he signed was not the real contract between the parties. In order to settle that dispute the terms of the contract have to be ascertained; and according to Lord

Atkinson's dictum, that is an enquiry within the jurisdiction of the arbitrators. I am supported by another passage from the judgment of Greaves, J.

"Now as I read the decision in Produce Brokers Co. v. Olympia Oil & Cake Co. (2) it is a decision that under a submission to refer all disputes arising out of a contract the arbitrators have authority to decide what are the terms of the contract.

I, therefore, hold that the disputes raised by Sodawaterwala all "arise out of the contract." It follows from this finding that Volkart Brothers have under the submission clause in the contract the right to ask the Court to stay the suits brought by Sodawaterwala under section 19 of the Arbitration Act. Kennedy, A. J. C., granted such a stay and in my judgment his order should be upheld. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs. Mr. Raymond, A. J. C., refused to stay and in my judgment his order should be set aside, and the stay granted and Messrs. Volkart Brothers' appeal allowed with costs.

Madgavkar, A. J. C.—The question in both these appeals is whether the defendants sellers are entitled to a stay under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act (IX of 1899) of the two suits against them by the plaintiffs-buyers. The suits were on the file of two different Judges of this Court who arrived at different conclusions. Accordingly the buyers are appellants in one appeal Miscellaneous No. 13 of 1922 and the sellers are appellants in the other appeal No. 29 of 1922.

The Euyer signed an indent on the 19th February agreeing to purchase a certain number of Axle Arms at a certain rate half May, June and half July shipments. The sellers after communicating with the office in Europe presented an acceptance memorandum on the 3th of March under which the Indent was accepted. That acceptance note was in counter-foil, the foil being signed by the buyers, the other by the sellers, each foil being retained by the party other than the signatory. The buyers have not produced the foil with them alleging that they have lost it, SODAWATERWALA & VOLKART BROTHERS.

The counter-foil produced by the sellers contains the words in ink "Both unguaranteed", referring to the shipments.

The only dispute between the parties relates to those two words in the acceptance memo. The buyers contend that they contracted for half May, June and half July shipments and never consented to shipments unguaranteed and their grounds are:—

Firstly they do not know English, secondly, these two words and the consequent modification of the terms in the indent were not known to them and were not brought to their notice when they signed the acceptance memo, thirdly these conditions may be an interpolation on the part of the sellers added to the acceptance, after the buyers had signed and without their knowledge or consent.

The sellers' contention is that these two words were contained in both files and the buyers signed with full knowledge and understanding.

The first consignment arrived in October. The buyers raised no objection though it was not May, June, July shipment but signed an appendix promising to take delivery within 10 days and deposited Rs. 1,000 with the sellers and asked them to take delivery of the goods and bring them to the godown although under the indent the delivery was "Karachi Harbour." Subsequently the buyers refused to take delivery of either consignment on the grounds mentioned above. The Indent which was also incorporated in the acceptance memo contained the usual arbitration clause. Each party nominated its arbitrator. No reference, however, was actually made and no further steps in arbitration were taken. On the 12th of July 1921 the buyers filed the first Suit No. 1000 of 1921 for return with interest of Rs. 1,000 which they had paid to the sellers on the arrival of the first lot. In October 1921 the sellers tried to proceed with the arbitration and the buyers filed on the 21st of November 1921 a second Suit (No. 1572 of 1921) in which they claimed a declaration that the contract was, owing to the misrepresentation or fraud as to the addition of the words "both unguaranteed" void or in the alternative for a declaration that there was no complete and binding contract between the parties as they were not ad idem and therefore there was no clause compelling them to submit to arbitration and for perpetual injunction to restrain the sellers from proceedings to arbitration. The sellers applied for a stay under section 19 of the Arbitration Act in both the suits. Kennedy, A. J. C., in the former suit granted a stay, Raymond, A. J. C. in the latter refused it. Hence these two appeals.

The contracts, the parties and the disputes are all identical. And whatever the difference in the relief claimed in the two suits, the questions in these are identical, with one material exception, viz., the appendix and the buyers' conduct in regard to the first lot on arrival. Both the appeals can be conveniently disposed of in the same judgment.

Kennedy, A. J. C., thought that there was no substance in the contention of the buyer that there was no contract between the parties. He held that whatever the dispute as regards the two words in the acceptance memo, the contract was contained in the indent, according to the case of the plaintiffs-buyers themselves. And the real dispute was whether or not the prima facie breach of the contract in the indent in respect of the late shipments on the part of the sellers was or was not excused by the fact, disputed by the buyers, that the buyers had consented, subsequently to the indent, to the term "both shipments unguaranteed." He held that the dispute was thus one arising out of the contract and within the submission clause referable to the arbitrators and not triable by the Court. He therefore granted a stay.

On the other hand, Raymond, A. J. C., held that the indent itself did not establish a contract as it was subject to confirmation, and that the addition of the two disputed words in the acceptance memo constituted a counter proposal to which the consent of the buyers was necessary before a complete contract between the parties including the submission clause could be held established. The dispute raised by the buyers in respect of these two words went to the root of the contract and raised a contention that they had never accepted the counter proposal as the sellers alleged. The dispute was, therefore, not one arising out of the contract which could be referred to arbitration but one triable solely by the Courts. He thought that he was bound by the law as laid down in cases such as Monro v. Bognar Urban Council (1). He, therefore, refused to stay the suit before him.

In view of this difference of opinion between the two learned Judges and also the different conclusion reached in these appeals by the learned Judicial Commissioner, I have given my anxious consideration to the question at issue in these appeals. I have arrived at the conclusion that the view of the law adopted by Raymond, A. J. C., and its application by him to the facts of this case, in so far as they are before us at the present stage, is correct.

The application of the sellers for the stay of the suits could only be made under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act. I do not desire to lay stress on the concluding words "may make an order" although they make it clear that the question of stay is one of a discretion by the Trying Court to be judicially exercised rather than an absolute right of the defendants. The question in these suits appears to me to be whether the two legal proceedings instituted by the buyers are "in support of any matter agreed to be referred" within the meaning of section 19 or whether they are outside of such matter.

The only contract which the defendants sellers set up is not the indent but the indent as modified by the acceptance memo. Whatever doubts might have existed as to the correctness of either view, if the acceptance memo had been a mere confirmation of the indent on the facts of the present case, it appears to me indisputable that as to the completed agreement or contract the view of Raymond, A. J. C., is correct rather than that of Kennedy, A. J. C. The plaintiff does not in either suits set up a contract in terms of the indent. In both the suits he claims to avoid the contract set up by the sellers and on the sellers' own showing the contract is contained not in the indent but in the acceptance memo incorporating the indent and on the strength of the signature of the buyers on the acceptance memo. It does not appear to me relevant in this connection for either side to extract a stray word on a particular portion of the pleadings of the other in support of their contention as to what the contract was. The buyers say there was no contract, on the ground of misrepresentation or fraud and the parties not being ad idem. The sellers say the contract was the acceptance memo incorporated in the first indent. It is not the case of either side that the contract is the indent pure and simple.

As to what the precise dispute is, there is no doubt. Into the merits of the dispute or which side is right or wrong we are obviously precluded from forming or expressing any opinion, to the prejudice of the tribunals whether the Court or of the arbitrators, which may have to decide the question. An application by the defendant for the stay of the suit must in law be clearly distinguished from an application for a stay of the arbitration proceedings, in which a different set of considerations would arise involving equitable grounds and permitting perhaps a prima facie view of these matters. Cf. Kitts v. Moore (4), Gajaniard Maskara v. Taleb Jalaludin (5), Joyal & Co. v. Gopiram Bhotica (6), G. M. Birlal & Co. v. Johurmull Prem-sukh (7). Nor is there any question here of custom of the trade into which the arbitrators could go; Produce Brokers Company's Limited v. Olympia Oil & Cake Co. Limited (2). No stay of arbitration proceedings is here asked for. Therefore, for the purposes of the present appeals which relate to stay of the suits, we must assume as in the case of a preliminary issue whether suit discloses a cause of action assuming that the allegations in the plaint might be true and proveable.

It is argued by Mr. Rupchand for the sellers that the indent was a contract contingent on the consent of the home firm. A reference to section 31 of the Indian Contract Act suffices to rebut this argument. And whatever the possible difficulties if the indent had been accepted without any modification whatever, it appears to me indisputable that the defendants-sellers having themselves made a counter-proposal in respect of an essential term such as shipment, are precluded from saying that the original offer of the buyers in the indent was complete and formed a contract. Under section 7 of the Indian Contract Act before a proposal can be converted into a promise, the acceptance must be absolute and unqualified. The fact that the plaintiff alleges a misrepresentation on the sellers' part that the acceptance was absolute and unqualified cannot help the defendants sellers to prove that the agreement to refer was, therefore, contained in the indent apart from the acceptance memo. It is the defendants who claim a stay, it is for them to show the suits are "in respect of any matter agreed to be referred" and it is for them to prove this agreement to refer. The only agreement to refer which is open to them to set up and which they set up, is the acceptance memo which they have produced incorporating the indent.

But this acceptance memo itself the plaintiff in his suit alleges was the subject certainly of misrepresentation if not of fraud. The authorities such as Munro v. Bagnor Urban Council (1) seem to be clear that such an allegation of misrepresentation or fraud is not a dispute arising out of the contract but is a dispute regarding the validity of the contract. From the opinion of Pickford, L. J., it follows that such suits are not suits upon contracts and cannot be tried by arbitrators under the reference clause in the contract. To take an extreme case, if the buyer in the present case had denied his signature or had alleged that it was a forgery, such a dispute would,

I think, clearly have been outside the purview of the arbitrators and would have to be tried by the Civil or Criminal Court: see Russell on Arbitration, pp. 91-92, 10th Edition. The case above is clear that if the cause of action is definite misrepresentation to avoid the contract set up by the opposite party, such a dispute is not a dispute arising out of the contract within the submission clause in the contract and the Court has no power to stay. There is one Indian authority referred to: Alibhoy Mahomed v. Baijnath Kalooram (3) in support of the proposition that question of interpolation or fraud such as that now sought to be raised was within the province of the arbitrators. That decision, however, is the decision of a single Judge and was based apparently on the case of Produce Brokers Co. v. Olympia & Cake Co. Ltd. (2) referred to above which, however, is hardly authority for the proposition enunciated. It only decided that the arbitrators are competent to go into the question of the custom of trade in the light of the contract which had been entered into. Greaves, J., in that judgment appears to differ from the view of two other Judges of that Court and Walsh, J., in a recent decision of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court Sushil Chandra Das v. Sakhamat Bansidhar (8) where the decision of Greaves, J. in the case above has been dissented from. With all respect I agree with the decision of the Allahabad Bench, which appears to me to be rightly based on the case of Monro v. Bagnor Urban Council (1) referred to by Raymond, A. J. C.

It is argued for the sellers that ill consequences result from this state of the law and enable parties without any substantial claim or relief to delay and hamper arbitration proceedings, as to this it is to be observed that the province of the Courts is confined to ascertaining the law and to applying it to the facts of each particular case, it is not for the Courts to judge of the consequences, good or bad or indifferent of the application of the law or the hardship resulting in any case or any class of cases. These are matters proper for the Legislature but not to be avoided, as I conceive by the Courts. Nor does the arbitration Act or the other law enable us to take account of possible delays in applying and enforcing the law. In the present case, for instance, there was admittedly a certain amount of delay on the part of the sellers in proceeding to arbitration between February 1921 when the arbitrators were named to October 1921 when the sellers decided to continue the arbitration proceedings. But this delay, in my opinion, should not prejudice the stay of application of the sellers on the one hand any more than the possible delay in the trial of the suits should prejudice the plaintiffs buyers.

Shortly, therefore, I am of opinion that the two suits by the buyers are not in respect of any matter agreed to be referred under the contract set up by the sellers but are to avoid this contract for alleged misrepresentation on the ground that the sellers represented it as a contract for half May-June, half July shipments. If so then neither suit can be stayed under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act.

For the reasons stated above I am of opinion that the Miscellaneous Appeal No. 13 of 1922 should be allowed with costs and the Suit No. 1000 should not be stayed and Miscellaneous Appeal No. 29 of 1922 should be dismissed with costs.

Kincaid, J. C.—As Mr. Madgavkar, A. J. C. and I differ in opinion, as to the decision in Appeals Nos. 13 and 29 of 1922 I in substitution of my reference to a Full Bench, do now with the consent of the Pleader on each side, refer the case to a third Judge who shall be the Barrister A. J. C. for the time being.

Kemp, A. J. C.—This is a reference owing to a difference in opinion between the learned Judges sitting in Appeals Nos. 13 and 29 of 1922 against orders passed by my brothers Raymond and Kennedy, A. J. Cs. respectively in certain applications under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act. (IX of 1899).

In Suit No. 1572 of 1921 Raymond, A. J. C., refused a stay of the suit; in Suit

No. 1000 of 1921 Kennedy, A. J. C., granted it.

The points in both suits are the same and it is clear that there is a conflict of opinion amongst the Judges of this Court as to whether the stay should be granted. In the appeals Kincaid, J. C., considered that the order of Kennedy, A. J. C., should be upheld and that of Raymond, A. J. C., set aside. Madgavkar, A. J. C., who sat with him was of the contrary opinion.

Accordingly, on 27th February 1923 the Judicial Commissioner referred the case to the Barrister A. J. C.

Since the order of reference, however, a Full Bench of this Court which included the learned Judicial Commissioner and Madgavkar, A. J. C., decided on 6th March 1923 in Miscellaneous Application 6 of 1920 (Mengharaj Khialdas v. Firm of Langley Billimoria (9)) that no appeal lies under section 104 of the Civil procedure Code from an order passed under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act, staying a suit. This decision is binding on me and it appears, therefore, that no appeal lies. The appeals have been referred to me for disposal and I must decide accordingly.

The Indian Arbitration Act (IX of 1899) itself makes no provision for an appeal and I cannot treat what was referred to me as an appeal as a revision application.

Both appeals must accordingly be dismissed but as this consequence ensues from a Full Bench ruling passed since the Judicial Commissioner's order of reference to me I pass no order as to costs.

Appeals dismissed.

THE MUNICIPAL BOARD OF

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1914), s. 128 (1)

ISWAR CHANDRA NATH v. GOUR SUNDAR NATH.

(ix)—“Trade”, meaning of—Tax on circumstances and property—Salaried clerk, whether liable to be taxed.

“Trade” implies buying and selling or dealing in money or at least the making of some article for the purpose of sale. Further, a person can only be said to be carrying on trade in the ordinary sense of the word when he is working for his own profit and not when he is in receipt of a fixed salary.

Therefore a person who resides outside the Municipal limits but is employed during business hours as a clerk on a salary within Municipal limits is not liable to be taxed under a tax on circumstances and property imposed on persons “residing or carrying on any trade or owning property within the limits of the Municipality” under clause (ix) of section 128 (1) of the U. P. Municipalities Act.

Reference under section 162 of the Municipal Act by the District Magistrate, Farrukhabad.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Applicant.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under section 162 of the U. P. Municipalities Act. The question referred is whether the applicant who resides outside the Kanauj Municipality but is employed during business hours as a clerk on a salary within Municipal limits is liable to be taxed under a tax on circumstances and property imposed under clause (ix) of section 128 (1) of the Act. Section 123 permits the Municipality to impose the tax on all classes of inhabitants as defined in section 2 (7). They have however chosen to limit the tax to persons “residing or carrying on any trade or owning property within the limits of the Kanauj Municipality,” vide Notification No. 6575 XXIII-9, dated 7th August 1920, printed on page 324 of Part III of the U. P. Gazette for 1920. The expression “carrying on a trade” has a well-recognised meaning and cannot by any straining of language be made to include a person who merely works for an employer as a salaried clerk. “Trade” implies buying and selling or dealing in money or at least the making of some article for the purpose of sale. Further, a person can only be said to be carrying on trade in the ordinary sense of the word when he is working for his own profit and not when he is in receipt of a fixed salary. Mr. Bajpai for the Municipal Board has drawn our attention to the very wide definition of the word “trade” in Webster’s Dictionary, but it may be pointed out that the Act itself in clause (iii) of section 128 distinguishes between trades, callings, and vocations, and includes under vocations all employments remunerated by salary. It is clear therefore that in the very section under which the tax is imposed occupation as a salaried clerk is not included under the word “trade.” Our answer to the reference is that the applicant is not liable to assessment under the tax on circumstances and property imposed by the Kanauj Municipal Board.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Ghose, dated the 9th May 1922.

Mr. J. K. Sen Gupta, for the Appellants

Messrs. D. L. Khastgir and N. C. Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice B. B. Ghose in a suit for ejectment.

On the 1st June 1892, the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs granted a lease to the predecessor of the defendants. A premium of Rs. 30 was paid by the grantee to the grantor. The lease was for a term of 20 years and expressly provided that the grantee would have the status of a raiyyat. The term of the lease expired on the 31st May 1912, yet the grantee continued in occupation till his death in 1914. Thereafter the heirs of the grantee have remained in possession.

On the 16th April 1916, the plaintiffs commenced the present action to eject the defendants on the allegation that the tenancy was not heritable and that they were consequently liable to be ejected, as trespassers. The contention that the tenancy was not heritable was founded on the allegation that although the lease stated that the grantee was a raiyyat, he was in fact an under-raiyyat in as much as the grantor had no higher status than that of a raiyyat. The question consequently arises, whether it is open to the plaintiffs to eject the defendants on proof that the allegations in the primary contract between the parties were false. Mr. Justice Ghose has held that the doctrine of estoppel applies and that the plaintiffs are not competent to prove that the status of the original grantee was other than what was described in the grant. We are of opinion that this view is clearly well-founded, and is supported by the decision in Bamandas Bhattacharyya v. Nilmadhab Saha (1) which has not been affected in any way by the decision of the Full Bench in Chandra Kant v. Amjad Ali (2). To test the contention of the appellants we may put the question, would it have been competent to the plaintiffs, after the lapse of seven years from the date of the grant, to eject the grantee on the allegation that his status was not that of a raiyyat as stated in the lease but only that of an under-raiyyat, and that the registration of the document was invalid because effected in contravention of the provisions of section 85, sub-section 2, of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The answer must obviously be in the negative. There is no room for doubt that the grantee acted on the faith of the recitals in the grant, which in fact were very material for the purposes of the tenancy. We are consequently of opinion that the decree made by Mr. Justice Ghose must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge, Muzaffargarh, dated the 22nd March 1920, modifying that of Sub-Judge, Muzaffargarh, dated the 17th December 1919.

Mr. Hargopal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case sued to recover an ascertained sum of cash as fixed in a balance signed by the defendant's father and also for the cash value of 180 maunds of wheat being the net result of the account or 120 chauths principal and 180 chauths interest in kind calculated at the rate of 150 per cent. per annum. The suit regarding the wheat has been dismissed and on second appeal Counsel urges that the limitation is governed by Art. 64 and not by Art. 65 or 115. Even if it were conceded that in order to bring a suit within the purview of Art. 64 it is not necessary to show that there have been cross or reciprocal demands between the parties the article can only apply where the money found to be due is a definite sum entered in the account-books. Here no sum of money is entered. The account was kept throughout in terms of grain, a different rate of interest was charged on this grain account from that charged on the cash account and, as laid down in Muhammad Din v. Sohan Singh (1) and also in Labh Singh v. The Firm Rur Chand-Tulsi Ram (2) the articles governing the case so far as the grain is concerned are Arts. 65 or 115. Finally, relying on Sohan Singh v. Muhammad Din (3) Counsel urges that a demand was made within three years of the institution of the suit. He cannot say when this demand was made, his own plaint states clearly that the cause of action arose on the 19th day of October 1913, or when the entry was made in the account-book, and it is wholly impossible that he should be allowed, as he asks to have a remand in order to enable him to ascertain whether or not a demand was made within three years of the institution of the suit which would save limitation. We find that the portion of the suit which relates to re-payments of the grain is barred by limitation and we, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

The wajib-ul-arz of the village provided that every co-sharer was at liberty to transfer his share to any one. Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 29th January 1923.

Messrs. Niamat Ullah and Muhammad Ayub, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki dated the 29th January 1923. It arises out of a suit brought by the respondent Bansidhar. The suit has been decreed. The appeal is preferred by Musammam Maqbul-un-nissa, Musammam Mumtaz-un-nissa, Tafsil-un-nissa, Abdul Wahid and Abdul Jalil defendants. Bansidhar claimed to exercise his right of pre-emption in respect of a sale dated the 19th August 1920 under which Musammam Sultan-un-nissa and Musammam Rafiq-un-nissa defendants Nos. 4 and 5 respectively sold 2 annas share in village Bisara, Pargana Kursi, District Bara Banki, to Abdullah, Abdul Wahid and Abdul Jalil defendants Nos. 1 to 3 respectively. Abdullah died after the institution of the suit. Abdussattar, Abdul Jalil, Abdul Hafiz, Maqbul-un-nissa, Mumtaz-un-nissa and Tafazzul-un-nissa are his legal representatives.

Bansidhar's right of pre-emption was obviously founded on the provisions of sections 6 and 7 of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876). The only defence, with which we are concerned in this appeal, was the existence of a custom to the contrary. The provisions of section 7 mentioned above are as follows:—

"Unless the existence of any custom or contract to the contrary is proved, such right shall, whether recorded in the Settlement Record or not, be presumed (a) to exist in all village communities, however constituted, and whether proprietary or under-proprietary, and in the cases referred to in section 40 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act, and (b) to extend to the village site, to the houses built upon it, to all lands and shares of lands within the village boundary, and to all transferable rights affecting such lands."

It would seem to follow from these provisions that the alleged custom, if established, would constitute a valid defence to this claim for pre-emption. In proof of the custom the vendee relied on the wajib-ul-arz of the village prepared at the First Regular Settlement. A certified copy of this wajib-ul-arz is produced (Exhibit A 3). It is dated the 20th January 1870. The wajib-ul-arz was duly verified and attested by the Settlement Officer. Paragraph 4 of the wajib-ul-arz relates to the rights of transfer and inheritance. Under this paragraph occurs the following statement which is relevant to the question under consideration:—"In this village each co-sharer has power to transfer his share by sale, mortgage, etc. He is at liberty to transfer it to any one he pleases." Similar statements in other wajib-ul-araz of villages in the Province of Oudh prepared at the First Regular Settlement have consistently been construed by this Court as proof of custom excluding the legal right of pre-emption. The decisions of this Court to the effect mentioned above cover a long period of time, the earliest of which seems to have been passed so far back as the year 1885 in the case of Bholai Singh v. Tale Singh (Miscellaneous Appeal No. 132 of 1885) and the latest was given by a Bench of two Judges in the year 1919 in the case of Bunyad Husain v. Abdul Subhan (1). It thus appears that the phrase "liberty to transfer it to any one he pleases" has acquired the characteristic of a term of art always connoting the existence of custom contrary to the right of pre-emption. We are not prepared to disturb this course of decision. It would follow that if there were nothing else to support the plaintiff's claim for pre-emption he must lose it. He has, however, produced a copy of the wajib-ul-arz of the village prepared at the partition of it which took place in the year 1886 (Exhibit 9). The first part of paragraph 4 of this exhibit is as follows:—"Every co-sharer has the power to transfer his share by means of mortgage, sale and gift but the pre-emptor shall have the pre-emption right in the case of sale." His contention on this basis of this entry is that the custom in derogation of the right of pre-emption, which right was affirmed by the Statute mentioned before, was abrogated by the agreement of the co-sharers of the village at the time of the partition of 1886. This contention was accepted by the Court below and is now impugned before us on two grounds. (1) That there is no proof of any such agreement, and (2) that the agreement (if any) is not binding on the successors of the co-sharers who were parties to it.

In support of the first ground, reliance was placed upon certain papers (Exhibits A9 and A12 to A18) which are copies of the order-sheet relating to the partition proceedings, and upon the testimony of three witnesses, Abdusattar, Tajammul Husain and Abdullah. In agreement with the Court below we are unable to attach any importance to the evidence of these witnesses. Abdusattar and Abdullah are obviously highly interested witnesses. Tajammul Husain's statement does not bear directly on the circumstances in which the wajib-ul-arz was prepared. The evidence furnished by the order sheet does not in any manner lead to the inference that paragraph 4 of Exhibit 9 was prepared without the consent of the co-sharers concerned. The preparation of wajib-ul-arz on partition of a village is enjoined by the rules framed by the Board of Revenue relating to partition proceedings. These proceedings are certainly of quasi judicial, if not wholly judicial, character. The subject-matter of paragraph 4 of a wajib-ul-arz is such as it would not ordinarily be possible to make a record of it without the knowledge and consent of the co-sharers of the village. The public officials engaged in the preparation of a wajib-ul-arz would be guilty of dereliction in the performance of their duty if they failed to obtain such consent. In the absence of any reliable evidence that they did fail in the discharge of their duty we must hold that the maxim omnia presumuntur rite esse acta applies.

As to the second ground, we are of opinion that it has no substance. The agreement related to a right in esse founded on the custom excluding pre-emption then in vogue. It also related to the lands in the village. It was not a custom binding on the co-sharers then in existence alone. It was a custom in relation to the right of transfer of lands possessed by the co-sharers. The agreement to supersede that custom was therefore an agreement in relation to the right of transfer of the proprietary interest in the soil of the village. Such an agreement must, therefore, run with the land. The proposition that the custom of excluding the right of pre-emption could be validly superseded by the agreement of the proprietors of the village and that such an agreement would bind their successors-in-title was affirmed by a Bench of this Court in the case of Bunyad Husain v. Abdul Subhan (1) already referred to. We are content to follow that decision.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

and the suit was not for rent so as not to be cognisable by a Court of Small Causes.

In a suit by a landlord, against a person cultivating the land, to recover a sum agreed to be paid to him for its use, the question whether the defendant is a tenant or a servant of the plaintiff depends upon the terms of the agreement and all the circumstances of the case.

Rule against the decision of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Burdwan, exercising Small Cause Court powers, dated the 24th September 1923.

JUDGMENT.—The question which arises in this Rule is whether the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to try the suit. The plaintiff instituted the suit for recovery of a sum of Rs. 49 alleged to have been due as price of bhag paddy and straw. The plaint alleged that the land had been settled with the defendant in the month of Jaistha and the defendant had stipulated to deliver to the plaintiff by the month of Falgun a half share of the paddy and straw that would be grown on the land, and in case of default would be liable to deliver 25 per cent. more as bridhi or interest in accordance with local usage; that the defendant, in accordance with the aforesaid promise or stipulation, after having taken settlement of the land cultivated the land and grew paddy and straw of which the quantities were also stated and the price of half thereof was claimed together with interest as aforesaid. One of the objections taken in the written statement was that the suit was one for rent and so was not within the cognizance of the Small Cause Court. The opposite party in an affidavit filed in this Court has stated that this objection was not pressed at the hearing of this suit. This, however, is a question affecting the jurisdiction of the Court and there can be no waiver in a matter of this description.

The answer to this question would depend upon the determination of the question as to whether the petitioner under the terms of the contract with the opposite party was a tenant or a servant, and in determining that question, the terms of the agreement and the whole of the circumstances must be taken into consideration.

On behalf of the petitioner reliance has been placed upon the decisions of this Court in Shoma Mehta v. Rajani Biswas (1) and Lalji Pande v. Brahmadeo Pandey (2); and upon the allegation in the plaint that the land had been settled with the defendant and on the plaintiff's evidence to the effect that it was so settled and on the finding of the Judge that the defendant held the land. On behalf of the opposite party the cases of Kade Mandal v. Ahadali Molla (3) and Shaikh Pokan v. Rajani Kamal Chakravarty (4) were relied upon.

It is unnecessary to refer to earlier cases which deal with this point, as most of them have been elaborately discussed in the judgment of this Court in the case of Lalji Pande v. Brahmadeo Pandey (2). As observed by Mookerjee, J., in that judgment there is no real conflict in the decisions bearing upon this question and the real question to be determined first is whether the defendant is a tenant or not. With regard to this matter each case will depend on its own facts.

In the case of Shoma Mehta v. Rajani Biswas (1) the judgment proceeded upon the assumption that the suit was one for recovery of produce rent. In the case of Kade Mandal v. Ahadali Molla (3) the contract alleged in the plaint made the bargadar a servant. In the case of Lalji Pande v. Brahmadeo Pandey (2) the distinguishing features were that the claim was in respect of crops for four years and the claim was explicitly described as the malik's share; and these features enabled the Court to pronounce on the status of the defendant as that of a tenant. In the case of Shaikh Pokan v. Rajani Kamal Chakravarty (4), the kabuliyat was described as one for agricultural labour for cultivating in partnership the khas khamar land, the executant stipulated that every year before growing crops he would ask the grantor which kind of paddy was to be grown on which land, and shall grow paddy according to the grantor's desire; and further agreed to take the whole of the paddy to the grantor's house for threshing and that he shall get the remaining paddy (after delivery of the grantor's share) as remuneration for cultivation, seeds, looking after the labour, instead of money in cash. This unmistakeably showed that the executant of the kabuliyat was a servant.

In the present case the distinguishing features of the cases noted above are entirely absent. The plaint on the face of it is for recovery of price of a share of paddy and straw. The expressions "settlement" and "holding the land" may be consistent with either view of the defendant's status. If it was a tenancy, the period for which it was to last is not stated. The words "promise" and "stipulation" are used, which point more to a mere contract than to a contract of tenancy. On the face of this plaint, therefore, there was nothing to suggest that the defendant was a tenant.

If, therefore, the petitioner's case was that he was one and on that ground the Court had no jurisdiction, it was for him to bring before the Court materials which would have proved the same. This he has not done. The Rule, therefore, must be discharged with costs, hearing fee one gold mohur.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Broadway, J.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by Musammat Putli, a minor, acting through her husband, Sat Narain. She claimed from the defendants a sum of Rs. 5,127. During the pendency of the suit she attained majority and, at her instance, her next friend was discharged and she was allowed to proceed with the suit in her own name.

THAKUR DAS v. PUTLI.

The following pedigree-table will show the relationship between the defendants:—

One Ram Rachhpal was also made defendant. He is connected with Kidar Nath through Kidar Nath's adoptive father. The suit as against Ram Rachhpal was dismissed as being barred by time. As against the other defendants, the plaintiff's claim was decreed. The Trial Court, apparently through an oversight, did not allow interest from date of suit to date of realisation and refused to allow the plaintiff's costs. Against this decree the defendants have preferred this appeal. Ram Rachhpal was made one of the appellants although the suit as against him had been dismissed. The plaintiff filed cross-objections through Mr. Tek Chand, claiming interest from date of institution of the suit till date of decree and costs.

The facts are given and discussed at great length in the judgment of the Trial Court, and it is only necessary to state them briefly here. It appears that in 1907 Kidar Nath was concerned in certain litigation with one Nathu Mal. It became necessary for Kidar Nath to prefer an appeal to the Privy Council, and he was called upon to deposit Rs. 4,000 or security to that extent in connection with that appeal. His natural father Thakar Das was in the employ of Rai Bahadur Lala Sri Kishen Das as his Head Clerk. He asked Rai Bahadur Lala Sri Kishen Das for assistance. Ultimately he, Kidar Nath, Shambhu Nath, Baij Nath and Ram Rachhpal are said to have gone together to Rai Bahadur Lala Sri Kishen Das and asked him to arrange for this Rs. 4,000. Out of consideration for his employee Rai Bahadur Lala Sri Kishen

Das agreed, and it appears that a fixed deposit to the extent of Rs. 4,000 with the Allahabad Bank was tendered to the Chief Court. The fixed deposit was refused and ultimately Government Promissory Notes of the face value of Rs. 4,000 were acquired and deposited with the Registrar of the Chief Court. Kidar Nath lost his appeal in the Privy Council. In the meantime on the 26th of September 1913 Rai Bahadur Lala Sri Kishen Das was adjudicated an insolvent by the High Court of Bombay, and the Official Assignee took possession of his estate including all outstandings. The Official Assignee transferred the outstandings, including the present claim, to one Chhabil Das, the necessary assignments being drawn up. Chhabil Das in his turn transferred the present claim to Musammal Putli, then a minor, under a deed, dated the 2nd of November 1917. On the basis of this assignment Musammal Putli sought to recover the amount.

The suit was filed on the 1st of December 1917. It has been shown that the debt sought to be recovered was incurred on the 18th February 1907. The defendants set up various pleas, one of these being that the assignment to Chhabil Das by the Official Assignee was invalid, and another being that the suit was barred by limitation. The plea of limitation rested on the assertion by the defendants that the transaction sued upon was not a loan made by Rai Bahadur Lala Sri Kishen Das, but was really one by which Rai Bahadur Lala Sri Kishen Das became a surety to the extent of Rs. 4,000 for Kidar Nath. It was contended, therefore, that the claim really was by a surety against his principal and was governed by Art. 81 which provides a limitation of three years. It was admitted by Mr. Tek Chand that if this plea of the defendants was correct the suit was barred. He contended, however, that the transaction was really a loan, and that, therefore, the suit was governed by the six years rule and was within time owing to the payment of interest by Kidar Nath and Thakar Das, the payment by Thakar Das being binding on Shambhu Nath and Baij Nath, and further, that Thakar Das had admitted his liability in two letters Exhibits P-1 and P-2, dated respectively 22nd and 27th February 1913.

Although Mr. Sheo Narain for the appellants devoted most of his time to an endeavour to show that the transaction was really as alleged by the defendants, at the conclusion of his address he advanced a contention which, if given effect to, would conclude the case in his favour. This contention was that inasmuch as Musammât Putli was a minor on the 2nd of November 1917 when the assignment of the debt was executed by Chhabil Das in her favour, the contract evidenced by that assignment was void and could not be made the basis of a suit. In support of his contention he referred to Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (1). On the other hand, Mr. Tek Chand pointed out that this was an entirely new point, not raised in the written statement, and urged that Mr. Sheo Narain should not be allowed to take it at this late stage. He contended that had this plea been advanced at the outset it could have been proved that the negotiations had been carried out on her behalf by her husband. He drew attention to Sat Narain's statement at page 55, line 30, to the effect that he had acted for Musammât Putli in the matter. He further contended that Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (1) was distinguishable as it dealt with a transfer by a minor, that the suit which was decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee was one between the parties to the contract, and that in that suit it was sought to enforce an obligation entered into by a minor. The question whether a minor could purchase property and could enforce an obligation entered into in his favour was not before the Privy Council. In Raghava Chariar v. Srinivasa Raghava Chariar (2) it was held by a Full Bench that a mortgage in favour of a minor was enforceable by the minor, and the view was also expressed that in the same way a sale in favour of a minor could be enforced. This view is in consonance with Munni Kunwar v. Madan Gopal (3), Narain Das v. Dhanva (4), Ulfat Rai v. Gouri Shankar (5) and Bahal-ud-Din v. Rafiqat Husain (6). In my opinion Mr. Tek Chand's contention is correct. The assignment was by Chhabil Das in favour of Musammât Putli. The consideration for the assignment had been paid in full to the assignor. The minor was, therefore, under no further obligation to anyone, and I am unable to see any reason why a minor in such circumstances is precluded from suing on such a contract. I am supported in this view by Steinbery v. Scala (Leeds) Limited (7).

Next, as to the nature of this transaction the plaintiff has produced the naql bahr, lekha bahr and rokar of the firm of Rai Bahadur Lala Sri Kishen Das. The relevant entries have been proved by witnesses against whose reliability nothing has really been urged.

* * * * *

After a consideration of all the evidence on the record and the arguments advanced at the Bar I have no hesitation in agreeing with the Court below and hold that the transaction was a loan.

It was admitted by Mr. Sheo Narain that in the event of the transaction being found to be a loan, the suit as against Thakur Das and Kidar Nath was within limitation. He, however, contended that any payment of interest or any acknowledgment made by Thakur Das could only be binding on him in order to save limitation, and on his sons, as members of a joint Hindu family, only if the payments of interest made by him had been paid as such, within the meaning of section 20. A reference to the account-books shows that at the outset the payments made amounted to the interest due. The last payment was a little short of the actual interest, the shortage being Re. 1 odd. Having regard to the previous nature of the payments I am of opinion that all these payments of interest, whether made by Thakar Das or through him, were intended to be payments of interest as such within the meaning of the section, and that, therefore, these payments bring the suit within limitation as against all the appellants.

Further I think Mr. Tek Chand's contention is correct that Thakar Das could as head of the joint Hindu family, acknowledge the debt on behalf of the joint Hindu family and did so acknowledge the debt in his letters dated the 22nd February 1913 and the 27th February 1913 Exhibits P-1 and P-2. It is true that, while he could bind himself in an acknowledgement of a time-barred debt, he could not bind his co-parceners. When these letters were written, however, having regard to the payments of interest already made by him, the claim was within time, and these letters therefore must be regarded as acknowledgments binding not only on Thakar Das but on the other members of the joint Hindu family of which he was the head. In this view of the case the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Turning to the cross-objections, no real reason has been assigned by the Court below for disallowing costs. The defendants certainly are not entitled to any sympathy. The interest claimed is from the date of institution till the date of decree. Such interest is usually allowed, and the omission to do so in this case appears to be due to an oversight. I would, therefore, accept the cross-objections and modify the decree of the Court below by adding to it interest from date of institution to date of decree and allow the plaintiff her costs in the Court below.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Pabna and Bogra, dated the 31st May, 1921, affirming that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Pabna, dated the 14th March, 1919.

JUDGMENT.

Richardson, J.—This is an appeal from the appellate judgment of the Additional District Judge of Pabna, dated the 31st May, 1921. The questions which the learned Additional Judge had to consider are thus stated by him:

"(1) Was Mouza Chur Raninagar included within the putni held by the plaintiffs and other pro forma defendants under the malik defendants? Was mehal No. 2159 created out of the lands of that putni?

(2) Are the plaintiffs entitled to a refund of the amount claimed?

Some short explanation is necessary to the nature of the dispute in connection with which these questions arose.

The plaintiffs and those defendants in the suit who are described as pro forma defendants are the proprietors of putni tenure within the estate of the principal defendants Nos. 1 to 7. The tenure is bounded on one side by the river Ganges and in the year 1912-1913 a survey was made by the Government with the result that certain lands were formed into a separate estate No. 2159 known as Mouza Chur Raninagar, on the footing that the lands were an accretion to the parent estate, Raninagar, the estate that is of the principal defendants. On that footing a settlement was made under which the putnidars were to pay rent for these lands at the rate of Rs. 189 a year in addition to the rent payable for the original putni. It is stated in the judgments of the Courts below that in the Settlement the Government were recorded as tahsildars of the proprietors of the estate. "No suggestion appears to have been made that the putnidars were party to or bound by the proceedings." In the result, however, they were compelled to pay this additional rent for four years and they then brought the present suit to retrieve the amount so paid. Their case is that the original putni, the putni as originally created, for which rent was payable under their engagement with the proprietors, included the lands of the new estate No. 2159 and they contend accordingly that in respect of this area rent has been recovered from them twice over. They succeeded in the Courts below and three of the principal defendants (Nos. 1 to 3) have preferred this appeal.

Now it is conceded by Dr. Mitter, the learned Vakil who has argued the case on behalf of the appellants, that the questions above set out were essentially questions of fact. The main burden of Dr. Mitter's argument has been that in deciding those questions of fact, the Courts below have committed an error of law in respect of the use which they have made of a certain judgment of the year 1874. The principal defendants, the proprietors, were not parties to the litigation or bound by the result. The judgment, it seems, decided a suit or suits between the putnidars as plaintiffs and the Secretary of State as defendant, in which the putnidars successfully asserted their title to Chur Raninagar as part of this putni. The learned Additional Judge says: "It appears, that the plaintiffs in those cases obtained decree for lands of Raninagar and Mouza Chur Raninagar as appertaining to their putni taluk; and the entire lands were made into one new Mouza named Decree Chur Raninagar." Then the learned Judge continues: "It is contended for the appellants that they were not parties to those suits, and, therefore, the judgment and decree in those cases are not admissible against them. The argument is against established case-law, and I have no doubt that they are admissible in evidence. The decree and judgment prove that the predecessors of the plaintiffs claimed in 1874 lands of Mouza Chur Raninagar as appertaining to the putni taluk; their claim was upheld, and they remained in possession as before."

Dr. Mitter has not, I think, disputed that the proceedings of 1874 and their result were relevant under section 13 of the Evidence Act. Nor could he have successfully taken this position. In the judgment of a Full Bench of this Court in Tepu Khan v. Rajani Mohan Das (1) the following passage occurs:—"It is clear from the decisions in the Privy Council that under certain circumstances, and in certain cases, the judgment in a previous suit, to which one of the parties in the subsequent suit was not a party, may be admissible in evidence for certain purposes and with certain objects in the subsequent suit." In a later case which came before the Privy Council [Dinomoni Chaudhurani v. Brojo Mohini Chaudhurani (2)] Lord Lindley delivering their Lordships' judgment observed that the words of section 13 of the Evidence Act were very wide. I have no doubt that the litigation of 1874 was within the meaning of section 13, a transaction or instance in which the right of the plaintiffs to hold the disputed lands as part of their putni was successfully asserted and this transaction or instance was relevant or admissible in evidence in the present suit. So far, I think, Dr. Mitter would not disagree. His objection, as I understand it, is that the learned Additional Judge in some way gave judicial force to the judgment as against the petitioners who are not bound by it. Of course if the learned Judge had expressed himself to the effect that the judgment was in law conclusive against the proprietors, he would have been guilty of serious error. As I read his words, however, I do not think that the learned Judge has attributed to the judgment any judicial force as against the proprietors. He treats the judgment or the transaction which it discloses, as an item of fact in the history of the disputed lands. This clearly appears from what he says later in his own judgment which must be read as a whole. Two or three paragraphs further down after referring to other matters, he says "all these go to prove," meaning each of the different events or items in the history of the land to which he had referred together went to show, the title of the putnidars.

In the circumstances, it seems to me merely hypercritical to find fault with the learned Additional Judge's statement that the judgment proves "that the predecessor of the plaintiff claimed in 1874 lands of Mauza Chur Raninagar as appertaining to the putni taluk, their claim was upheld, and they remained in possession as before." The relevancy of the previous suit and its result necessarily gave access to the judgment in that suit, and, in my opinion, the learned Judge was right in saying that the judgment proved the nature of the claim made and the legal effect or result that the claim was upheld. He was at liberty to use the judgment for that purpose and to that extent. The legal effect of the judgment as between the parties to the previous suit had to be determined from the judgment itself and, when determined, it became not conclusive as between the parties to the present suit but a fact to be weighed in the balance like any other fact. Its probative force or weight in the circumstances was matter for a Court of fact to decide.

The point that this judgment of 1874 does not prove the previous or subsequent state of the possession is really a very small one. In the first place the learned Judge may have expressed himself badly. The subsequent state of the possession must clearly have depended on other evidence and there may have been other evidence also as to the previous state of the possession. But in any case, the judgment of 1874 declares the right of the putnidars to possession and as to subsequent possession there appears to be no dispute at all.

As to the case of Kashi Nath Pal v. Raja Jagat Kishore Acharjee, Choudhury (3), to which Dr. Mitter referred, in my opinion, the learned Additional Judge has not committed the error which was there condemned. Apart from the negligible point as to the previous state of the possession, the learned Judge had not treated recitals in the judgment of 1874 as substantive proof in the present case of the truth of the facts recited. His treatment of the judgment of 1874 is within the principle that where a judgment is admissible it is "conclusive evidence for or against all persons, whether parties, privies or strangers, of its own existence, date and legal effect as distinguished from the accuracy of the decision rendered."

The result is that, in my opinion, the learned Vakil's main contention is not substantiated.

The learned Vakil raised another point in connection with a document described as a document of the year 1287 which is Exhibit A on the record. This point, however, was not seriously pressed and no more need be said about it.

The last contention of the learned Vakil is that the Secretary of State should have been a party to this suit. As to this point, it appears, that a complaint made in the Trial Court that the Secretary of State was not a party was overruled.

by the learned Munsif. The complaint, however, does not appear to have been repeated in the lower Appellate Court, and there is no decision of the learned Additional Judge upon it. It would seem that if this objection was ever seriously put forward it was afterwards abandoned. Moreover, the position of the Government in respect of the disputed lands is not very clear. I have referred to the statement in the judgments of the Courts below that the Government is recorded in the Settlement proceedings as the tahsildar of the proprietors. Before we could say that the Secretary of State should or should not be a party, some further enquiry would be necessary as to the facts. That being so, I think this point fails in second appeal.

For the reasons I have stated I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

It is conceded that this judgment will govern Appeal No. 2546 of 1921, which should accordingly be also dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. III, r. 4—“Appearance,” meaning of—Pleader reporting no instructions except to apply for adjournment—Endorsement on back of plaint—Adjournment refused—Withdrawal of vakalat—Leave of Court.

Where a Pleader for the plaintiff in a case asks for an adjournment and states that, if the adjournment is refused, he has no further instructions to go on with the case, and makes an endorsement to that effect on the back of the plaint, there is no “appearance” and the endorsement by the Vakil is a perfectly good written withdrawal from his duties and obligations under the vakalat. [p. 103, col. 2.]

Where a Court assents to such conduct of the Vakil and raises no question about his withdrawal, it must be taken to have given its consent. [p. 103, col. 2.]

Order III, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, does not require the writing containing the withdrawal by a Pleader of his vakalat to be in any specified form, nor is any formality necessary for the leave of Court. [p. 103, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tuticorin, dated the 2nd of August 1922, and made in Interlocutory Application No. 558 of 1922, in Original Suit No. 16 of 1921.

This petition coming on for hearing in pursuance of the Order of Reference to a Full Bench made by the Hon'ble the Chief Justice at the suggestion of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Wallace, contained in his Lordship's note dated the 1st April, 1924, and made herein, upon perusing the petition, the order of the lower Court and the record in the case and the said note and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. P. V. Krishnaswami Ayyar, for the Petitioner, and of Mr. A. Swaminathia Ayyar, for the First Respondent, and of Mr. K. R. Rangaswami Ayyangar, for Respondents Nos. 2, 4 and 5 and the other Respondents not appearing in person or by Pleader, the Court expressed the following

Coutts Trotter, C. J.—In this case the plaintiff's Vakil appeared in Court on the day fixed for the hearing of the suit, asked for an adjournment and stated that, if that adjournment was not granted, he had no further instructions to go on with the case. He had previously filed a vakalat in the ordinary form. He did something more than the mere asking for an adjournment. He took the plaint which he had drawn and signed and endorsed on it as follows: “I have no instructions except to apply for an adjournment

MANICKAM PILLAI v. MAHUDUM BATHUMMAL.

(Signed) A. V. Krishnaswami Ayyar,
Vakil for the plaintiff, (with the date)."

The relevant provision of the Code is said to be O. III, r. 4. Sub-rule (1) of that rule is "The appointment of a Pleader to make or do any appearance, application or act for any person shall be in writing, and shall be signed by such person or by his recognized agent or by some other person duly authorized by power-of-attorney to act on this behalf." Sub-rule (2) is, "Every such appointment, when accepted by a Pleader, shall be filed in Court, and shall be considered to be in force until determined with the leave of the Court, by a writing signed by the client or the Pleader, as the case may be, and filed in Court...."

It is sought to be said here that, although this Vakil wrote what I have read on the back of the plaint after having filed a vakalatnama, the vakalatnama must be considered to continue in force until something further was done, and it is also argued that the effect of the vakalatnama being considered to be in force is to make the Pleader constructively appear in a proceeding in which he has explicitly stated that he does not appear. In our opinion, the Statute does not require the writing containing the withdrawal by the Pleader of his vakalat to be in any specified form, and it appears to us that that which he has endorsed on the back of the plaint would be a perfectly good written withdrawal from his duties and obligations under the vakalat. That is really sufficient to dispose of this case, and Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyar very frankly said that, if we take that view as to the proper construction of the writing, the case, so far as he is concerned, was unarguable. But, while basing our decision on that short ground, we think, in view of some decision of this Court,—one a very recent decision and the other which is unreported—that we ought to point out that when this matter has been discussed in those cases, attention does not seem to have been drawn to the decision of the Privy Council Radha Kishan v. The Collector of Jaunpur (1). The facts of that case are set out in a quotation from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, which runs as follows: "That day (i.e., the day fixed for hearing) the Pleader for the applicant stated that he could not conduct the case, and he had received no instructions from his client. Thereupon the Court proceeded to try the case and tried and decided the issues on the evidence adduced on the plaintiff's behalf and decreed the suit against the applicant." Their Lordships held in that case that the applicant could not be held in the circumstances to have appeared. We trust that when this matter comes before the Courts again notice will be taken of that decision, because, so far as appears, a wider question is determined there, as there is no statement—a feature that exists in this case—to the effect that the Pleader has filed an instrument in writing taking himself out of his vakalat, a withdrawal on his part which O. III, r. 4 contemplates.

The exact question put to us is, whether when a Pleader reports no instructions, whether after he has asked for an adjournment, and been refused or not, the Court is correct in holding that the party for whom the Pleader was appearing has not appeared. We think that the only answer can be that, at any rate, in the circumstances of this case, the Pleader cannot be deemed to have appeared.

I should add one other word. The section says that the withdrawal of the Pleader must be with the leave of the Court. It does not say, nor do I think we are to import into it, that any formality is necessary about the leave of the Court and in the circumstances, we must presume that, in a case like the present, the Court in assenting to the conduct of the Vakil and in raising no question about his withdrawal, must be taken within the meaning of the section to have given its consent.

The case will go back to the Single Judge for disposal on any point not determined by this Full Bench.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27—Defendant's status, question of—Record of Rights not produced in lower Courts—Due diligence—Second appeal—Finding of fact, whether can be disturbed

In a suit for recovery of possession of the property in dispute the District Judge on appeal found that the defendants were neither occupancy nor under-raiyats and on this finding decreed the suit. The defendants, having preferred a second appeal to the High Court, it was urged (1) that the finding was not based on legal evidence, and (2) that the Record of Rights, which raised a presumption in favour of the defendants could not be placed before the lower Appellate Court owing to its late publication and the case should be re-tried in the light of this record.

Held, (1) that the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court could not be disturbed in second appeal; [p. 105, col. 1.]

(2) that as the defendants could not produce the Record of Rights in the lower Appellate Court in spite of all due diligence it should be admitted in evidence under O. XLI, r. 27 of the Civil Procedure Code; [ibid.]

(3) that the case should be remitted to the Court of first instance in order that that Court may try the question of the status of the defendants after admitting the Record of Rights as evidence in the case. [p. 105, col. 2.]

Babu Kshetru Mohan Ghose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal the question raised is whether the plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation under Art. 3 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Both the Courts below decreed the plaintiffs' suit for recovery of possession of the property in dispute and the defendants have preferred the present appeal. The decree passed by the lower Appellate Court is supported by the finding arrived at by that Court to the effect that the tenancy was neither an occupancy nor an under-raiyati one. The learned Judge, therefore, finds that Art. 3, Schedule III, Bengal Tenancy Act, does not apply in this case. This finding virtually makes the status of the defendants that of a tenure-holder. The controversy between the parties centred round the question whether the defendants' interest in the land was that of an occupancy raiyat or of a tenure-holder. The plaintiffs are the tenants of the defendants' tenant. Their case is that the defendants are the landlords of their landlord. The questions, therefore, that arise are, first, whether as the defendants are the landlords of the plaintiff's landlord, Art. 3 of Schedule III applies to this case; secondly, whether the defendants are raiyats within the meaning of that Article. The first question was not determined by the lower Appellate Court and the defendants' appeal to that Court was dismissed on the finding that they were neither occupancy nor under-raiyats. With reference to this question the learned Vakil for the appellants contends that the finding of the lower Appellate Court is not based on legal evidence. It appears that under the Talukdars, Gumani and Nakari held a non-transferable occupancy and under them Tilak Saha—the predecessor in title of the defendants—held a bekayemi jama. Gumani and Nakari surrendered their holding and the learned Judge says that Tilak then became a tenant under the Talukdars of the village. He does not say how Tilak on the surrender of the tenancy by the superior landlord became a tenant directly under the Talukdars—whether there was a fresh settlement with Tilak or whether by virtue of the surrender by the superior landlord he became a tenant directly under the Talukdars. The learned Judge further does not state the circumstances under which Tilak who had a bekayemi jama under the raiya of a non-transferable occupancy holding obtained a kayemi maurusi jama under the landlords. These are, no doubt, omissions in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. But on a consideration of the evidence before him the learned Judge has come to the conclusion that the tenancy is neither an occupancy nor an under-raiyati one. We are not justified in second appeal in disturbing that finding of fact.

The appellants have, however, raised another point.

They say that the Record of Rights which has been prepared with reference to the land in dispute could not be produced in time before the lower Appellate Court and that the case should, therefore, be re-tried in the light of the Record of Rights which raises a presumption in favour of the appellants. It appears that the Record of Rights was published after the decision of the suit by the First Court but before the lower Appellate Court pronounced its judgment. The appellants have filed an affidavit to show that with all diligence they were not in a position to produce the Record of Rights in the lower Appellate Court before the hearing of the appeal and we are satisfied that they were unable to produce it through no laches on their part. That is an important piece of evidence which should be taken into account in determining the present question. As this evidence could not be produced before the lower Appellate Court, we are of opinion that it should be considered in determining the status of the defendants by the Courts which are entitled to deal with facts. We, therefore, propose to admit the Record of Rights in evidence under O. XLI, r. 27 on the application of the appellants. The course which we propose to adopt is justified by the observations made by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Raja Indrajit Pratap Bahadur Sah v. Amar Singh (1). A similar course was followed in the case of Bhairab Chandra Dutt v. Kali Kumar Dutt (2). The order that we make in this case is that this case should be remitted to the Court of first instance in order that that Court may try the question of the status of the defendants after admitting the Record of Rights as evidence in the case. The defendants will be entitled to adduce such evidence, if any, as is necessary to prove the Record of Rights. The plaintiffs will be entitled to adduce such evidence as they consider necessary to rebut the presumption arising from the Record of Rights. It is not intended that there should be a de novo trial or that fresh evidence in respect of other points involved in this litigation should be adduced. The Court of first instance will then dispose of the case according to law.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decrees of the lower Courts are set aside and the case sent back to the Court of first instance to be re-tried according to the observations made above. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 97 of 1922, dated the 13th October 1922.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. K. K. Gandhe, for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The second and third grounds of appeal in this case challenge the correctness of the judgment dismissing plaintiff's suit on the ground of delay. Delay always involves a question of fact because delay may or may not be accountable and whether it has been in the particular case, reasonable or unreasonable and whether it has been duly accounted for or not, is always a matter on which the First Appellate Court must have a final say. The matter cannot be said to be necessarily open to second appeal. The learned Counsel for the appellant has argued that though the finding of delay may remain a finding of fact still whether the conclusion drawn therefrom that it disentitles the plaintiff from claiming the particular relief is right or wrong is a matter which is open to consideration in second appeal. That the legal result of certain facts is a question of law and can, therefore, be raised in second appeal, is a proposition which is amply supported by authority.

I admit that delay is itself no reply to a suit for specific performance unless it amounts to a waiver or abandonment of the contract or to laches on the part of the party seeking specific performance. Kissen Gopal Sadaney v. Kally Prosonno Sett (1), Jamshed Khodaram Irani v. Burjorji, Dhunjibhai (2), Chamarti Suryaprakasarayadu v. Arardhi Lakshminarasimhacharyulu (3). Mere delay does not also amount to waiver or abandonment. Delay short of limitation does not disentitle a person from enforcing his rights. Ordinarily the plea of delay is discouraged if the circumstances are such that the parties have not by their words and conduct or by express stipulation, made time of the essence of the contract.

The respondents' contention is that the question of delay is concluded by the lower Appellate Court's finding. The defendants-respondents had distinctly pleaded that the plaintiff failed to perform his part of the contract, and, therefore, as there was default or breach on the plaintiff's part which entitled the defendants to rescind the contract, they actually rescinded the same and put an end to it. The lower Appellate Court has found, agreeing with the First Court, that the contract was expressly rescinded and the plaintiff had expressly abandoned the contract. This finding is supported by evidence proper for consideration and excludes the plaintiff from claiming to enforce the right once expressly abandoned. I have gone through the evidence and I clearly see the defendants' notice dated the 26th September 1918, by which the defendants gave the ultimatum to the plaintiff that he must exercise his option to purchase the field within the particular time thereby limited, otherwise the agreement was to be treated as cancelled. The plaintiff did not comply with this notice, beyond merely expressing a verbal willingness to perform. He did not offer or tender any draft of a sale-deed or tender the amount of the consideration payable under the contract and thus failed to carry out his part of the contract. The result of this failure as was expected was that the contract stood rescinded as soon as time limit expired and the parties became liberated from their obligations to perform the contract and one party only remained accountable for damages, if any, for breach of the contract of specific performance, to the other party who may not be in the breach.

It is said that it was the defendants' duty to execute a sale-deed in plaintiff's favour and he need not have waited for plaintiff to tender a draft sale-deed for his approval and for execution. This again raises a question of fact, as the parties have chosen to make it a mixed question of law and fact. Parties took an issue on this point to the following effect, after the case was remanded:—

"Was defendant to perform his contract without application by plaintiff?"

The First Court held that it was not proved that defendant had agreed to buy the stamp and bear the expenses of sale and that conclusion drawn by that Court from this is that the contract was not to be performed without application by the plaintiff and that this comes within section 48 of the Contract Act. That Court also held on another issue as to whether time was of the essence of the contract, in the affirmative; the defendant being in need of money had to sell the property. This clearly shows that the defendants suffered detriment by the breach on plaintiff's part and the latter cannot now, that a third party has become interested in the property, be allowed to turn round to say that it is still open to him to enforce his so-called rights after they have been allowed to vanish away by default on his own part.

In this view of the case the question of res judicata needs no decision.

The remarks quoted by the lower Appellate Court from the Privy Council case of Jamshed Khodaram Irani v. Burjorji Dhunjibhai (2) very fittingly apply to the facts found here:

"But equity will not assist where there has been undue delay on the part of one party to the contract, and the other has given him reasonable notice that he must complete within a definite time."

There is thus undue delay coupled with a definite abandonment on plaintiff's part of his rights under the contract, and on both these grounds the plaintiff's suit must fail. I, therefore, hold that the dismissal is proper and there is no valid ground for interference. I dismiss the appeal with costs. The plaintiff shall pay costs in all Courts.

Mr W. S. Subrahmanya Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Row, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There were two suits before the District Munsif, the one he dismissed for default on account of the non-appearance of the plaintiff, and in the other he passed an ex parte decree on account of the defendant not having appeared. The plaintiff in the first suit and the defendant in the second suit happen to be the same person. Applications were made to the District Munsif to set aside the order of dismissal for default in the first suit and to set aside the ex parte decree in the second suit. The District Munsif refused to allow these applications, but on appeal the District Judge made orders favourable to the applicant. The propriety of these orders is challenged in the revision petitions before me.

A Vakil appeared for the party in default and stated he had no instructions. It is argued that notwithstanding this the Pleader must be held to have appeared on his client's behalf and, therefore, the provisions of O. IX do not apply. I am utterly unable to follow this argument. Order III, r. 1 so far as it is material for the present purpose runs thus:—"An appearance in any Court required by law to be made by a party may be made by a Pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf." Order V, r. 1 sub-clause (2) provides: "A defendant to whom a summons has been issued under sub-rule (1) may appear (a) in person, or (b) by a Pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, or (c) by a Pleader accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions." This provision, no doubt, refers in terms to a defendant, but in principle there seems to be no distinction for this purpose between a defendant and a plaintiff, and I am quite clear that the same rule is to be applied in regard to both. When a Pleader appears and says he has no instructions, I take it that he intends to inform the Court that he has no instructions to conduct the case either wholly or partially; in other words, he tells the Court, that though he has filed an appearance he does not propose to appear for his client. It seems to me to be a contradiction in terms to hold that a person who says he does not appear does, in fact, appear. It has been argued that it is necessary for a Pleader to say in such circumstances that he severs his connection with the case, or that he withdraws his vakalat. I do not think any set form of words is necessary to convey to the Court the information that he has ceased to appear and that he, in fact, does not appear for his client. There is no magic in the words "I have ceased my connection with the case." In my opinion the mere attendance of a Pleader who for want of instructions is unable "to answer all material questions relating to the suit" is not an appearance on behalf of his client. Another case may arise where the Pleader appears and says that he applies for an adjournment and on the adjournment being refused informs the Court that he has no instructions. Here again, I am perfectly clear that there is no appearance on behalf of the party. Then a third contingency may arise; the Pleader may be duly instructed and be able to answer all material questions, but still he may tell the Court "I have no instructions." This conduct may render him liable at the instance of his client, but the question that is material for the present purpose is, was there or was there not an appearance? Supposing that a Pleader who has been retained is actually engaged in another Court and fails to appear, can it be said that there is an appearance on behalf of his client? Failure to appear and refusal to appear, do, I think, stand on the same footing. In neither case can there be said to be an appearance. The matter seems to be simple in the extreme and but for the large body of conflicting decisions on the point, I should have had no difficulty in deciding the case. There is abundant authority in favour of the proposition, as I have stated it—Gopila Row v. Maria Susaya Pillai (1) and Soonderlal v. Goorprasad (2) and Satis Chandra Mukerjee v. Ahara Prasad Mukerjee (3) and I am not prepared to follow the decisions which take a different view.

BARADA KANTA RAY—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 7, 94, 51, O. XXXVIII, rr. 5, 6—Attachment before judgment of immoveable property—Small Cause Court, whether can order attachment—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 17—"Attachment" and "order of attachment", distinction between—"Interlocutory order", meaning of—Small Cause Court, whether has inherent powers.

Per Curiam (Walmsley and Chotzner, JJ., dissentiente).—A Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to make an order for attachment of immoveable property before judgment. [p. 114, col. 1.]

Kedar Nath Paramanik v. Hem Nath Karmakar, 70 Ind. Cas. 841; 49 C. 994; (1923) A. I. R. (C.) 176; overruled.

Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali, 80 Ind. Cas. 300; 28 C. W. N. 16, at p. 19; (1924) A. I. R. (C.) 193, affirmed.

There is a difference between ordering the attachment of property and attaching the property. If a Provincial Small Cause Court makes an order for attachment of immoveable property, it would have to send it to an ordinary Civil Court for execution. [p. 113, col. 1.]

Per Sanderson, C. J.—In construing an Act words found therein should not be regarded as surplusage and full effect should be given to them if a reasonable interpretation can be found. [p. 112, col. 1.]

The only reasonable interpretation to be placed upon the words "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" in section 7 (b) of the Civil Procedure Code is that it was intended to exclude from the jurisdiction of a Provincial Small Cause Court the matters particularly specified in clauses (c) and (e) of section 94 [void].

The meaning of the words "if it is so prescribed" in section 94 of the Civil Procedure Code is, if it is prescribed by the rules and orders contained in the First Schedule of the Code [p. 112, col. 2.]

The order for attachment contemplated by section 94, clause (e) of the Code must be such an order as is specified in O. XXXVIII, r. 6, viz., an order for attachment before judgment. [p. 113, col. 1.]

Per Mukerjee, J.—Something which is done between the commencement and the end of a suit or action, which decides some point or matter which, however, is not a final decision of the matter in issue, is known as an interlocutory order. [p. 118, col. 1.]

Order XXXVIII of the Civil Procedure Code has not been excluded either by section 7 read with section 54 or by O. L and is applicable to a Provincial Court of Small Causes. [p. 120, col. 1.]

Even a Provincial Court of Small Causes can act under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, and pass such orders as may be necessary. [p. 121, col. 1.]

Per Chotzner, J.—A Court which has not the power of executing a decree by attachment of immoveable property after judgment, cannot have the power of attaching such property before judgment. [p. 122, col. 1.]

Per Walmsley, J.—A Small Cause Court cannot attach property whether moveable or immoveable before judgment. [p. 115, col. 1.]

Reference to Full Bench by Mr. Justice Newbould and Mr. Justice B. B. Ghose on a Reference by the Court of Small Causes at Madaripur:—

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

"This is a Reference by the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Madaripur

BARADA KANTA RAY V. MAIJUDDI.

under O. XLVI, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, for the decision by this Court of the question whether the Provincial Small Cause Court is competent to attach immoveable property before judgment. The reason for the Reference is given to be the existence of conflicting decisions in this Court and apparently for this the Referring Judge has not recorded his own opinion on the question. In the case of Kedarnath Paramanik v. Hem Nath Karmakar (1), it was held that the Provincial Small Cause Court can attach immoveable property before judgment while the contrary view was taken in Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2). The earlier case was not evidently brought to the notice of the Division Bench which decided the latter case. Each of us was a party to one of the two cases cited, one of which must be overruled. Under this circumstance, we are unable to decide the question finally and we find it necessary to refer the matter to a Full Bench. We, therefore, refer the following questions for decision by a Full Bench:—

(1) Whether a Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to order an attachment of immoveable property before judgment?

(2) Whether the case of Kedarnath Paramanik v. Hem Nath Karmakar (1) or the case of Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) was correctly decided?"

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—The questions referred to the Full Bench are as follows:—

(1) Whether a Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to order an attachment of immoveable property before judgment?

(2) Whether the case of Kedarnath Paramanik v. Hem Nath Karmakar (1) or the case of Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) was correctly decided?"

(1) 70 Ind. Cas. 841; 49 C. 994; (1923) A. I. R. (C.) 176.

(2) 80 Ind. Cas. 300; 28 C. W. N. 16 at p. 19; (1924) A. I. R. (C.) 193.

The reference arises by reason of conflicting decision of this Court in two cases viz., Kedarnath Paramanik v. Hem Nath Karmakar (1) and Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2).

In the former case it was decided that a Provincial Small Cause Court can attach before judgment immoveable property under the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. In the latter case it was decided that a Provincial Court of Small Causes has no power to attach immoveable property before judgment under O. XXXVIII of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 and that an order of such a Court adjudicating a claim to property so attached is ultra vires.

The decision in the case of Kedarnath Paramanik v. Hem Nath Karmakar (1) was not brought to the attention of the learned Judges who decided the latter case.

I am not surprised that there has been and is a difference of judicial opinion in respect of this question, for, in my opinion, it is by no means easy upon an examination of the various provisions relating to it to ascertain what was the intention of the Legislature with regard to this matter when the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 was passed. This presents an unsatisfactory situation, for the Provincial Small Cause Courts are obviously intended for the expeditious disposal of small causes, and it is desirable that those who preside over such Courts and those who practise in them should be able to ascertain without any difficulty what are the jurisdiction and procedure applicable thereto. So far from that being the case in respect of the matter now under discussion, it has become necessary, in order to ascertain the powers of the Provincial Small Cause Courts, to refer the question to a Full Bench and during the argument it was necessary to examine minutely sections of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act of 1887, the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 and the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 and the result is a difference of opinion.

This therefore appears to be a matter which should engage the attention of the Legislature so that the jurisdiction of the Provincial Small Cause Courts may be made clear beyond all question.

Section 15 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, provides that a Court of Small Causes shall not take cognizance of the suits specified in the Second Schedule as suits excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes and amongst the suits excepted by that Schedule from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes are a suit for the possession of immoveable property or for the recovery of any interest in such property, a suit for partition of immoveable property, a suit for purchase or sale or redemption of mortgaged property, a suit for assessment, etc., of rent of immoveable property.

Section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, provides that the procedure prescribed in the chapters and sections of the Code of Civil Procedure (viz., Act XIV of 1882) specified in the Second Schedule to that Code shall, so far as these chapters and sections are applicable, be the procedure followed by a Court of Small Causes in all suits cognizable by it and in all proceedings arising out of such suits.

Section 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, provided that the chapters and sections specified in the Second Schedule thereto should extend to the Provincial Small Cause Courts, and that the other chapters and sections of the Code should not extend to such Courts.

The Second Schedule included Chapter XIX (which dealt with the execution of decrees), section 266, but there was added the exception as follows:—"Except so far as relates to immoveable property."

The schedule also included Chapter XXXIV "Of arrest and attachment before judgment except as regards immoveable property."

It is therefore clear that at the time of the passing of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act in 1887 the intention of the Legislature was that a Provincial Small Cause Court should not have power to attach immoveable property before judgment.

The Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, was repealed by the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 and section 158 provided as follows:—

"In every enactment or notification passed or issued before the commencement of this Code in which reference is made to or to any chapter or section of Act VIII. of 1859 or any Code of Civil Procedure or any Act amending the same or any other enactment hereby repealed, such reference shall, so far as may be practicable, be taken to be made to this Code or to its corresponding part, Order, section or rule."

There is, however, no part of the Code of 1908 which corresponds to the Second Schedule of the Code of 1882 and whereas the scheme of the 1882 Code was to specify the provisions of the Code which should apply to a Provincial Small Cause Court, the scheme of the 1908 Code is to make all the provisions of the Code of 1908 applicable except those which are expressly excepted. The result is that section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act is entirely inapposite although it remains unrepealed. This is one reason for the difficulty which has arisen.

On examination of the Code of 1908 and the Orders contained in the First Schedule thereto, it seems to me that the most material sections and Orders are as follows:—

Sections 7, 36, 94 and 95; O. XVI (r. 10), O. XXI (r. 82); O. XXXVIII, O. XXXIX, O. L.

Section 7 of the 1908 Code provides as follows:—"The following provisions shall not extend to Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1837, or to Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes under that Act, that is to say,

(a) so much of the body of the Code as relates to

(i) suits excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes; (ii) the execution of decrees in such suits;

BARADA KANTA RAY V. MAIJUDDI.

(iii) the execution of decrees against immoveable property; and

(b) the following sections; that is to say, . . . sections 94 and 95 so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders."

On reference to section 94 it will be found that all the orders therein mentioned are "interlocutory orders" in the ordinary meaning of the phrase and clause (e) runs as follows:—"Make such other interlocutory orders as may appear to the Court to be just and convenient." This clause therefore would go to show that all the orders specifically mentioned in section 94 are "interlocutory orders."

It was, therefore, argued on the one hand that the intention of the Legislature was to exclude all the matters mentioned in section 94 from the jurisdiction of a Provincial Small Cause Court. On the other hand it was argued that, if this contention were adopted, no effect would be given to the words, "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" in section 7. It was argued that some effect must be given to these words, and that they cannot be regarded as a surplusage, and further that if it had been intended to except all the matters mentioned in section 94, there would have been no necessity to refer to "injunctions" in section 7 for the only injunctions mentioned in section 94 are "temporary injunctions" which would be included in the phrase "interlocutory orders" which are the subject-matter of clause (e) of section 94.

It is a well-known rule that in construing an Act, words found therein should not be regarded as surplusage, and full effect should be given to them, if a reasonable interpretation can be found.

In section 94 "temporary injunctions" and "interlocutory orders" are specifically mentioned in separate clauses, viz., (c) and (e) and in my judgment the only reasonable interpretation to be placed upon the words in section 7, viz., "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" is, that it was intended to exclude from the jurisdiction of a Provincial Small Cause

Court the matters particularly specified in clauses (c) and (e).

I am confirmed in this opinion by the words which are to be found at the beginning of section 94, viz., "if it is so prescribed."

Having regard to the definitions in the second section of the Code the meaning of these words is, if it is prescribed by the rules and Orders contained in the First Schedule of the Code.

On reference to the First Schedule, it will be observed that O. XXXVIII deals with "arrest and attachment before judgment" and O. XXXIX deals with "temporary injunctions and interlocutory orders."

Therefore, although "orders for attachment before judgment" are in the ordinary meaning of the words "interlocutory orders" they are placed in a different category to "temporary injunctions" and "interlocutory orders."

Again although "temporary injunctions" are really "interlocutory orders" they are specifically mentioned in the schedule as being something special and distinct from "interlocutory orders."

The result of my examination of these sections therefore is the conclusion that the framers of this legislation were dealing with "temporary injunctions" and "other interlocutory orders" as matters distinct from the matters specifically mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (d) of section 94 and that it was intended that the provisions of section 94, which were not to extend to Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, were the provisions contained in clauses (c) and (e) of section 94.

Clause (b) of section 94 empowers the Court to "order the attachment of any property."

Section 7 of the Code therefore does not prevent a Provincial Small Cause Court from making such an order.

But such order must be of an interlocutory nature, for section 7 of the Code and O. L. in the First Schedule expressly provide that the provisions of the Code relating to the execution of decrees against immoveable property shall not extend to a Provincial Small Cause Court.

Therefore the order for attachment contemplated by section 94, clause (b), must be such an order as is specified in O. XXXVIII, r. 6, viz., an order for attachment before judgment.

As I am of opinion that the provisions of clause (b) of section 94 are not excluded by reason of section 7 and that the order for attachment there referred to must mean an order for attachment before judgment, it follows that, in my opinion, a Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to make an order for attachment before judgment of any property, which would include immoveable property.

I agree that at first sight it may appear strange that a Provincial Small Cause Court, which cannot entertain suits relating to immoveable property, and which cannot execute a decree by attachment of immoveable property or entertain a claim, which an attachment may produce, should have been given power to make "an order for attachment of immoveable property before judgment." There is, however, a distinction between making an order for attachment and making an attachment. It may be that if a Provincial Small Cause Court were to make an order for attachment of immoveable property before judgment, it would be necessary for that Court to transmit the order to a Court of Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction for the purpose of the order being carried out and the property attached.

In this connection I desire to refer to a passage in the judgment of Rankin, J., in Sadek Ali v. Samed, Ali (2), which is as follows:—

"It is by no means absurd to suppose that the Code of 1908 may have meant, subject to the right of the High Courts to amend the rules, to extend the power of attachment before judgment to immoveable property in the case of Provincial Small Cause Courts while refusing to such Courts the right to attach such property in execution of decrees."

I agree with that passage if the words

"power to order attachment before judgment" are substituted for the words "power of attachment before judgment."

The question, however, is whether the Legislature has extended such a power to the Provincial Small Cause Courts.

It is to be noted that O. L. clause (a) excludes from the jurisdiction of the Provincial Small Cause Courts the matters mentioned in clause (a) of section 7 of the Code and two other matters, viz., the execution of a decree against the interest of a partner in partnership property and the settlement of issues, and in clause (b) specifies certain rules and orders which are not to extend to Provincial Small Cause Courts.

This order, however, does not mention O. XXXVIII which deals with attachment before judgment, and it does not mention O. XVI, r. 10 or O. XXI, r. 82.

Order XVI, r. 10, deals with the procedure where a witness fails to comply with a summons to give evidence or produce a document.

One of the powers given to the Court under that rule, is to attach his property.

But it is expressly provided that no Court of Small Causes shall make an order for attachment of immoveable property in respect of the matters referred to in that rule.

Similarly in dealing with the question of what Courts may order sales in execution of decrees or orders, O. XXI, r. 82, expressly provides that sales of immoveable property in execution of decrees may be ordered by any Court other than a Court of Small Causes.

These two rules, therefore, show that in respect of matters which are not dealt with in O. L., when the Legislature desired to exclude them from the jurisdiction of the Provincial Small Cause Courts, it expressly said so.

In my opinion, therefore, it is not unreasonable to assume that if the Legislature had intended to exclude the powers conferred upon the Court by O. XXXVIII, rr. 5 and 6, from the jurisdiction of the Provincial Small Cause Courts, it would have expressly so provided as in the case of O. XVI, r. 10 and O. XXI, r. 82.

BARADA KANTA RAY V. MAIJUDDI.

On the whole, therefore, though I think the matter is by no means free from difficulty as I have already indicated, I am of opinion that the first question referred to the Full Bench, viz., whether a Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to order an attachment of immoveable property before judgment, should be answered in the affirmative.

The subject of the decisions in the two cases referred to in the second question was the power of a Provincial Small Cause Court to attach immoveable property before judgment and in Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) the question whether the Small Cause Court could adjudicate upon a claim to immoveable property arising by reason of the attachment was also involved. The decisions were not confined to the mere question whether a Provincial Small Cause Court has power to order attachment of immoveable property before judgment. In my judgment, therefore, the answer to the second question should be that Kedarnath Paramanik v. Hem Nath Karmakar (1) was wrongly decided, and Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) was rightly decided.

Walmsley, J.—The questions referred are whether a Provincial Small Cause Court can attach immoveable property before judgment, and which of the two decisions, opposed to one another, is correct.

There was no doubt upon the main question before the present Code of Civil Procedure came into force: a Court exercising the powers of a Provincial Small Cause Court could not order such an attachment. The manner in which this restriction was enacted was as follows: The Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, section 17, runs as follows:—“The procedure prescribed in the chapters and sections of the Code of Civil Procedure specified in the Second Schedule to that Code, shall, so far as those chapters and sections are applicable, be the procedure followed in a Court of Small Causes in all suits cognizable by it and in all proceedings arising out of such suits.” The Second Schedule to the Code then in force (that of 1882) enumerated the chapters and sections of that Code extended to Provincial Courts of Small Causes and among them was Chapter XXXIV “Of arrest and attachment before judgment, with the addition “except as regards immoveable property.”

The Code now in force proceeds on entirely different lines: there is no Schedule corresponding to the Second Schedule of the Code of 1882, and although the sections of Chapter XXXIV are reproduced with slight modifications in the rules of O. XXXVIII and in section 95 of the present Code, there is nothing to be found which corresponds to the clear words “except as regards immoveable property.” The method has in fact been changed: in place of a detailed list of provisions which do apply to Provincial Small Cause Courts, there is first in the body of the Code in section 7 a description of the classes of provisions which do not apply, and in the First Schedule, in O. I, there is both an exclusion by class, and a list of particular provisions which do not apply. In spite of this radical change the language of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act remains unaltered.

The position is, therefore, very obscure, and it is difficult to say whether the Legislature intended to lay down any rule on the subject or not. The learned Vakils, who have been good enough to lend us their help, have not, in my opinion, been able to advance any convincing argument in either direction.

It appears to me that we must approach the matter from the standpoint that by the Act of 1887 Provincial Courts of Small Causes are generally forbidden to have any dealings with immoveable property, both in suits and in execution proceedings. No change has been made in that principle by the new Code of Civil Procedure, and in one instance, that is, in the matter of compelling the attendance of a witness, there is a specific direction that no Court of Small Causes shall make an order for the attachment of immoveable property.

It would be surprising if a Court that could not execute a decree by attachment of immoveable property should be able to attach the same immoveable property before a decree came into being, and I am disposed to think that the provisions of section 7 may fairly be construed to give effect to this natural inference. That section says:—The following provisions shall not extend to Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act of 1887 or to Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes under that Act, viz.

(a) so much of the body of the Code as relates to—

(i).....

(ii)...

(iii) the execution of decrees against immoveable property.

(b).....Sections 94 and 95, so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders. Of these two sections, the latter is practically the same as section 491 of the old Code, the last section of Chapter XXXIV, which, as I have mentioned, was one of the chapters enumerated in the Second Schedule. The former authorises the Court to take certain measures to prevent the ends of justice being defeated. The measures are not new but the section is. The measures mentioned are the power to demand security from a defendant to call upon a defendant to produce property, to attach property, to issue an injunction, to appoint a Receiver. This list is followed by a fifth clause in these words "make such other interlocutory orders as may appear to the Court to be just and convenient."

The term "interlocutory orders" is not defined in any Statute but the orders mentioned in the first four clauses are generally regarded as interlocutory orders and I do not think that the heading to O. XXXIX can be taken to mean that only the orders mentioned in rr. 6 to 10 of that order are interlocutory orders. Moreover the reference in the fifth clause of section 94 to "other interlocutory orders" seems to mean that the preceding orders are also interlocutory orders.

On this view of the section, I must hold that the Small Cause Court cannot attach property whether moveable or immoveable. That view is contrary to the view taken in the case of Kedarnath Paramanik v. Hem Nath Karmakar (1) except in so far as I hold that the present Code makes no distinction between the power to attach moveable property and the power to attach immoveable property. The earlier case of Kumud Behari Pal v. Hari Charan Sardar (3) to which the learned Judges referred for their reasons, was a reference as to the power to attach moveable property, and the learned Judges were considering whether the present Code had taken away that power, and they held that an attachment of moveable property before judgment was not an "interlocutory order" for the purpose of section 7 (b), because that construction would render the words "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" superfluous. With all deference, I venture to differ; although I confess I can find no use for the phrase just mentioned in the view that I take.

The conclusion to which I come is that of Rankin, J., that the power to attach immoveable property before judgment is sufficiently, if not too clearly, negatived.

I would, therefore, answer the first question in the negative and the second question by saying that the case of Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) was correctly decided.

Newbould, J.—The questions which we have to decide in this Reference depend primarily on the proper interpretation of clause (b) of section 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, which enumerates certain sections in the Code which shall not extend to Provincial Small Cause Courts. Among these sections are included "sections 94 and 95 so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders." As pointed out by Rankin, J., in his judgment in Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) "this provision is badly drafted." The difficulty arises from the fact that section 94 apparently refers entirely to interlocutory orders if the expression "interlocutory order" be given its ordinary meaning, as for example its definition in Wharton's Law Lexicon. But if this is done this qualification of section 94 in clause (b) of section 7 becomes meaningless. It is a general rule of construction that full effect must be given to every word and the words of a Statute must be construed so as to give a sensible meaning to them, if possible. It is possible to give a sensible meaning to the words "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" by interpreting them as used in a technical sense and as referring to orders expressly described in the Code itself as injunctions or interlocutory orders. That these words were used in this technical sense by the framers of the Code would appear from the inclusion of the word "injunctions" in the sentence. The only injunctions referred to in sections 94 and 95 are temporary injunctions and these would be included in interlocutory orders if these words were used in the ordinary sense. This was the view I held in 1918 when I was one of the Judges who decided the case of Kumud Behary Pal v. Hari Charan Sardar (3) and I see no reason to change my view as to the principle to be followed in interpreting clause (b) of section 7 of the Code. But now that I have had the advantage of hearing the point more fully argued I think that in applying this principle some modification should be made. My attention has now been drawn to the fact that the words "if it is so prescribed" at the end of the first sentence in section 94 render this section inoperative apart from the rules which are contained in the First Schedule to the Code. A reference to the First Schedule makes it easier to give a technical meaning to the words "injunctions and interlocutory orders." We there find that O. XXXIX is headed "temporary injunctions and interlocutory orders" and the order is divided into two parts with separate headings, rules 1 to 5 being described "temporary injunctions" and rules 1 to 10 "interlocutory orders." It, therefore, appears to me that the meaning to be given to clause (b) of section 7, so far as it relates to section 94, is that the provisions in O. XXXIX of the First Schedule of the Code shall not extend to Provincial Small Cause Courts, but that it does not exclude the extension of the provisions in O. XXXVIII to such Courts. The present Code of Civil Procedure has the effect of making applicable to Small Cause Courts all the provisions of the Code that are not expressly excluded. I can find nothing in the Code apart from section 7, which could be interpreted to exclude the application of O. XXXVIII to such Courts. Under rules 6 and 7 of that order a Court has power to order attachment of immoveable property. I would, therefore, answer the first question referred to the Full Bench, "Whether a Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to order an attachment of immoveable property before judgment?" in the affirmative.

(3) 53 Ind. Cas. 814; 46 O. 717; 31 C. L. J. 179.

At the hearing of this Reference my attention was drawn to a point that escaped my notice when delivering judgment in the cases of Kumud Behary Pal v. Hari Charan Sardar (3) and Kedarnath Paramanik v. Hem Nath Karmakar (1), that is, that there is a difference between ordering the attachment of property and attaching property. It does not follow that because, as I hold, a Small Cause Court has the power to order the attachment of immoveable property, it has also the power to attach it. From the provisions of section 36 and O. XXXVIII, r. 7 of the Code it appears that when it is sought to give effect to an order of attachment before judgment, this must be done in accordance with the provisions of the Code for attaching property in execution of a decree. Since a Small Cause Court is prevented by the provision of section 7 (a) (iii) and O. I of the Code from executing decrees against immoveable property it would appear that it is equally debarred from executing an order of attachment of immoveable property passed by it. In order to give effect to such an order the assistance of the Civil Court of ordinary jurisdiction would have to be invoked and claims to immoveable property attached under the order of a Small Cause Court would be heard and decided by the attaching Court and not by the Small Cause Court.

I would, therefore, answer the second question in this Reference "whether the case of Kedarnath Paramanik v. Hem Nath Karmakar (1), or the case of Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) was correctly decided?" as follows:—

Having regard to the fact that the power to attach and not the power to order at-attachment is the subject of these decisions, Kedarnath Paramanik v. Hem Nath Karmakar (1) was wrong and Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) was correctly decided.

Mukerji, J.—The two questions referred to us for decision are simple enough. They resolve themselves into the question as to whether O. XXXVIII of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to a Provincial Court of Small Causes. The solution is not quite so simple.

The two views that may be taken of the matter and the arguments in support of them may shortly be summarised thus.

Section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) lays down that the procedure prescribed in the chapters and sections of the Code of Civil Procedure specified in the Second Schedule to that Code shall, so far as those chapters and sections are applicable, be the procedure followed in a Court of Small Causes in all suits cognizable by it and in all proceedings arising out of such suits. Then follows a proviso which need not be considered for our present purpose. Section 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) provided that only certain chapters and sections of the Code (all specified in the Second Schedule thereof) were to extend to the Provincial Courts of Small Causes. From that schedule it would appear that the provisions regarding arrest and attachment before judgment (Chapter XXXIV, though made applicable to Provincial Small Cause Courts did not apply to such suits when they related to immoveable property. It is therefore quite clear that so long as the Code of 1882 was in force a Provincial Court of Small Causes could not make an order of attachment in respect of any immoveable property before judgment. The scheme of the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) now in force is entirely different. It does not profess to lay down which particular provisions of the new Code are to apply to the Provincial Small Cause Courts but simply lays down that certain provisions are not applicable to such Courts. These provisions are to be found in section 7 and O. L. of the Code and also in O. XVI, r. 10 and O. XXI, r. 82. The two rules last mentioned do not refer to the present question beyond suggesting that the scheme of the Code is to exclude by express mention. Section 7 is divided into two parts. Part (a) is confined to the provisions contained in the body of the Code relating to suits excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, to the execution of decrees in such suits and to the execution of decrees against immoveable property. Part (b) mentions some of the sections of which sections 9, 91 and 92 have obviously no application to a Court of Small Causes, sections 96 to 112 relate to appeals and section 115 relates to revision. Part (b) also excludes sections 94 and 95 "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders." Although all the orders mentioned in section 94 may in one sense be said to be interlocutory orders, the Legislature intended by the use of the words "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" in section 7 to mean only such of them as are specified as such in the Code, that is to say, injunctions and such orders as are said to be interlocutory orders in O. XXXIX of the Code. The precise effect, therefore, of providing for exclusion of the operation of sections 94 and 95 "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" is to exclude in reality orders which come under clause (c) and (e) of section 94 and not orders passed under the other clauses of the section. Clause (b) of section 94 under which a Court can order the attachment of any property is therefore not affected by section 7 O. L. which specifies the portions of the First Schedule and the rules and orders which shall not extend to Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, or to Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes under that Act does not refer to O. XXXVIII at all. Consequently a Provincial Court of Small Causes is competent to make an order of attachment before judgment in respect of moveable as well as immoveable property.

In support of this view it may be urged that the main object of an attachment before judgment is to enable the plaintiff to realise the amount of the decree, supposing a decree is eventually passed, from the defendants' property. It is a step taken merely for the purpose of preventing the debtor from delaying or defeating the enforcement of a decree and thereby obstructing or preventing the creditor from reaping its fruits. Unquestionably that is a much valued right; and so far as moveable property is concerned the plaintiff enjoyed that right so long as the Code of 1882 was in force. The scheme of the Code of 1908 is radically different from that of the Code of 1882. Unlike the latter it by implication makes the whole Code applicable to Provincial Courts of Small Causes subject to certain express restrictions.

For the contrary view the reasoning in substance is this. The rules under O. XXXVIII have been prescribed to enable the Court to make an order for the attachment of any property for preventing the ends of justice from being defeated. Therefore the order is one which comes expressly within the last part of clause (b) of section 94 of the Code. An attachment before judgment cannot but be an interlocutory order. The Code does not define what orders are interlocutory and what are not. Order XXXIX only specifies certain classes of interlocutory orders. Something which is done between the commencement and the end of a suit or action, which decides some point or matter which, however, is not a final decision of the matter in issue is known as an interlocutory order. An attachment before judgment is undoubtedly an interlocutory order according to the general acceptance of the expression. Section 94 refers entirely to interlocutory orders in all its clauses, and this is clear also from the wording of clause (c) which speaks of "such other interlocutory orders." Therefore by section 7 of the Code they are all excluded, and a Provincial Court of Small Causes is no longer competent to make any orders for attachment of property, either moveable or immovable, before judgment.

The considerations that favour this view are that a Provincial Court of Small Causes is prohibited by its constitution from entertaining questions of rights in immoveables, and rights to or interests in immovable property are elaborately excluded from its consideration. It can only go into such questions incidentally, and there is in section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) a provision enabling but not making it obligatory for the Court to send the matter for decision to the ordinary Civil Court. A Provincial Court of Small Causes cannot deal with immoveables in execution of its decree, it cannot levy on immoveables, nor can it order the attachment of immovable property to make a witness to appear. To hold that it is competent to attach immovable property before judgment will be to open the gates for claims to such property being put in and allow the Court to investigate and decide on them with no right of appeal to the party aggrieved by its decision therein, and to countenance the eventuality of its decision being final if no suit is instituted to establish the right within the time allowed by law. To hold that it is competent to attach moveables before judgment, when undoubtedly O. XXXIX, r. 6 which gives the power to order interim sale of moveables which are subject to speedy and natural decay or which for any other just and sufficient cause it may be desirable to have sold at once, does not extend to the Court—an order under O. XXXIX, r. 6 being an interlocutory order specified as such in the Code and therefore expressly excluded by section 7 read with section 94, clause (c)—would lead to an anomaly.

A close examination of these rival contentions leads us to a position which can scarcely be ignored. To accept the former view would be to hold that the Legislature intended to extend in respect of immovable property the powers which the Provincial Courts of Small Causes enjoyed with regard to moveables ever since the said Courts came into existence by Act XI of 1860; to adopt the latter view would be to hold that the object was to take away those powers. There is no escape from this position. It is difficult to imagine that such a salutary power which affords protection to plaintiffs without causing any appreciable inconvenience to defendants—for the proceedings in a Court of Small Causes are meant to be summary, and if the plaintiff fails, the attachment fails under O. XXXVIII, r. 9, and when there are ample provisions made under O. XXXVIII, rr. 6, 9 and 12 protecting the defendant, and also the rights of strangers, and the Code lays down stringent safeguards in the shape of conditions which must be shown to exist before an order can be made under O. XXXVIII, r. 5—was intended to be taken away without some express words indicating such intention. On the other hand the scheme adopted by repealing Schedule II of Act XIV of 1882 which expressly extended only some of the powers under the Code to Provincial Courts of Small Causes and adopting in the Code of 1908 the other mode of expression, namely, of restricting only the application of some of the provisions specifically mentioned therein, favours the view that the object was to enlarge the powers rather than to limit them.

Now, it is to be regretted that section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act has not yet been amended as was absolutely necessary on the amendment of the Civil Procedure Code in 1908. The language of the section, as it is, is wholly inapposite. With the repeal of the Code of 1882 and of its Second Schedule the words of section 17 of the Provincial Court of Small Causes can no longer have any meaning: for though by section 8 of the General Clauses Act and section 158 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act IX of 1908) we have, as far as practicable, to look to the part, Order, section or rule which corresponds to the chapter or section of the earlier Codes, it will be seen that the Code of 1882 excluded the same by express mention whereas the Code of 1908 has restricted them by express mention.

There is little doubt that the amendments made by the Code of 1908 in this respect are anything but satisfactory. An examination of the provisions discloses a want of care and precision which is regrettable in an enactment dealing with procedure so largely in use. It is difficult to reconcile the expression "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" appearing in section 7 with the provisions of section 94 all of which deal with interlocutory orders of one kind or the other. There is a clear ambiguity to the dispel which it is permissible to look to the earlier enactments; but the earlier enactments afford us no real assistance, because in view of the fact upon either view it being admitted that a change has been effected—an extension of the powers to immovables on the one view and a curtailment of the powers in the case of moveables on the other—it would be impossible to proceed on the assumption of a supposed policy on the part of the Legislature not to depart from the law as it stood before. A change was intended and has been effected: and judging from the express words of the governing clauses of section 7 and O. L there is no doubt in my mind that it was intended to extend the whole of the Code to Provincial Courts of Small Causes unless expressly provided for. The provisions of section 7 have to be reconciled with those of section 94 and that can only be done by treating interlocutory orders as meaning only such orders as are expressly said to be interlocutory orders in the Code, that is to say, those that are mentioned in O. XXXIX. That the Legislature had this in view is apparent also from the fact that in section 7 as also in O. XXXIX injunctions are treated as something other than interlocutory orders while in reality they are not so. I am of opinion that effect must also be given to the words "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" appearing in section 7, even at the risk of restricting the meaning of the expression "interlocutory orders" in section 94 to such orders as are mentioned as such in the Code and attributing to the Legislature a redundancy in the use of the word "other" in clause (e) thereof. In my opinion section 7 only excludes orders passed under clause (c) and clause (e) of section 94 and not under any of the other clauses thereof. I find it difficult to imagine that if the Legislature intended to deprive the Provincial Courts of Small Causes of the power to order attachment of moveables they could not think of a better way of expressing themselves. I am therefore of opinion that O. XXXVIII has not been excluded either by section 7 read with section 94 or by O. L. and that it is applicable to a Provincial Court of Small Causes.

It remains now to consider some of the difficulties that are said to follow from the acceptance of this interpretation. The principle that a Court which cannot attach primarily in execution of its decree cannot attach in anticipation of it which was applied in the case of Marthamma v. Kittu Sheragara (4) to the Code of 1859 in a case decided under Act XI of 1865 which provided by section 47 for the application of the provisions of that Code to Provincial Courts of Small Causes "so far as the same are or may be applicable," cannot have any appreciable force under the present enactments, the more especially as the immediate objects of the two kinds of attachment are widely different. No doubt a Provincial Court of Small Causes cannot deal with immoveables in execution of its decree, or order a sale of immoveables; nor can it be doubted that it cannot make an order of attachment of immoveable property to compel a witness to appear and that is so because it cannot order the sale thereof. The occasion for the exercise of these powers and the circumstances connected therewith, however, are so different from those relating to the power to order attachment of immoveables before judgment for protecting the plaintiffs' interest, that no analogy can be drawn from the exclusion of those powers. The objection as to the investigation and adjudication of claims, which an attachment may produce, is more substantial, but is there a real difficulty on that ground?

Order XXXVIII, r. 6 says that "where the defendant fails to show cause why he should not furnish security or fails to furnish the security required, within the time fixed by the Court, the Court may order that the property specified or such portion thereof as appears sufficient to satisfy any decree which may be passed in the suit be attached." The Court therefore under this rule makes an order that the property be attached. In order to make the attachment or to attach the property this order has got to be executed. Rule 7 says that "save as otherwise expressly provided, the attachment shall be made in the manner provided for the attachment of property in execution of a decree. If a Provincial Court of Small Causes makes an order of attachment before judgment in respect of immoveable property the order has to be executed under section 36 which lays down that "the provisions of this Code relating to the execution of decree shall so far as they are applicable be deemed to apply to the execution of orders." Under the provisions of section 38 and section 39 clause (d) the order should be sent to an ordinary Civil Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the immoveable property is situate, and that Court should, under the provisions of O. XXI which deals with execution of decrees and orders, proceed to execute it. That Court would then attach the immoveable property in accordance with r. 54 and investigate the claims, if any, under the provisions of r. 58 and the subsequent rules.

If the above procedure is followed, as I think it must under the Code, the objections as to investigations or adjudications of claims will lose all their force. As to the argument based on the absence of the right of appeal, orders of far greater importance passed by a Provincial Court of Small Causes are also not open to appeal; and in any event the suit itself being expected to be disposed of summarily no appreciable hardship is likely to be caused. As to the non-applicability of O. XXXIX, r. 6 it seems to be due to an omission on the part of the Legislature. In the Code of 1882 the provision was confined to moveable property which was the subject of a suit; in the Code of 1908 the words "or attached before judgment in such suit" were added, but no provision was made extending the application of the rule to Provincial Courts of Small

BARADA KANTA RAY V. MAIJUDDI.

Causes. The matter is not of any great consequence, for I take it that even a Provincial Court of Small Causes can always act under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, and pass such orders as may be necessary.

On the whole, I am of opinion, that O. XXXVIII, rr. 5 and 6 apply to the Provincial Courts of Small Causes and I would therefore answer the first question in the affirmative. The answer to the second question follows from the answer given to the first one and I would answer it by saying that the case of Kedarnath Paramanik v Hem Nath Karmakar (1) if it purported to lay down that a Provincial Small Cause Court can attach immoveable property and not merely make an order of attachment thereof, was not correctly decided, nor was the case of Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) correctly decided if it meant to lay down that no such order can be passed by a Provincial Court of Small Causes. In conclusion I should like to add that this is a matter to which the attention of the Legislature should be directed as early as possible in order that the defects pointed out above may be remedied.

Chotzner, J.—The question referred for the decision of the Full Bench is whether the Provincial Small Cause Court is competent to attach immoveable property before judgment.

That question was decided in the affirmative in the case of Kedarnath Paramanik v. Hem Nath Karmakar (1) and in the negative in the case of Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2). It may be conceded that while the former Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) was in force, such attachments were beyond the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. The procedure prescribed in section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) was regulated by the Second Schedule of the Code, which was also in conformity with the provisions of section 15 of the Act and the Second Schedule appended thereto, whereby all suits relating to immoveable property were comprehensively excluded from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court. Chapter XXXIV of the Code dealt with arrest and attachment before judgment except as regards immoveable property.

It has now to be considered what changes have been introduced into the procedure laid down in section 17 of the Small Cause Court Act by the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908).

It should be premised that no alteration has been made in the wording of the Small Cause Court Act so far as the Second Schedule and sections 15 and 17 are concerned, though in the case of the latter section it is plainly inapposite. In view, however, of section 158 of the Code, it must be taken to refer to section 7 and O. L. of the Code the schedule to which declares that certain of its provisions do not apply to Small Cause Courts. It will be noticed that in the Code of 1908 the Second Schedule of the Code of 1882 has disappeared, and that no new Schedule has been provided in its place. On the other hand sections 477 to 490 of the former Code are now with slight modification reproduced in O. XXXVIII, rr. 1-11 while section 491 reappears (again with slight modification) in section 95 of the new.

Order XXXVIII deals with "arrest and attachment before judgment." Rule 1 says: "Where at any stage of a suit other than a suit referred to in section 16, clauses (a) to (d) the Court is satisfied" (to put it broadly) as to any dishonest intention of the defendant in regard to the disposal of his property or person, it may issue a warrant for his arrest."

Section 16 lays down the Courts in which suits relating to immoveable property are to be instituted and ex-hypothesi excludes suits which are not cognizable by the Small Cause Court. It would follow therefore that a Small Cause Court is not competent to arrest a defendant in any suit other than one where the subject-matter is moveable property.

Rule 5 says: "Where at any stage of a suit, the Court is satisfied that the defendant is about to dispose of his property or remove it from the local limits of the Court, it may direct him to furnish security to produce and place it at the disposal of the Court, failing which it may, under r. 6, order it to be attached."

MOHAMMAD MUMTAZ ALI KHAN v. GANGA PERSHAD.

Now if it be correct that O. XXXVIII substantially represents Chapter XXXIV of the Code of 1882, there seems to be no good reason for importing into r. 5 a meaning which was specifically negatived in section 483 of that Code by extending the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court to attach immoveable property before judgment.

The difficulty in the way of this interpretation lies in the wording of section 94 (b) where the Court may order the attachment of any property and the Small Cause Court seems under section 7 (b) to be given the power of attaching such property before judgment. Section 7 moreover makes certain sections inapplicable and these include sections 94 and 95 so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders, but as Rankin, J., points out section 94 appears to refer entirely to interlocutory orders and even to call them so but the parts of this section intended to be excluded are apparently clauses (c) and (e).

On the other hand powers under section 94 are only conferred "if it is so prescribed" and if it is said that they are so prescribed under section 7 (b), it would seem to be inconsistent with clause (a) immediately preceding it, which excludes from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court so much of the body of the Code as relates to suits excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, the execution of decrees in such suits and the execution of decrees against immoveable property.

Again O. XVI, r. 10 prohibits the attachment of immoveable property by a Small Cause Court to enforce the attendance of a witness and O. XXI, r. 82 forbids the sale of such property by a Court of that description. It would therefore be anomalous that a Court, which has not the power of executing a decree by attachment of immoveable property after judgment, should have the power of attaching such property before judgment.

The conclusion, therefore, at which I arrive is that under the Code of 1908 there has been no departure from the principles underlying Chapter XXXIV of the Code of 1882, and that consequently the question referred should be decided in the negative.

Per Curiam.—The result is that the Reference will be answered in accordance with the opinion of the majority of the Judges constituting the Full Bench, and will therefore be answered in the manner stated in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice.

No order is made as to the costs of the Reference.

We direct that a printed copy of the judgments of the Full Bench be forwarded to the Government of India as early as possible.

Defendant selected some cloth in District B. and ordered it to be sent to District G. when he promised to purchase such pieces as should be selected by his wife. The cloth was sent accordingly. Some pieces were selected and the remainder returned with a payment of price. Subsequently other consignments of cloth were sent to G. either by parcel post or were taken there in person. In a suit brought at B. by the seller for the balance of price:

Held, that there was an implied contract to pay at B and the Court had jurisdiction to try the suit. [p. 123, col. 1.]

Mr. Hyder Husain, holding brief of Mr. M. Wasim, for the Applicant.

Mr. Zahoor Ahmad, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.—The applicant in this case is the defendant in a suit brought against him by some shop-keepers who live in Bahraich. The applicant defendant had visited the plaintiff's shop in Bahraich and selected some cloth and ordered it to be sent to his home in Utraula, Gonda District, where he promised to purchase such pieces as should be selected by the Rani. Some of the cloth was selected and the remainder was returned to Bahraich with a payment of Rs. 350. Subsequently other consignments of cloth were either sent by parcel post by the plaintiff to Utraula, or taken there in person. Eventually the plaintiff had to sue for the balance of the money due, and he filed a suit in Bahraich. The objection has been taken that the contract was made in Utraula and that the suit could only lie in the Gonda District. This objection was decided against the applicant by the learned Subordinate Judge. I have no doubt that, that decision is correct. It may be that the contract between the parties was not complete until the Rani had selected the cloth in Utraula. The cause of action, however, did not arise until the contract was broken, and that did not happen until there was a failure to pay. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that there was actually an express promise to make payment in Bahraich. Even if there was no express promise there was certainly an implied contract to make payment at Bahraich. The payments were not cash payments but credit payments (with the exception of the first one) and it certainly could not have been the intention of the parties that the plaintiff, who keeps his shop in Bahraich, should have to go all the way to Utraula for his money. In Suraj Kumar v. Gokal Chand (1) it was held that where no place of payment is specified either expressly or by implication the debtor must follow his creditor and pay where his creditor is. The applicant has here not been able to show either an express or implied contract to make payment at Utraula. There is, therefore, no force whatever in the application, which is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Suit for specific performance or damages—Damages, award of—Suit whether of small cause nature—Second appeal.

In deciding the question whether a suit is of a small cause nature or not, attention has to be paid to the nature of the suit as it was presented in the First Court and not to the subsequent shape that it may have taken as a result of the findings of the lower Courts. [p. 124, col. 1.]

A suit for specific performance of a contract relating to immoveable property or in the alternative for damages was decreed by awarding of Rs. 180 as damages, but was dismissed in appeal.

Held, that the suit was not one of a small cause nature within the meaning of section 100 of Civil Procedure Code and a second appeal, therefore, lay to the High Court against the decree. [ibid.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Anantapur, in A. S. No. 183 of 1920, preferred against a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Penukonda, in O. S. No. 890 of 1918.

Mr. A. Venkatarayaliah, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff is the appellant. Plaintiff's suit was for the enforcement of an agreement to sell and in consequence for the establishment of his right to four-ninths share in the zamin described in the schedule or in the alternative for damages. The learned Munsif gave him a decree for damages, but on appeal that has been set aside by the Subordinate Judge. This second appeal is against the decree dismissing the plaintiff's suit and is valued at Rs. 160; the damages disallowed by the lower Appellate Court.

Mr. Seshachariar, the respondents' Vakil, raised a preliminary objection that there is no second appeal in this case as the suit is one of a small cause nature for a sum below Rs. 500. In deciding the question whether a suit is a small cause nature or not, attention has to be paid to the nature of the suit as it was presented in the First Court and not to the subsequent shape that it may have taken as a result of the findings of the lower Courts. The suit in this case was clearly for the specific performance of a contract or in the alternative for damages.

Such a suit is not of a small cause nature. See Lakshmanan Das v. Anna (1), Rustomji Ardeshir v. Vinayak Gangadhar Bhat (2). I overrule the preliminary objection. Going to the merits the first question for consideration is whether the agreement of November, 1915, has been proved by the plaintiff. The facts relevant for the decision of the question may be thus shortly stated. The deceased brother of the 1st defendant, Thimmayya by name, agreed to convey the property to the plaintiff and the plaintiff is alleged to have given him the consideration for the transaction. The first defendant afterwards executed the agreement Exhibit B. He died in the course of the suit and after his death the other defendants Nos. 2 to 4, his children, have been brought on record as his legal representatives. Evidence has been given by the plaintiff as P. W. No. 1 in support of the facts of his case, and P. W. No. 2 proves Exhibit B. These witnesses have not been cross-examined by the defendants. All the same the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the contract has not been proved by the plaintiff. The fact that the witnesses have not been cross-examined by the defendants cannot in any way affect the truth of the plaintiff's case. The question is whether from the plaintiff's evidence it becomes clear that there was an agreement as alleged by him in his plaint. The learned Judge says; "I cannot uphold the arguments of respondents' Vakil to the contrary as there is an utter absence of proved cogent circumstances upon which the question of first defendant having been a party to Exhibit B in a representative capacity cannot be decided." I believe what he means to say in this sentence is that there may be evidence given by the plaintiff's witnesses in support of his case but he is not prepared to act upon that evidence. The plaintiff is an interested witness speaking about facts which are in his favour and the Subordinate Judge has selected not to believe him though he had specifically stated so in his judgment. In hearing second appeal I am precluded from weighing the evidence which has not been believed by the lower Appellate Court. I have, therefore, to dismiss the second appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which have given rise to this application are these. In Suit No. 468 of 1921 filed by the plaintiff, the defendant was represented by a Pleader, a written statement was filed, and the case was adjourned from time to time when the defendant was absent. The case was ultimately fixed for hearing on September 7, 1921, when the Pleader was present in the Court. The defendant was absent. At that time the Pleader did not ask the Court to adjourn the case, nor did he state to the Court whether he had any instructions to go on with the case but in fact he took no part in the conduct of the suit. The result was that when the plaintiff's evidence was recorded, the Court proceeded to give judgment and passed a decree on that day. It is stated in the judgment that the defendant does not appear to contest the suit.

Thereafter the defendant made an application to the Trial Court on the basis that it was an ex parte decree and prayed that it should be set aside as he was absent for sufficient cause. He alleged that he was not represented because his Pleader had no proper instructions. In other words, he contended that he did not appear on the date of hearing by a Pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit within the meaning of clause (b) of rule 1 of Order V. of the Civil Procedure Code. The Trial Court rejected this application holding that the case was not decided ex parte because the defendant's Pleader was present in the Court at the hearing. The learned Judge further observed:—

"He never said he had no instructions to conduct the case. After framing the issues the case was fixed for evidence. On that date the defendant's Pleader was present but he did not say that he was not going to conduct the case. Under the circumstances I do not think it was an ex parte hearing. I need not go on with the merits of the case as I am dismissing the application summarily."

From this order the defendant appealed to the District Court, but that appeal was dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11. Apparently the defendant appealed from the decree also, and that appeal which was heard on the same day, was also dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11.

The defendant has now applied to this Court for having the order of the Trial Court set aside, and to have his application heard and decided on the merits. He has also preferred a second appeal to this Court, which is at present pending. The judgment given on September 7, does not in terms indicate whether the learned Judge purported to act under r. 2 or r. 3 of O. XVII. The judgment in term states that the defendant does not appear to contest the suit, and the defendant's allegation is that his Pleader was not properly instructed. It is clear that if the defendant is able to make good his allegation that the Pleader was not duly instructed, the hearing of the case would be ex parte, even though the Pleader was present in Court. If, however, the defendant appeared properly as required by r. 1 of O. V, that is, by a Pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, the hearing would not be ex parte. This question has not been adverted to in the judgments of either of the lower Courts. It seems to us that unless it is determined that the defendant appeared by a Pleader duly instructed, the disposal of the suit would be ex parte, and in that case it would be competent to the defendant to make an application with a view to show that there was sufficient cause for his not appearing on the date of the disposal. If, however, the defendant is unable to prove that the Pleader was not duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, the hearing would not be ex parte, and in that case his application to set aside the decree, on the basis that it is an ex parte decree, could not be entertained.

As the Trial Court has not considered this question on the merits, we must send back the case to that Court for disposal according to law. We accordingly make the Rule absolute, set aside the orders of the lower Courts and send back the application for disposal according to law. Costs of this application and of the lower Appellate Court to be costs in the application.

MUSAMMAT KESARBAI AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
versus

JAMADAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—
RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Occupancy rights, acquisition of, by proprietor—Proprietary rights, acquisition of, by occupancy tenant—Effect of such acquisitions—C P Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 46(5)—Document transferring occupancy rights cannot be registered—Registration illegal even with regard to transferable property—Estoppel on point of law—Transfer invalid—Duty of Court.

The acquisition by a proprietor of occupancy rights or the acquisition by an occupancy tenant of proprietary rights amounts to the same thing, as in either case the occupancy and proprietary rights are, after the transfer, combined in the same person. A co-sharer who purchases the holding of an absolute occupancy tenant becomes himself an absolute occupancy tenant. That is to say, when the rights of a co-sharer and an occupancy or absolute occupancy tenant coalesce in the same person, he is an occupancy or absolute occupancy tenant, according to the nature of the tenancy. [p. 128, col. 1.]

If an occupancy tenant purchases the land under his occupancy, his occupancy rights are not extinguished and he does not become an absolute owner of the land his khudkashi, unless he becomes the sole proprietor of the patti of the village in which the occupancy tenancy land is situated. [p. 127, col. 2.]

A Registration Officer has no power to register a mortgage-deed purporting to mortgage occupancy rights which cannot be mortgaged, but if such a document is registered, it is to be regarded as not registered at all. And even if the deed includes some transferable property, besides the occupancy rights, its registration is illegal and must be ignored in toto. [p. 127, col. 1.]

Daji Vithol Dhok v. Moreshwar Venkatesh Gharpurey, 1 N. L. R. 112 and Nilkant v. Ghulya, 42 Ind. Cas. 384; 13 N. L. R. 165, referred to.

The rule that the grantor cannot derogate from his grant, does not operate in a case where the transaction is expressly forbidden by Statute. [p. 127, col. 2.]

There is no estoppel on a point of law. [ibid.]

Govind v. Chandrabhaga, 34 Ind. Cas. 675, 12 N. L. R. 100 and Bai Parvati v. Dayabai Manchharam, 58 Ind. Cas. 266; 44 B. 488 at p. 492; 22 Bom. L. R. 704, referred to.

There is no rule of law which can prevent a party from asking the Court to hold that a particular transaction which, as a matter of fact, is invalid should be held to be invalid. In fact, it is the duty of the Court as soon as the invalidity of a transaction is pointed out, if it is satisfied that there is such an invalidity, to set aside the transaction. [ibid.]

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Bhandara, dated the 10th October 1923, in Civil Suit No. 29 of 1923.

Sir B. K. Bose, for the Appellants;

Mr. D. T. Mangalmoorti, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued to recover Rs 8,200 odd due on a registered mortgage deed executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in favour of the plaintiffs' firm on 11th May, 1912, and for foreclosure of the property mortgaged. The defendant No. 3 is the second son of defendant No. 1 and was joined as having an interest in the mortgaged property. The consideration of the mortgage was Rs. 2,000 of which Rs. 1,600 were borrowed for payment of part of the price of a village share purchased the same day and Rs. 400 for household expenses. The village share purchased was in Mauza Sarsoli. The property mortgaged includes the share so purchased with 22.81 acres of land, which was formerly held by the mortgagors as occupancy tenants but which is now said to have become the khudkasht land of the defendants by virtue of the purchase of the share. It is this occupancy land which gave rise to the difficulty in the present suit.

The First Court, the Subordinate Judge, Bhandara, held that the land after the purchase remained the occupancy land of the defendants and could not be mortgaged under the law, and as the mortgage deed purported to transfer occupancy rights which could not be mortgaged, under section 46 (5) of the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1898 the Registering Officer was not empowered to admit the mortgage to registration and the result was that the document must be regarded as not registered at all as held in Daji Vithol Dhok v. Moreshwar Venkatesh Gharpurey (1). He further held that no decree could be passed for the rest of the mortgaged property, after excluding the occupancy holding the inclusion of which made the registration illegal, following Nilkant v. Ghulya (2) in which it was held that a registration which had been effected in direct contravention of any provisions of law must be ignored in toto. He, therefore, held that the plaintiffs' mortgage-deed was wholly inoperative and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The question, therefore, on which this appeal depends is as to the nature of the occupancy land after it had been purchased by the occupancy tenant from the original proprietor. There would be little difficulty in dealing with it were it not for the fact that the occupancy tenant did not become the sole proprietor.

If the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had become the sole proprietors of the patti of the village in which the occupancy tenancy land was situated, there could not be any doubt that their tenancy rights would have merged in their proprietary rights and they would have become absolute owners and the land would have become their khudkasht the occupancy rights being extinguished: cf. Sakharam Sonar v. Madho Rao (3) where it was held that if an occupancy tenant purchases the entire proprietary rights in a village there can be no question but that the occupancy rights are extinguished. The present case is complicated by the fact that the original proprietor of the patti, Vithoba, sold half of it to the defendants and half to one Antu Patel on the same day and thus Antu and the defendants became co-sharers in the mahal.

It is contended that the mortgagors described the property as khudkasht in the mortgage deed and the plaintiffs accepted the description. No question of estoppel, however, arises as the misrepresentation, if any, is of law and there can be no estoppel on the point of law. I need not quote any authority on this point: this Court's ruling is Gorind v. Chandrabhaga (4).

It has been contended that the grantor cannot derogate from his grant. But I do not think that this rule can operate in a case where the transaction is expressly forbidden by Statute. In Bai Parvati v. Dayabhai Mancharam (5) it was held that there is no rule of law which can prevent a party from asking the Court to hold that a particular transaction which, as a matter of fact, is invalid, should be held to be invalid. The same case lays down that there can be no estoppel on a point of law, and that it is the duty of the Court as soon as the invalidity of a transfer is pointed out, if it is satisfied that there is such an invalidity, to set aside the document. There is, therefore, nothing in law to prevent the defendant from contending that the mortgage was invalid because the land could not be alienated.

It is clear, that the acquisition by a proprietor of occupancy rights or the acquisition by an occupancy tenant of proprietary rights amounts to the same thing, as in either case the occupancy and proprietary rights are, after the transfer, combined in the same person. In the present case after the purchase the defendants became possessed of the rights of a co-sharer along with Antu, while retaining their occupancy rights. Their position, therefore, is precisely that defined in Jairam v. Baiji (6) which lays down that a co-sharer who purchases the holding of an absolute occupancy tenant becomes himself an absolute occupancy tenant. That is to say, when the rights of a co-sharer and an occupancy or absolute occupancy tenant coalesce in the same person he is an occupancy or absolute occupancy tenant, according to the nature of the tenancy. The case of Ramdayal v. Gulabai Bai (7) lays down what course may be adopted by the other co-sharers in such a case. We are not, however, concerned with this in the present case because the mortgage-deed and sale-deed were admittedly executed the same day and, therefore, nothing had happened to change the nature of the holding. Therefore, at the date of the mortgage the holding was occupancy and would so remain until the co-sharers (in this case defendants and Antu) come to some agreement that it should be treated otherwise. In this case there was no agreement at the date of the sale and mortgage. Consequently the land at the date of the mortgage was occupancy land and could not be mortgaged and the view of the lower Court is correct.

The appeal is consequently dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Provident Fund money is exempt from Probate or Administration duty, as it passes to a nominee, and even in the absence of an Administrator it does not form an asset of the estate of the deceased.

Mr. Erakshah, for the Applicants.

ORDER.—Mr. Erakshah appears for the petitioners. The Collector of Nagpur reports that the furniture is worth Rs. 340 and this valuation is accepted. It appears that the matter of the liability to duty of a sum standing at the credit of a deceased person in the Eastern Bengal Railways Provident Fund was referred by the Board of Revenue of Bengal to the Advocate-General, and the Board held with him that Provident Fund money is exempt from duty and that this Administration has nothing whatever to do with the fund which passes to the nominee even if there is no administrator. It does not form an asset of the estate. In this I concur but Mr. Erakshah states that the Railway Company perhaps pro majore cautela, ordinarily refuses to pay this money without Letters of Administration. The amount will, therefore, be mentioned among the assets but no Court-fee will be payable in respect of it. The total assets for that purpose will be

The statement of a witness recorded by the Committing Magistrate and transferred under section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code to the Sessions record is the "testimony" of a witness within the meaning of section 157 of the Evidence Act, and therefore, a statement made by the witness before the Police is admissible to corroborate the statement made in Court. Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Hissar, dated the 14th December 1923.

Mr. Nanwa Mal, for the Appellant.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Scott-Smith, J.—Mam Chand, appellant, has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Hissar of the murder of Bhiman, his cousin, on or about the night of the 13th February, 1922, and has been sentenced to death. The pedigree-table from which the relationship of the appellant to the deceased will appear is as follows:—

HIRA

Mittar Sain

Ram Singh

Bed Ram

Mam Chand (accused.)

Chajju

Dhan Singh

Ram Lal

Bhiman
(deceased)Chet Ram
(Fakir)

According to the prosecution, the motive for the murder was to get possession of Ram Lal's land which was in the possession of Bhiman. Ram Lal shortly before his death made a gift of 7½ bighas of land to Mam Chand, but died before mutation was attested. Bhiman appeared and claimed the land as Ram Lal's heir and mutation was effected in his favour. According to the evidence Mam Chand did not contest the mutation in Bhiman's favour and the two of them lived quite happily together in Mam Chand's house. I therefore agree with the learned Sessions Judge that there is no clear evidence in this case of any motive for the murder on the part of Mam Chand. It appears from the evidence of Ram Chandar, lambardar (P. W. No. 5), that when Bhiman did not appear in the village for 2 or 3 days, he asked Mam Chand where Bhiman had gone to. Mam Chand said that he had gone to Delhi to see the jalsa there. A few days later people returned from the jalsa, but Bhiman did not come back. The witness again asked Mam Chand who replied that Bhiman might have gone to see his brother Chet Ram who is a bairagi and lives in Jasana. No trace of him was found there, and shortly afterwards Mam Chand disappeared from the village. The lambardar then on the 28th February, reported the disappearance of Bhiman at the Police Station. On the 1st March, the Sub-Inspector came to the village and was told by Musammât Nihali (P. W. No. 2), the wife of Mam Chand, that her husband had killed Bhiman and buried him inside the kotha. The Sub-Inspector sent information of this to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Palwal, and on the 3rd March, the latter together with the Civil Surgeon came to the village, and the place pointed out by Musammât Nihali was dug up and the corpse of Bhiman was discovered buried there. There were numerous wounds on the body which indicated that he had been killed with blows of a sharp-edged weapon. A search was made for Mam Chand who could not be found, and he was not arrested until the 9th September, 1923, on which day he presented a complaint (Exhibit P. S.) (page 8 of the paper-book) in the Court of the District Magistrate, Gurgaon, in which he accused

MAM CHAND V. EMPEROR.

Ram Chandar and others of the murder of Bhiman.

The chief witness for the prosecution is Musammam Nihali. In her statement (Exhibit P. N.) (page 9 of the paper-book) made before the Committing Magistrate, she at first said that she did not know anything about the death of Bhiman, though she admitted that his corpse was recovered from the corner of his house. When further questioned she admitted that her husband had killed Bhiman with a gandasa and had then buried the body in the kotha. She resiled from this statement at the trial, and the statement made by her before the Committing Magistrate was put in evidence under the provisions of section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In order to corroborate this statement, a statement made by her before the Police (Exhibit P. F.) (printed on pages 4 and 5 of the paper-book) was proved and put in evidence. A preliminary question arises whether it was admissible to prove the statement (Exhibit P. F.) in order to corroborate that made by the witness before the Committing Magistrate and transferred under the provisions of section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 157 of the Indian Evidence Act says that in order to corroborate the testimony of a witness, any former statement made by such witness relating to the same fact, at or about the time when the fact took place, or before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact, may be proved. Now, it is not denied that the statement (Exhibit P. F.) might be proved in order to corroborate the testimony of Musammam Nihali, but the question is whether the statement of Musammam Nihali transferred under section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code is the "testimony" of a witness within the meaning of section 157 of the Evidence Act. Section 288, Criminal Procedure Code, lays down that the evidence of a witness duly taken in the presence of the accused before the Committing Magistrate may, in the discretion of the Presiding Judge, if such witness is produced and examined be treated as evidence in the case. It was held by a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Velliah Kone v. Emperor (1), that the object and effect of section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code is to place the deposition in the committal enquiry on exactly the same footing as the deposition in the Sessions Court, and that such a deposition is "testimony" within the meaning of section 157 of the Evidence Act, which a prior statement by the witness is admissible in evidence to corroborate. I agree fully with the decision in that case and would hold that the evidence of the witness Musammam Nihali recorded before the Committing Magistrate is, by the operation of section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code, just as much evidence in the case as that recorded at the trial in the Sessions Court and is, therefore, "testimony" within the meaning of section 157 of the Indian Evidence Act. A Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Jadub Das (2), said that it had been long settled by the decisions of that Court that unless there was something to show the truth of the former statement it should not be preferred to the statement made subsequently in the Sessions Court, that is to say, there should be something to corroborate that statement on some material point. I do not see in what better way the statement made by Musammam Nihali in the Committing Magistrate's Court can be shown to be correct than by the proof of a former statement made by her to the same effect. The part of the statement (Exhibit P. F.) on page 5, lines 31 to 49 of the paper-book, corroborates the statement made by her before the Committing Magistrate, printed at page 9, lines 26 to 40. No doubt the evidence of such a witness must be received with great caution, and probably it would not be safe to base a conviction upon it unless it were corroborated by other evidence.

DWARKADAS HARIDAS v. AMBALAL GANPATRAM.

It is clear from the evidence of the doctor that there was blood on the walls of Mam Chand's house in which the body was found buried. It is also proved that Mam Chand falsely stated that Bhiman had gone away to Delhi. It is further proved that a few days later Mam Chand absconded from the village and was not seen again for more than 18 months. He and Bhiman were living together in the house where Bhiman's dead body was found buried, and it cannot be believed that Bhiman could have been murdered and his body buried there without Mam Chand being privy to it.

I, therefore, consider that there is ample evidence in this case on which to base the conviction of Mam Chand for the murder of Bhiman, and I would accordingly dismiss the appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 54, 60, 61, 171, scope of—Magistrate demanding bail from accused on Police request to appear before another Court—Order, propriety of—Criminal breach of trust—Offence where triable.

The precautions laid down in sections 54, 60 and 61 of the Criminal Procedure Code seem to be designed to secure that within not more than 24 hours of the arrest of an accused person, some Magistrate shall have seisin of what is going on and some knowledge of the nature of the charges against the accused, however, incomplete the information may be. [p. 133, col. 1.]

The Secretary of a limited Company carrying on business at Ahmedabad presented a petition of complaint before the Deputy Inspector-General of Police of the Poona Criminal Investigation Department against one D., alleging that D., as commission agent of the Company in Calcutta committed criminal breach of trust in respect of sale proceeds of the goods belonging to the Company.

The C. I. D. Officer appointed to investigate into the matter obtained a search warrant from a First Class Magistrate at Ahmedabad for the books and documents, came to Calcutta and in execution thereof took charge of the books, etc. from the house and office of D. after making a search list. Having arrested D. under the provisions of section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code, he produced him before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, asking that D. might be forwarded under proper escort to the First Class Magistrate, Ahmedabad. On D. applying for bail the Chief Presidency Magistrate granted bail for Rs. 50,000 "to appear before the First Class Magistrate, Ahmedabad" on the date specified. D. thereupon moved the High Court.

Held, (1) that the charge was triable only in Calcutta where the offence alleged under section 403, Penal Code, was committed, [p. 133, col. 1.]

(2) that the Chief Presidency Magistrate ought to have refused to act on the mere statement of the investigating Police Officer but should have required him to produce a warrant from Ahmedabad, releasing D. in the meantime on bail to appear when called on before himself. [p. 133, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—One Shantilal Lajjashankar, the Secretary of a limited Company carrying on business at Ahmedabad in the Bombay Presidency, presented a petition of complaint in, I think, February or March last before the Deputy Inspector-General of Police of the Poona Criminal Investigation Department of the Bombay Presidency against Dwarkadas Haridas of Calcutta. Ambalal Ganpatram, an Inspector of Police, the C. I. D., Poona, was directed by the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, C. I. D., Poona, to get the case registered at Ahmedabad and to investigate into the matter. Ambalal Ganpatram had the complaint recorded in the Police Station of Kalupur in Ahmedabad City and took up the investigation. The complaint was filed by the complainant as representative of the limited Company and on its behalf. The complaint alleged that Dwarkadas had been acting since 1920 as commission agent of the limited Company and that as such he was entrusted with yarn and cloth bales belonging to the Company for sale at Calcutta, that he was responsible for the value of the goods sent and that it was his duty to remit the money representing the value of the goods sold and to retain the unsold balance of the goods. It further alleged that Dwarkadas in July 1922 professed with the sanction of the mill's agent (who was one Lalbhai Tricumlal) to have made a contract for the sale of 601 bales at certain rates which he intimated to the Company by a letter of the 24th July 1922 and that in pursuance of the intimation the Company despatched 595 bales between the 1st August 1922 and the 23rd November 1922 and that Dwarkadas submitted stock-sheets from time to time acknowledging receipt of the 595 bales in pursuance of the contract.

It further alleges that the accused was responsible for Rs. 2,97,292-15-6, the value of the bales but that with the intention of causing wrongful loss to the Company and wrongful gain to himself the accused represented to the Company that the person who had contracted to purchase the bales was unwilling to take delivery and that thereupon it was agreed that the contract rates were to be charged for 300 bales and for the balance the revised rates but that the accused refused to give the name of the contracting party, that the accused later represented that the contracting party refused to take delivery and that he must sell by public auction or private contract and that he subsequently reported having effected private sales of 313 bales and public auction of 5 bales, that the accused according to his accounts had received Rs. 2,53,314-2-0 for the 595 bales and had remitted Rs. 1,86,296-4-9 only, that on the 13th February 1923, the accused sent what purported to be a copy of the original contract signed by one Ram Chandra Baijnath. The complaint further alleged that in July 1922, there was no such firm in Calcutta and that it was a fictitious name and that the accused had put forward a bogus contracting party and thereby induced the Company to revise and reduce its rates. The complaint then charges dishonest and fraudulent misappropriation by the accused of a sum of Rs. 67,017-13-3 admitted by the accused in his accounts to have been received and charges him with an offence under section 409 of the Indian Penal Code and with such other offences as might be disclosed in the evidence and asks for seizure of the books of account relating to the sales and of other books and documents bearing on the case, for the arrest of the accused in respect of an offence under section 409, Indian Penal Code, and that a Police Officer may be deputed to Calcutta for the purpose.

Ambalal Ganpatram states that in the course of the investigation he examined the complainant, Lalbhai Tricumlal and other witnesses at Ahmedabad and the correspondence and accounts. On the 1st March, he obtained a search warrant from a First Class Magistrate at Ahmedabad for the books, documents, etc., and came to Calcutta and in execution thereof took charge of the books, etc., from the house and office of Dwarkadas after making a search list and arrested Dwarkadas under the provisions of section 54, Criminal Procedure Code, on the 5th March and produced him on the 6th before the Chief Presidency Magistrate asking that he might be forwarded under proper escort to the First Class Magistrate, Ahmedabad.

In making the application Ambalal Ganpatram produced a letter in the following terms:—

Dwarkadas applied for bail to the Chief Presidency Magistrate who made the following order on the 6th March.

"Accused Dwarkadas Haridas. Petition for bail filed. Grant bail Rs. 50,000 to appear before the First Class Magistrate, Ahmedabad on 16th March 1924. Section 409, Criminal Procedure Code."

I do not think that the Chief Presidency Magistrate was right in making this order. There is no doubt that under section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code a Police Officer may arrest without warrant in the case of a cognizable offence but under section 60 he is bound without unnecessary delay to take or send the person arrested before the Magistrate and under section 61 this must be done within 24 hours. The precautions laid down in these sections seem to me designed to secure that within not more than 24 hours some Magistrate shall have seisin of what is going on and some knowledge of the nature of the charges against the accused, however incomplete the information may be. The order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate has given the go-by to any such safeguards. Ambalal Ganpatram, the investigating Police Officer is the only person so far (if we except the Deputy Inspector General of Police, C. I. D., Poona) who knows anything about the matter and it does not seem to me right, or in consonance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code that on his mere ipso facto Dwarkadas should be hailed from Calcutta to Ahmedabad to answer a charge under section 409, Indian Penal Code, which upon the facts before us in accordance with the decisions of this Court is triable only in Calcutta where the offence alleged under section 409, Indian Penal Code, was committed.

I think, as I have already said, that the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate was wrong and I think that he should have refused to act upon the mere statement of the investigating Police Officer but required him to produce a warrant from Ahmedabad, releasing Dwarkadas in the meantime on bail to appear when called on before himself. If this course had been adopted it is accompanied by various safeguards, for the Police Officer would have had to satisfy the Court issuing the warrant of the nature of the offence charged and that it could be enquired into and tried in Ahmedabad. The Court would have to so decide bearing in mind the provisions of section 177, Criminal Procedure Code which provide that every offence shall ordinarily be enquired into and tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed.

Various other questions were raised before us—notably that the facts show that the whole matter was really a civil dispute and not of a criminal nature. I think there is considerable force in this contention having regard to the previous dealings between the Company and Dwarkadas and between Dwarkadas and Lalbhai and the Company. It is too noticeable that for the purpose of these proceedings the complainant accepts Dwarkadas' accounts as correct and it would appear from the letter of the 24th July 1922 from Dwarkadas to the Company which is exhibited to the complainant's affidavit that the contracts referred to in the complaint were made when Lalbhai, the Company's agent, was in Calcutta and presumably with his knowledge and assent. This appears to give the go-by to a good deal of the complaint and to do away with any question of cheating. These matters certainly raise an apprehension that these proceedings are being used to put pressure on Dwarkadas and that the Criminal Courts are being invoked in respect of matters which should have been litigated in a civil suit on the Original Side of this Court.

In the view we take it is not necessary for us to decide this question and I feel some doubt as to our jurisdiction to do so in these proceedings: One other matter I should refer to, namely, that it is said the facts disclose a case of cheating which under the circumstances would be triable at Ahmedabad. This we need not pursue as all along the offence charged in the complaint specifically and upon the facts has not been one of cheating but of criminal breach of trust; moreover it looks, if the letter of the 24th July 1922 is accurate that no question of cheating arises. For the reasons already stated I think the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate is wrong and that it cannot stand and should be set aside and the bail bond cancelled.

Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859), s. 2 B—Frivolous or vexatious complaint—Compensation—Notice to show cause.

An order under section 2B of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act directing compensation to be paid in respect of a frivolous or vexatious complaint cannot be legally made without calling on the complainant to show cause against the order.

Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Benares.

REFERRING ORDER.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by Babu Shri Krishan Kumar Sahib, Magistrate, First Class, in a case under Act XIII of 1859, as amended by Act XII of 1920. The applicant made a complaint against Ram Nandan under section 2 of that Act on the ground that Ram Nandan had received an advance of Rs. 70 and had abandoned his work without re-paying the advance. The learned Magistrate held that the contract was that Rs. 45-0 of the advance of Rs. 70 should be paid to Ram Nandan, and that the balance should be paid to Narotam Sahu to whom Ram Nandan, already owed Rs. 65-11-0. No money was paid to Narotam Sahu, and accordingly Ram Nandan ceased to work for the applicant. On these facts the learned Magistrate found that the charge made was vexatious and accordingly ordered that the applicant should pay Rs. 20 as compensation.

The facts as found by the learned Magistrate are not in dispute before me. It is, however, urged that the provisions of section 2B of the Act have not been complied with. This section provides that in cases where the Magistrate considers the complaint to have been frivolous or vexatious, he should call upon the complainant to show cause why an order for compensation should not be passed against him. If after having considered such explanation he considers that compensation should be awarded to the defendant the Magistrate is to make an order awarding compensation, and to give his reasons therefor.

In the present case it is clear that this procedure has not been followed. The order for compensation is an integral part of the judgment, and it seems clear from the record that the first intimation which the complainant had was the order directing that compensation should be paid. Nor are any definite reasons given for making this order, although it is true that a perusal of the judgment as a whole clearly shows the reasons which must have led the learned Magistrate to his decision. It is clear that the order complained against, being made without the complainant having had an opportunity of objecting, and not being accompanied by a clear statement of the reasons which induced the Magistrate to make the order, is illegal. Accordingly under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I send the record to the Hon'ble High Court for orders, with a recommendation that the order directing the payment of Rs. 20 compensation be quashed.

ORDER.—This is a Reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Benares in a case under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act, 1859, as amended by Act

PARMESHWAR V. EMPEROR.

XII of 1920. It is admitted that the Magistrate omitted, before ordering the complainant to pay compensation under section 2B of the Act, to call on him to show cause. I accordingly set aside the order of compensation passed and direct the Magistrate to do now what he should have done in the first instance, namely, to call upon the complainant to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay compensation. The Magistrate will then pass final orders after considering any cause that may have been shown. The amount of compensation, if already deposited, will remain in deposit pending the decision of the case.

Approver, evidence of—Retracted confession of co-accused—Conviction for murder—Independent corroboration, necessity of.

It is unsafe to convict an accused for murder on the testimony of an approver and the retracted confession of a co-accused, especially when they are in conflict with each other and there is no independent corroboration. [p. 137, col. 1.]

Appeals against an order of the First Additional Sessions Judge at Bara Banki, dated the 12th January 1924.

Messrs. St. G. Jackson and R. F. Bahadurji, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Debi Din Ahir and Parmeshwar Pasi have been convicted by First Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow under section 302, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to death. They appeal and the record is also before us for confirmation of the sentence.

The case for the prosecution was that these two men along with Ram Bakhsh Pasi and Kallu Julaha had murdered one Lachman Pasi. The motive for the crime was alleged to be that Parmeshwar had been carrying on an intrigue with Musammatt Jasoda who had for some years been living with Lachman as his wife. Lachman discovered their relations and forbade Jasoda to meet Parmeshwar any more. The latter determined to get rid of Lachman and persuaded the others to join in making away with him. The crime was committed on the night of the 8th of September but was not discovered till the 12th when a corpse was found floating in a well at Seongi Purwa and was identified as Lachman's by his brother Bhagwant. The body was too decomposed for certain recognition and Bhagwant was only able to state that he believed it to be that of Lachman but was not sure. Later on in Court he became more positive and declared that he had recognised it with certainty. When found the body was wrapped in a sack and was clothed in a dhoti and angaucha. These have been identified as Lachman's by Musammatt Jasoda who claimed to recognise the former by some holes which she said had been caused by burning and the latter by a patch which she had herself sewn on to it. The learned Counsel for the appellants has questioned the identification of the corpse but we do not think that there is any sufficient reason to doubt that it is that of the missing man. The first clue obtained by the Police was from the witness Sohan Lal who informed the Sub-Inspector that he had seen Parmeshwar and Debi going towards the well where the body was afterwards found at 6 gharis after dark on the night of the 8th September. Parmeshwar and Debi were arrested on the 15th September. On the following day Debi made a statement which was recorded under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, by a Magistrate who afterwards committed the accused for trial. He named three other men Ram Bakhsh, Puttu and Kallu as having taken part in the crime and stated that Ram Bakhsh, who is the father of Parmeshwar, was sent to fetch Lachman from his house on the pretext of wanting him to join in committing a theft. It may be mentioned here that Lachman and Parmeshwar were both registered Pasis, and all the accused are men of more or less notoriously bad character. In consequence of Debi's confession the other men named by him were arrested and all five were sent up by the Police for trial. After the first witness's statement had been recorded by the Committing Magistrate Puttu announced that if he was given a pardon he would disclose the real facts of the case. A pardon was tendered to him and he was made an approver. Before the Committing Magistrate Debi retracted the statement which he had previously made, and in the Sessions Court he denied that he had never made it. He pleaded that he had been suffering from boils on the foot at the time when the murder was committed and that he had been implicated owing to the enmity of Kunwar Bahadur Singh with his employer Lalta Bakhsh. The Sub-Inspector arrested him at the instigation of Kunwar Bahadur and the latter made him drunk just before he was taken to the Magistrate's house. As has been remarked by the learned Sessions Judge the case hinges on the value to be placed on the evidence of Puttu and the retracted confession of Debi. The only corroboration of these consists in the evidence of Sohan Lal, of Musammatt Jasoda and of one Thakur Prasad, who deposes to having seen Debi, Parmeshwar and Lachman going together towards the south from the direction of Mauza Gaura 3 or 4 gharis after night-fall. The learned Judge has considered that this is sufficient to bring the crime home to Parmeshwar and Debi but has acquitted the other two. We are unable to agree with this view. The learned Judge himself admits that the confession of Debi has little value for the prosecution. It differs in one important particular from the statement of Puttu in that Debi asserts that it was Ram Bakhsh who fetched Lachman from his house while according to Puttu this was done by Parmeshwar and Debi. This assertion is in conflict with the statement of Thakur Prasad that he saw Debi, Parmeshwar and Lachman going along together. Further another very suspicious circumstance referred to by the learned Judge is that Debi volunteered the information that while he and Parmeshwar were going towards the scene of the murder they met Sohan Lal. It will be remembered that it was from Sohan Lal's statement that he had seen Parmeshwar and Debi together that night that the Police obtained their first clue. In their account of the murder Puttu and Debi agree very closely. They say that Parmeshwar struck at Lachman's neck from behind with a banka, that Lachman stood up, that the rest of them at once flung themselves upon him and that Parmeshwar then struck him a second blow on the neck. According to Debi, however, this was sufficient to kill Lachman, though Parmeshwar after adding in his first deposition the detail that "the neck almost left the trunk" goes on to say "we threw him down and pressed him till he died."

Both statements agree in this that only two blows were struck with the banka. The medical evidence, however, shows that there was one wound on the tip of the right shoulder and a second long one across the front and the upper part of the neck which in the opinion of the Civil Surgeon was probably the result of two cuts. From this it would seem that actually three blows must have been dealt though no doubt to the lay eye only two would have been apparent. This would seem to indicate that Debi and Puttu were not describing what they had actually seen, but what they might have been expected to see. Again in cross-examination in the Sessions Court Puttu said "Lachman's neck was half cut through by the first blow", but as we have seen the first blow must have been that which fell on the tip of the shoulder. Further on Puttu definitely stated "Lachman was not hit except with the banka twice." There are one or two curious variations in the two statements made by Puttu. Before the Committing Magistrate he said that the first proposal that he should join in a murder was made to him at noon by

VARAJ LALL V. EMPEROR.

Parmeshwar and Debi and that the crime was committed that very same night. In the Sessions Court he said in examination-in-chief that the first suggestion was made the day before the murder and that he at first refused to take part in it. In cross-examination he stated that it was in afternoon 8 days before the murder that he was first approached, and denied that he then refused. Three days later they had another meeting in a lane and discussed the plan for the murder. Musammât Jasoda's evidence has been relied on to prove the liaison which has been put forward as a motive for the murder but in the Sessions Court she denied that such a liaison had ever existed. No doubt this change of front may be due, as suggested by the learned Judge, to a desire to shield Parmeshwar, but it has the effect of considerably diminishing the value of her evidence. The inherent improbability of the story that Parmeshwar should have been selected to persuade Lachman to join in an imaginary theft only a short time after Lachman had detected Parmeshwar's intrigue with his wife has been commented on by the learned Judge. One very curious fact about the confession of Debi may be mentioned. This is that though it was recorded by the Magistrate who afterwards committed the case that officer evidently attached so little importance to it that he did not even question Debi about it when recording his statement in Court and the prosecution ignored it altogether. The confession was only discovered as the Judge says, "during the trial more or less by chance." Another detail in Puttu's statement which points to a desire to secure the corroboration of Sohan Lal is his story that when they were all on their way to the place where the murder was committed Parmeshwar and Debi went round by haura chauki. Puttu himself admitted that he did not know why they should have done this and the only possible explanation is that it was to give them an opportunity of falling in with Sohan Lal. We feel grave doubts as to the statements of both Debi and Puttu and we do not consider that the corroboration forthcoming is all adequate. We, accordingly, allow the appeals of Debi and Parmeshwar, set aside their convictions and sentences and direct that they be set at liberty.

Motor Vehicles Act (VIII of 1914), s. 11, rules framed under—Calcutta Rules, Part II, rr. 3, 16—Driving lorry at excessive speed—Owner of lorry, whether liable

Where a particular intent or state of mind is not of the essence of an offence, a master can be made criminally liable for his servant's acts, if an act is expressly prohibited, but not otherwise, and he cannot be so made liable if the act provides for liability for permitting and causing a certain thing, unless it can be shown that the act was done with the master's knowledge and assent, express or implied. [p. 139, col. 1.]

The owner of a motor lorry was prosecuted on the ground that he allowed the driver of the lorry to drive at an excessive speed. It appeared that he was not in the motor lorry at the time of the alleged offence and had cautioned the driver not to exceed the regulation speed and to drive with due care and caution.

Rule against the order of the Additional Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, dated the 12th February 1924.

Mr. P. C. Mitter and Babu Kshitish Chandra Chakrabutty, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—The petitioner is the owner of motor lorry No. 630. He was prosecuted on the ground that he allowed the driver of the motor lorry to drive it at an excessive speed at 5-30 in the evening of the 23rd October last on

VARAJ LALL v. EMPEROR.

Lower Circular Road and thereby committed an offence under r. 16 of Part II of the Rules regulating the use of motor vehicles in Calcutta framed under section 11 of Act VIII of 1914, the Indian Motor Vehicles Act, 1914.

The petitioner was not in the motor lorry at the time of the alleged offence and had cautioned the driver not to exceed the regulation speed and to drive with due care and caution.

The petitioner was convicted on the 17th January last by the Additional Presidency Magistrate and fined Rs. 15, the driver of the motor lorry admitting that he drove at an excessive speed.

The Magistrate in his explanation relies on the provisions of r. 3 of Part II and refers to Thornton v. Emperor (1).

The Rule was granted on the ground that the petitioner was not liable under the circumstances.

Rule 3 of Part II is, so far as material, as follows:—

"No person shall drive or have charge of, or cause or permit to be used, any motor vehicle or trailer which does not in all respects conform to these rules, or which is so driven or used as to contravene any of these rules."

Rule 16 of Part II is, so far as material, as follows:—"No motor vehicle shall be driven at a greater speed than ten miles an hour, if a heavy motor car, and 8 miles an hour, if the axle weight of any axle of the heavy motor car exceeds six tons, or if it draws a trailer."

In the case of Thornton v. Emperor (1) upon which the Magistrate relies the conviction was in respect of an offence under rule 20 of the Rules then in force framed under Bengal Act III of 1903 which is almost identical with rule 19 of the present rules which is as follows:—

"No motor vehicle shall be driven recklessly or negligently, or at any speed or in any manner which is likely to endanger human life or to cause hurt or injury to any person or animal or damage to any goods carried in any vehicle or by any person, or which would be otherwise than reasonable or proper with due regard to all the circumstances of the case, including the nature, condition and use of the street or public place and the amount of traffic which is actually on it at the time or which may reasonably be expected to be on it."

Rule 4 of those rules was identical with rule 3 of the present rules.

Rule 16 by itself, I think, would only make the driver liable as it only contains a prohibition against driving at a greater speed than that stated in the rule. Rule 3, it is true, prohibits the causing or permitting a motor vehicle to be driven in contravention of rule 16 but apart from authority I do not think that under the circumstances of this case the petitioner can be said to have caused or permitted the motor lorry to be driven in contravention of rule 16. He was not in the lorry at the time and he had cautioned his driver to observe the rules.

The general principles of law applicable in cases of this nature are stated in Volume IX of Halsbury's Laws of England, page 235.

"The condition of mind of a servant or agent is not imputed to the master or principal so as to make him criminally liable. A master is not criminally liable merely because his servant or agent commits a negligent or malicious or fraudulent act. But in cases where a particular intent or state of mind is not of the essence of the offence, the acts or defaults of a servant or agent in the ordinary course of his employment may make the master or principal criminally liable, although he was not aware of such acts or defaults, and even where they were against his orders."

The principle of what I may call vicarious criminality has been applied in England in cases under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 and in cases under the Licensing Acts; see Commissioners of Police v. Cartman (2) referred to in Thornton v. Emperor (1). In that case the licensee was absent when the offence was committed, but there was an express prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquor to any drunken person and the word "permitting" was not used in the section as regards this particular offence. Similarly in the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, the prohibition against particular sales is absolute and the word "permitting" does not occur. In Somerset v. Hart (3), a case under section 17 of the Licensing Act, 1872 [also cited in Thornton v. Emperor (1)] there was no conviction of the licensee, in whose absence gaming took place on the ground that unless he knew and connived he could not be said to have suffered gaming to go on; the word "suffer" appears in the section in question. In Somerset v. Wade (4) [also cited in Thornton v. Emperor (1)], a case under section 13 of the Licensing Act, 1872, there was no conviction on the ground that there could be no permission if there was no knowledge.

The principle I should adduce from the cases is that where a particular intent or state of mind is not of the essence of an offence a master can be made criminally liable for his servant's acts if an act is expressly prohibited but not otherwise and that he cannot be so made liable if the act provides for liability for permitting and causing a certain thing unless it can be shown that the act was done with the master's knowledge and assent, express or implied.

In this view of the law I think the petitioner was not liable in the circumstances of this case, having regard to the terms of rule 3 and I think the conviction and sentence should be set aside and the fine be refunded.

It may be said that we are differing from the view expressed in Thornton v. Emperor (1) and this may be so, but having regard to the fact that that decision was given in respect of the breach of a different rule framed under a different Act we do not think it necessary to refer the matter to a Full Bench.

REFERRING ORDER.—Two excise licensees, who are partners in a country liquor shop license, have been convicted under section 64 (c) of the U. P. Excise Act, 1910, of committing a breach of the conditions of the license by selling liquor out of the prescribed hours and also by selling adulterated liquor. One of the partners, Tika Ram, was present at the shop when these offences were detected. It is admitted that Jwala Prasad, the other licensee, was not present and there is no suggestion that he knew anything about the irregular sales. The Deputy Magistrate has convicted Jwala Prasad on the strength of the ruling of the Hon'ble High Court in Babu Lal v. Emperor (1). It has been argued before me that that ruling establishes only the liability of a master for the act of his servant, and that it does not follow that one partner is liable for the acts of the other partner. I do not accept this contention. It seems to me that one partner must be held to be liable for the acts of the other partner. The second point, however, urged before me in revision appears to be valid. The important point in the ruling quoted, which followed the case of Queen-Empress v. Tyab Ali (2) was that in order to establish the offence under the section of the Opium Act it was not necessary to prove intention, mens rea or knowledge and that the mere act constituted the offence. In the present case, section 64 (c) of the U. P. Excise Act makes it an offence if any one, being the holder of a licence, wilfully does or omits to do anything in breach of any of the conditions of the licence. The use of the word "wilfully" appears to me to make it clear that in order to establish this offence it is necessary to prove intention or knowledge, and on the facts found by the Deputy Magistrate there is no such proof against Jwala Prasad. I, therefore, forward the record for the orders of the Hon'ble High Court with the recommendation that the conviction of Jwala Prasad be set aside.

ORDER.—I do not agree with the District Magistrate. Mens rea has nothing to do with it. It is quite true that the section requires a wilful breach of the condition. A man may accidentally commit a breach. For example, if a man's watch was five minutes slow and he sold liquor at two minutes to eight by his own time, and it turned out to be two minutes past eight by the right time, that would not be a wilful breach. But a sale is a sale, and I have not the slightest doubt that the servant intended to sell the liquor and to take the money for it, and if he pocketed the money and refused to hand it over to his master and said that it was an accidental sale and not a wilful sale, and, therefore, the money did not belong to the master but to the servant, the master would have been very angry. The real test, so far as agency is concerned, is not the nature of the act but the nature of the business. The nature of the act is the test which decides the criminality. If the sale is wilful or the breach of the license is wilful, then the servant has committed an offence. But the question still remains whether his master is liable, and in all these quasi civil transactions, which are really questions of contract, the view has always been held that the Legislature intended that the maxim making the superior answerable should apply to sales which are carried through in breach of the conditions of the license by a man whom the master has put in the shop for the purpose of selling on his behalf and for his profit, and, therefore, if the man who actually took the money and transferred the liquor to the purchaser had been a servant, Jwala would have been answerable as his master. The law of partnership is merely a branch of the law of agency, just like the law of master and servant, and for this purpose two partners stand to one another in the same relation as master and servant. This was a wilful breach of the license. It was committed by Tika Ram as agent for Jwala, the other partner, and in my opinion that makes Jwala equally liable, and the Magistrate was right. I see no reason to interfere and I direct the record to be returned to the District Magistrate. I may add that I agree with both the cases which have been cited, namely Queen-Empress v. Tyab Ali (2) and Babu Lal v. Emperor (1). It is hard on Jwala if he was on bad terms with Tika Ram and objected to this class of illicit dealing, but if he can prove that, he can press for the recovery of his fine from Tika Ram, I think, in the taking of the partnership accounts. Let the record be returned.

The making of an order by an Appellate Criminal Court, under section 31 of the Court Fees Act, does not ordinarily amount to an enhancement of sentence within the meaning of section 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code but it may be made as an incidental order to bring the judgment into conformity with the law.

ORDER.—This criminal revision has been admitted on the question of the validity of the Appellate Court's order to pay the complainant's Court-fees under section 31 of the Court Fees Act.

At the hearing an objection has been raised that the Appellate Court's judgment is defective under section 367 of the Code of Criminal Procedure because the Joint Magistrate did not discuss the bearing of the evidence of each prosecution witness on the guilt of each accused. This is not one of the grounds stated in the revision petition and I do not find any substance in it.

The order to collect Court-fees from the accused passed by the Appellate Court, is not an enhancement of the sentence under the authority of In re Vemuri Seshanna (1). The case in Queen-Empress v. Thangavelu Chetty (2) was decided by a Single Judge in September 1898. The head-note to the report indicates that it was a decision under the Code of 1882 which had not the same provision under section 423 (d) for passing incidental or consequential orders in appeal that was introduced by the Act V of 1898. I hold that the making of an order under section 31 of the Court Fees Act does not ordinarily amount to an enhancement of sentence but may be made as an incidental order to bring the judgment into conformity with the law. Section 31 of the Court Fees Act provides that all fees ordered to be re-paid under this section shall be recoverable "as if they were fines", but does not thereby make them part of the sentence. In Queen-Empress v. Thangavelu Chetty (2) the Assistant Magistrate who tried the case made an order for a part of the Court-fees claimed by the complainant to be re-paid out of the fine collected as sentence, and it was for this reason that Justice Moore was compelled to treat the Assistant Magistrate's order to pay the fee as an integral part of the sentence, and to regard the Deputy Magistrate's order to pay an increased amount as an enhancement of the sentence. I do not find any such objection to exist in the present case to the Joint Magistrate's order.

The criminal revision is, therefore, dismissed.

A statement by a girl alleging that she was raped, made immediately after the rape, to witnesses who saw her crying and asked her the reason thereof, is admissible, as an explanation of her act of crying, under section 8 of the Evidence Act, as also under section 157 of the said Act by way of corroboration. [p 144, col. 1.]

In the case of the rape of an innocent girl of tender age, the evidence of the ravished girl is of great value and where she makes a statement by way of disclosure immediately after the occasion, it is a strong piece of evidence corroborating her credibility and proving the consistence of her conduct and also as negating consent on her part [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by Soosa Lal who has been convicted under section 376 of the Indian Penal Code for having ravished one Tulsia, P. W. No. 3, a girl of about 11 years of age, on 27th December 1923 at about 8 A. M. when he found her all alone in his own house. She and her mother Putria, P. W. No. 2, have been staying in a room of the house of the accused for sometime past. Putria used to supply water to Soosa

Lal for domestic purposes. After having supplied water that day she went out for supplying water to some one else, and asked her daughter Tulsia, P. W. No. 3, to plaster the kitchen of the accused in the mean time till her return. It is necessary to state here that Soosa Lal had sent away his wife and mother to Laskar and was all alone in the house. After the girl had plastered the kitchen, the prosecution story goes, Soosa Lal asked her to take a cradle upstairs. The girl not suspecting anything went upstairs with the cradle and placed it there as desired. In the meantime, the accused, who followed her there closed the doors, caught her by the hand and threw her on the ground, but finding that she was crying for help he thrust her wrapper into her mouth, and in spite of the resistance she offered by tossing her legs, which he held fast on the ground, committed rape on her with the result that the hymen was ruptured and her private parts became inflamed and tender to touch, and the labia stained with blood. There was a profuse discharge of blood from her vagina. The evidence of the Assistant Surgeon (P. W. No. 8) shows the deplorable condition in which he found her when he medically examined her even two days after on the 29th December 1923. He also examined her ghangaria (Exhibit A) and found considerable portions of it saturated with blood. P. W. No. 3, Tulsia, also describes her own condition from the witness-box and I think her evidence derives ample support in this respect from the medical evidence of the Assistant Surgeon. Soon after she was ravished she issued out crying from the house, in order to go to her mother. She met Bhujbal (P. W. No. 4) Pyarelal (P. W. No. 5) on her way, and on being questioned happened to narrate the occurrence to them and while she was repeating what took place to her mother at the well, one Lalli (P. W. No. 6) also heard it. Putria (P. W. No. 2) at once took her to the Police Station between 10 and 11 A. M. and reported the matter, and also at the suggestion of the Head Constable put in a written report (Exhibit P-1). The

ghangaria of the girl which had blood-stains on it was seized as per seizure memo (Exhibit P-2) dated the same day. The investigation was immediately started. The dhoti which the accused had on, when he ravished the girl was also seized the same day as per Exhibit P-3. The investigating officer went to the house of the accused and inspected the spot where the offence was committed and found that the accused had managed to plaster the blood-stained spot with ashes but the blood was "too thick to be blotted out of existence" as the Trying Magistrate puts it. He accordingly removed the blood-stained earth and mentioned that fact in his seizure memo (Exhibit P-3). Putria (P. W. No. 2) has deposed that when her daughter came crying to her she noticed a lot of blood on the ghangaria (Exhibit A) and also on the legs, and that it was with great difficulty that Tulsia was able to walk. Bhujbal (P. W. No. 4) happened to pass by the house of the accused when Tulsia was just opening the door and coming out of it crying aloud. Her cries naturally led him to question her as to their cause. He says he then noticed that her ghangaria was blood-stained. While passing she told him that Soosa Lal, whom she addressed as Soosa Lal Mama had ravished her. As the girl was crying and proceeding towards the bazar evidently to meet her mother, this witness could render no help to her or investigate the matter with a view to verify her statement or to find out the culprit. Witness No. 5, Pyarelal, whom Tulsia met next, was somewhat dull as from what he heard from the girl, he does not appear to have formed any idea that she was ravished. His indifference was, therefore, excusable. Udaichand (P. W. No. 7) was present at the inspection of the scene of the offence pointed out by the girl. He says that the spot was blood-stained. The blood-stained earth was dug out and picked up and similarly Soosa Lal's dhoti, which was half-dry, was also seized in the presence of Soosa Lal. No doubt this witness (P. W. No. 7) has written the report (Exhibit P-1) at the Police Station but that ought not to detract from the value to be attached to his testimony as an eye-witness to the seizure of the dhoti and the blood-stained earth made for the house and in the presence of the accused. The Assistant Surgeon's evidence, as also his report (Exhibit P-4) are relied on as showing that the stains on the dhoti could not be made out as being blood-stains, but the fact that the dhoti was half dry at the time it was seized and that the accused had washed it while bathing, as P. W. No. 7 deposes, sufficiently account for this state of things. I have no hesitation in holding that the taking of the bath and the washing of the dhoti were evidently resorted to by the accused for causing the evidence of his crime to disappear, and thus making it difficult for the prosecution to connect him with the crime.

It was argued before me by the learned Pleaders for the appellant that the absence of blood-stains on his dhoti establishes his innocence. They, therefore, urge that somehow or other the guilt was being sought to be fastened on the accused either because the Police had a grudge against him, or because Putria (P. W. No. 2) was turned out by him, and she wanted to take revenge on him, or because Tulsia (P. W. No. 3) having herself committed mischief from a wicked impulse, with somebody else and being afraid of the serious consequences, which resulted therefrom, invented a story whereby she threw the whole blame on him. I am not at all impressed by this argument nor by the argument that the accused was called away to the Police Station and sometime before the spot inspection was made the Police managed to throw blood on the floor in order to make the story more plausible and thus to connect the accused with the crime. These pieces of highly imaginative arguments do credit to nobody. The story told by Tulsia, corroborated as it is in material particulars, has a ring of truth about it; it does not sound to me as an invention as the appellant is attempting to suggest. From her deposition and the straight manner in which she gave it, she appears to be a guileless, innocent girl of tender age, who has had no experience of the man ever before, and it is too much to ascribe such an inventive brain to her as would enable her to connect, in a moment's time, a false story involving the very person, under whose roof she and her mother had been staying. The First Information Report (Exhibit P. 1) was lodged within a short time of the occurrence and very soon after the girl had complained of it to her mother. These facts negative the possibility of the story being invented by the girl.

The next ground of attack is in connection with the evidence of witnesses P. W. Nos. 4, 5 and 6. An objection is taken to it on the ground of its being inadmissible under law, as the witnesses were not eye-witnesses but have repeated what they say they had heard from Tulsa shortly after the occurrence. In my opinion every one of these witnesses had seen Tulsa crying and this must naturally have made them inquisitive, and led at least two of them to question her, and the latter to disclose the incident to them in order to explain her act of crying. Her statement is, therefore, admissible as an explanation of her act under section 8 of the Indian Evidence Act. It is also admissible under section 157 of the said Act by way of corroboration.

It is next urged that the conviction is virtually based upon the testimony of only the girl who is the real prosecutrix, and that it is very unsafe to convict a person on such interested testimony. This may be so in other cases, but the peculiar nature of the offence with which we are concerned here makes the evidence of the ravished girl of great value, and her statement by way of disclosure immediately after the occasion is a strong piece of evidence corroborating her credibility and proving the consistence of her conduct: Reg. v. William Osborne (1) and also as negating consent on her part: Reg. v. Lillyman (2).

On the whole after a careful consideration of the entire evidence on record and the probabilities of the case I see no reason to differ from the conclusions of the Trying Magistrate. I agree with him in holding that it has been satisfactorily proved that the accused did commit the crime with which he was charged and that he has been rightly convicted for the same.

As regards the sentence it is urged that it is unduly severe, looking to the social positions of the accused or of the party injured. I am asked to reduce the sentence in consideration of the fact that the accused is a young man of 25 with a family, and the girl is a daughter of a day labourer, i. e., of a low station in life. In Queen v. Jhantah Noshyo (3) where a similar remark was made by the Magistrate himself, it was held that the nature of punishment should be proportioned to the greater or less atrocity of the crime, to the conduct of the criminal, and to the defenceless and unprotected state of the injured female, whether that female were a low native or a high European. The evidence on record and particularly the medical evidence clearly shows the crime to be atrocious. The girl was a helpless victim and if one were to look to her cross-examination it is no wonder if she almost became unconscious while she was ravished by the accused. I do not think, under these circumstances, the accused could be said to have been sentenced to an unduly severe or long term of imprisonment. The sentence passed by the Trying Magistrate rather leans the other way, but I do not wish to disturb it.

I confirm the conviction and sentence passed in the case and dismiss the appeal

Section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code requires the High Court to give due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and of the Jury after considering the entire evidence and then to convict or acquit the accused. It does not require the High Court to reconstruct the verdict of the Jury. [p. 149, col. 1.]

In giving due weight to the opinion of the Jury, the High Court should always hesitate to reverse a unanimous verdict unless it holds it to be unreasonable. [ibid.]

The nature of the offence of forgery does not depend on the use to which the document is put. If it is used fraudulently or dishonestly and if it purported to be a valuable security, the punishment provided by section 467 and not that provided by section 465, Penal Code, would be that to which the accused would be liable under section 471. JUDGMENT.—The accused Sagarmal was tried before the Sessions Judge of the Assam Valley Districts on two charges, firstly, with having forged an ekrarnama, Exhibit 2, a valuable security purporting to have been executed by Kanai Lal on 21st January, 1905, and secondly, with having fraudulently and dishonestly used as genuine by filing in the Court of the Extra-Assistant Commissioner, Mr. S. Goswami, in a section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, proceeding in 1922 the ekrarnama Exhibit 2 purporting to have been executed by Kanai Lal on 21st January, 1905, which he knew or had reason to believe at the time of filing to be a forged document. The Jury returned a unanimous verdict of not guilty. The learned Sessions Judge disagreeing with the Jury's verdict on the second charge has thought it necessary to refer this case to this Court under the provisions of section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The main facts of the case are as follows:—On the 21st November, 1904, Kanai Lal purchased a piece of land from Ram Chandra Brahmin for Rs. 1,000. On the 9th March, 1905, Kanai Lal died leaving a widow Musammatt Gigi. Kanai Lal left several debts and Gigi executed a deed of sale in respect of this land to one Joy Narain. It appears that though the document executed was a valid deed of sale there was some contemporaneous verbal arrangement between the widow and Joy Narain that Joy Narain should hold the property as trustee for Kanai Lal's creditors and after paying off Kanai Lal's debts out of the profits from the property should restore it to the widow. Effect was given to this arrangement and on the 24th April, 1917, Joy Narain re-transferred the land to her. The land was in three plots occupied by different tenants. On one of those plots the tenant Ghanesyam had erected a mill. On the 18th August, 1920, the accused Sagarmal purchased the mill and Ghanesyam's interest in this plot. On the 1st March, 1921, Sagarmal sold to Nagarmal, the complainant, the property purchased from Ghanesyam. Nagarmal was given possession of the mill and it was arranged that possession of some other buildings in the property should not be delivered for three months. Sagarmal failed to keep his promise and on the 10th June, 1921, Nagarmal instituted a suit against Sagarmal for possession. On the 30th July, 1921, Sagarmal dispossessed Nagarmal from the mill by locking it up. Nagarmal then instituted proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and got possession of the mill and the other houses in this plot of land through the Court. Then on the 6th July, 1922, Sagarmal instituted fresh proceedings under section 145, Cr criminal Procedure Code, in respect of the land on which the mill stood and in the course of these proceedings on the 18th October, 1922, he filed a document, Exhibit 2, which is the document alleged to be forged on which the present prosecution is based.

This document is an ekrarnama which purports to be executed by Kanai Lal on the 21st January, 1905. In it Kanai Lal acknowledges that Sagarmal had bought the land benami in his name and that it would be returned to Sagarmal after 20 years and during that period Kanai Lal would enjoy the land but would have no right to transfer the same by sale or otherwise. It also provides for re-entry by Sagarmal in the case of transfer. In the meantime Nagarmal had brought two civil suits against Sagarmal, one on the 10th June, 1921, which was decreed in Nagarmal's favour on the 10th May, 1922, after reference to arbitration. Then on the 15th November, 1922, he brought a second suit on the basis of a lease which he had obtained from the widow Gigi and that suit was decreed ex parte on the 4th January, 1923. When the document, Exhibit 2, was filed in the section 145 case, a few days later on the 24th October, 1922, a petition was filed on behalf of Sagarmal stating that there were good grounds for believing the ekrarnama to be a forgery and asking the Court to put its signature on both its sheets and to note the letters appearing in the water-mark of the cartridge paper of the second sheet.

The case for the prosecution rests on evidence which can be classified under three heads. The first is the direct evidence that the signatures on the document purporting to be those of Kanai Lal are not Kanai Lal's signatures. The second class of evidence relates to circumstances which make it improbable that the document was executed by Kanai Lal. The third class of evidence is evidence that from the water-mark on the second sheet of Exhibit 2, it appears that that piece of paper could not have been in existence in 1905.

As regards the first class of evidence we think that the learned Sessions Judge did not direct the Jury properly. Three witnesses have definitely deposed that they were acquainted with the signature of Kanai Lal and that the two signatures on Exhibit 2 which purported to be his are not in his handwriting. The first of these is Nagarmal, the complainant, who deposed that Kanai Lal was his uncle and that he often received letters from him and knows his signature and that the two signatures marked "2 (1) and 2 (2)" are neither of them his signatures. The second of these witnesses is Bholaram who deposed that Kanai Lal was his sister's husband and that he was his gomastha for 17 or 18 years. He has also deposed that neither of these signatures 2 (1) and 2 (2) were Kanai Lal's signatures. The third of the witnesses is Ram Protap who had business dealings with Kanai Lal and has deposed that he knows the signature of Kanai Lal and that Exhibits 2 (1) and 2 (2) are not his signatures. In dealing with this evidence the learned Sessions Judge has only referred to that of Bholaram's and has said to the Jury: "In any case I do not suppose that you will regard this part of the evidence as conclusive." It has been argued before us that this means that both the learned Sessions Judge and the Jury have rejected the evidence entirely. This is certainly not the correct interpretation of the learned Sessions Judge's remarks giving them their ordinary meaning. We think, it would have been better if he had told the Jury that they should consider this evidence and attach such weight to it as they thought fit and not suggested to them that it was not of much importance. In our opinion it is of considerable importance, though we agree to this extent with the Sessions Judge that a conviction of forgery could seldom be based solely on non-resemblance of handwriting. But when this evidence is considered with the other evidence in the case it strongly supports the case for the prosecution. In connection with this evidence there is also the evidence to prove the only specimen of Kanai Lal's handwriting which has been produced on either side, Exhibit 15 (1), that is an entry in the khata produced by Ram Protap, and although on behalf of the defence it has been attacked as a spurious entry, we see no sufficient ground for doubting its genuineness. Our attention has been drawn to certain facts which are said to be suspicious, such as the fact that Kanai Lal did not add his caste Agri-walla to his signature, that the ink of the entry of which the signature is part is different to that of the entry of the account in the khata, that the stamp appears to have been regummed and that other persons had signed acknowledgments in the khata by signing right across the page. In our opinion, none of these are sufficient reasons for rejecting this evidence, when there appears no other sufficient reason for doubting the genuineness of the account book in which the entry is made. Explanations have been given as regards the form of the signature and the difference of the inks which to us appear satisfactory and the other objections seem to us trivial. We hold, therefore, that there is very strong evidence on the record that the signatures on this document are not those of Kanai Lal.

As regards the circumstances of the case the document itself is one which it seems highly improbable that Kanai Lal should have executed. We have never in our experience known a case of benami sale in which the benamidar was allowed to be in possession of the land to which he had no right for a period of 20 years. The property was of considerable value being situated in the town of Gauhati and no satisfactory reason has been given why Kanai Lal should have been allowed the benefit of this land for 20 years. It is suggested that the consideration was that he was to improve the land and induct tenants. But this, having regard to the nature of the land, would not be a sufficient consideration for the benefit to be enjoyed. Further it was not proved that the accused at that time was in such pecuniary difficulty that it was necessary for him to resort to benami transactions. The facts show that Kanai Lal himself was in difficulties and this makes it extremely improbable that the accused should have chosen him as his benamidar at that time. It is further urged on behalf of the prosecution that had this document been genuine the accused could have asserted his right to possession at the time of the transfer to Joy Narain. We think there is some force in the contention on behalf of the accused that if this document were genuine it is possible that the accused might have been a consenting party to the arrangement with Joy Narain and, therefore, took no action in the matter. But this does not remove the initial improbability that such a document would have been executed. Another suspicious point is the conduct of the accused in allowing the second case instituted by Nagarmal to be decreed against him ex-parte after he had taken adjournments for the purpose of filing a written statement. Had he really believed this document to be genuine he would surely have defended that suit.

We now come to the evidence as to the water-mark in the second page of the document. This sheet of paper is what is known as cartridge paper which is sold by Government to the public. There is evidence that the water-mark letters A, Z were not in existence at the time in 1905 when the document is alleged to have been executed. The case for the prosecution is that since 1907 secret marks have been introduced in the water-marks on this paper and they have been varied from time to time so that the officers of the Controller of Stationery can say from an examination of the document the period when the paper of the document was issued. It has been proved by Mr. Coster, Deputy Controller of Stationery, that mark Z was first used in 1920. In support of this statement also the letter of the Controller, dated 19th December, 1919, to the paper manufacturers directing the use of this letter on water-marked papers manufactured during the year 1920 has been proved. The evidence of Mr. Coster has been attacked on two grounds, firstly, on the ground that he has made contradictory statements, and secondly that a good deal of his evidence is irrelevant as he is not speaking from personal knowledge. We have been taken through the whole of Mr. Coster's evidence and we think that the attitude he adopted in the witness-box was unfortunate. He seems at first to have insisted on claiming privilege of not replying to questions and was not willing to give the assistance to the Court which he should have done. But his attitude was certainly not one which was unfavourable to the defence and we can see nothing that would justify us in thinking that he was not telling the truth in the definite statement which he did make.

As regards the second point it would appear that it is difficult to bring within the provisions of the Evidence Act certain portions of his evidence. But so far as the introduction of the letter Z from the commencement of 1920 is concerned the letter of the Controller to which we have referred is sufficient to establish the fact. Then Mr. Coster has definitely stated that secret marks were first introduced in 1907. That statement, he says, is based on a presumption from the letter, Exhibit 33, which was produced in original. In that letter the Controller asked the manufacturers of the paper to make arrangement that each sheet of paper shall bear a secret mark that the mark for preference should be a letter and the letter should be changed at intervals of six months and his office informed confidentially. It is urged that as this letter is one accepting tender of the manufacturers it does not necessarily follow that secret marks had not been in use beforehand. But the inference drawn by Mr. Coster is supported by other evidence on the record. The cartridge papers that were used for other documents in 1906 and 1907 were proved Exhibits 18 and 17 and on these no letter was found in water-marks. These were taken out at random from a large number of records produced from the Sessions Judge's record room and it has not been shown that on any cartridge paper used before 1907 was there any letter or other secret mark in the water-mark whereas in papers filed in 1908 a letter water-mark appears, it having been the letter B in that year. It would have been easy for the accused to have shown that a letter-mark if it had been in existence previously was to be found in some of these documents. But no attempt was made to do this. We hold on the evidence of Mr. Coster which is admissible that there can be no reasonable doubt that the second sheet of Exhibit 2 was not in existence in 1905.

We think the Jury were probably confused and did not properly appreciate the cumulative effect of the different classes of evidence. After taking their verdict the learned Sessions Judge asked them a further question as he intended to refer this case. He asked them to give their reasons for their doubt and their reply was: "To our mind the only part of the evidence that seems to bear on the question is the circumstantial part of it and that does not seem conclusive." It would appear, therefore, that the Jury entirely overlooked the direct evidence to which we have already referred.

On behalf of the accused considerable reliance was placed on the fact that the endorsement on the back of the stamp which constitutes the first sheet of Exhibit 2 indicates that the stamp was sold to Kanai Lal. It seems very doubtful whether this entry is any evidence of that fact. But it is unnecessary to discuss this point as it appears at the trial not to have been disputed that this stamp may have been actually sold to Kanai Lal. What is pointed out by the prosecution is that the stamp of five rupees is not the proper stamp for the ekrarnama written on it. It is further suggested that such a stamp might have been among Kanai Lal's papers unused and that the accused had access to those papers. This appears to have been so having regard to the contention that the accused was a party to the arrangement with Joy Narain and there is direct evidence that the accused's brother actually took some interest in the widow's affairs. We think that it is extremely probable that this stamp was found by the accused and the finding of this stamp had suggested to him the idea of forging this document.

NARAYANA In re.

It is further contended that there is no evidence that the accused used the document knowing it to be forged. It was not to be expected that the prosecution should give direct evidence on this point. But it is impossible to conceive that the accused could have received this document acknowledging a benami transaction in his favour, believing it to be genuine if in fact there never had been such a benami transaction. It is also contended that if we hold that the accused used the document, we should hold that he is liable for the offence punishable under section 471 read with section 465 and not for an offence punishable under section 471 read with section 467. It is said that he did not use the documents relying on it as a valuable security. Whether he did so or not the nature of the offence does not depend on the use to which the document was put. If it was used fraudulently or dishonestly and if it purported to be a valuable security the punishment provided by section 467 and not that provided by section 465 would be that to which the accused would be liable under section 471.

It is further contended that having regard to the unanimous verdict of the Jury and to the fact that we have held that there has been some mis-direction by the learned Sessions Judge, we should put ourselves in the place of the Jury and find as to what their verdict would have been if they had been rightly directed. This argument is based on a mis-conception of the provisions of section 307, Criminal Procedure Code. That section requires us to give due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and of the Jury after considering the entire evidence and then to acquit or convict the accused. It does not require us to attempt to reconstruct the verdict of the Jury. In giving due weight to the opinion of the Jury we should always hesitate to reverse a unanimous verdict unless we hold it to be unreasonable. In the present case we hold that that verdict having regard to the cumulative effect of the evidence is not a reasonable one and that there cannot be any doubt as to the accused's guilt.

We accordingly accept this reference.

The accused Sagarmal is acquitted of the first charge, that of having committed the offence of forging the ekrarnama, Exhibit 2, punishable under section 467, Indian Penal Code. We convict him of the offence of fraudulently and dishonestly using as genuine the ekrarnama, Exhibit 2, knowing or having reason to believe it to be a forged document, and under section 471 read with section 467, Indian Penal Code, we sentence him to four years' rigorous imprisonment.

The accused must surrender to his bail and serve out this sentence.

praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kurnool, in Criminal Appeal No. 27 of 1923, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Kurnool, in C.C. No. 61 of 1923.

Mr. S. Venkatesa Iyengar, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The facts of this case are not disputed. They are that a pot of toddy in excess of the quantity which one individual may possess without license was brought by a woman named Hanumakka to the house of the complainant K. Lakshmiah. The three petitioners and one man who has been discharged came to the complainant's house. The first petitioner who, according to the Revenue Inspector, was an acting taliari, went inside the house and brought out the pot and placed it in the verandah, and all three petitioners remained guarding it until the Police, to whom they sent a message about the commission of an Abkari offence, arrived. When the Sub-Inspector of the Police arrived, he completely turned the tables on the petitioners and prosecuted them for house trespass. They were convicted, and when they appealed to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, their appeal was dismissed. Now a private individual has no authority to seize and detain liquor which he believes to be liable to confiscation under the Abkari Act (Madras Act I of 1886). Only officers of a certain rank of the Revenue, Police and Abkari Department are empowered to enter places where liquor is illicitly sold or stored. Technically it does not signify that the first petitioner was acting as substitute for an absent taliari or that the third petitioner's appointment as taliari had ceased two days before the case. Even if they had been permanent taliaris of the village, they would have had no legal right to do what the first petitioner is said to have done, viz., gone inside a private house without the permission of its owner and fetched out a pot of toddy.

But the facts (1) that an offence under the Abkari Law was apparently committed by the complainant, (2) that the petitioners may have thought that it was a taliari's duty to stop illicit transport and possession of liquor and (3) that they sat and watched the pot till the Police came, throw a flood of light on the question whether they acted with bona fides or with a criminal intention.

According to the decision of the majority of the Full Bench in Villappa v. Bheema Row (1) the offence of trespass is not complete unless there is an intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy some one in possession of property. It is not enough that the accused should know that his act is likely to have such an effect. The complainant deposed that the petitioners intended to annoy him because he was a witness in a case against one Narasimhayya who according to him is their friend, but he contradicted himself on the point whether he had already deposed against Narasimhayya or whether he was about to do so. His statement that the accused announced that they had taken the toddy because he had given evidence against Hanumakka is improbable and is not corroborated by the woman who brought the toddy, or by the complainant's son, whose version is that the accused offered to return the pot of toddy if complainant did not give evidence against Narasimhayya. The complainant's statement (Exhibit III) that the petitioners objected to the pot being taken away till the toddy was measured shows that their real object was to see that the Abkari offence which they had detected was not hushed up.

The Stationary Sub-Magistrate has not recorded a finding as to the intention of the accused. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate observed that there was no necessity for the accused to stop at the complainant's house with the toddy till the Police came if it were not to annoy him. I entirely disagree. I think their remaining there indicated their good faith. When the action of the accused was open to two constructions, one criminal and the other honest, I think that the Appellate Court Application to revise the order of the First Class Magistrate, Guni, dated the 14th November, 1923.

Mr. Thawerdas Rahoomal, for the Accused.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revisional application and all that we have to see is whether on the facts found by the learned Magistrate the conviction is proper.

The facts found by the learned Magistrate are that there was found in the open compound of accused Tillibai a large jar containing excisable articles. Accused does not seem to have denied that they were excisable articles, therefore, any technical deficiency of proof that they were excisable article is not of very much importance.

Now there is a presumption that a person who is found in possession of excisable articles is so in possession in circumstances in which it is possible to convict him under section 43 (1) (a). The consequence, therefore, is that the question as to whether the accused was actually in possession of the jar was a vital element in the case. The learned Magistrate relied especially on the conduct of the accused when the search began. So far as this question we have nothing to say except that the conduct of the accused is certainly consistent with her being in possession of this pot. Further he relied upon the statement made to the Investigating Officer and Mashirs at the time when the search was made, in consequence of which search this property was found. Now, it appears certain that if the investigating persons had been Police Officers, that evidence would not have been admissible under section 25 of the Indian Evidence Act. But it appears that the Investigating Officers were as a matter of fact, the Abkri Inspector and peon and the Mashirs and nothing has been pointed out which extends the operation of section 25 to an Abkari Inspector and Abkari peons. On the contrary there is a case in Ah Foong v. Emperor (1), see remarks at page 419,* which is authority for the proposition that Abkari peons and officers are not to be considered as Police Officers for the purposes of section 25 of the Evidence Act. There is also nothing to show that any undue pressure was put upon the woman, and in that case, the learned Magistrate was quite right in taking into consideration the statement made by this woman Tillibai at the time when the goods were found in her courtyard. And if that statement be believed she claimed ownership though of course innocent ownership over the contents of the jar. She does not demonstrate that the ownership was innocent. Thus we cannot say that there was no legal evidence sufficient on which to base finding that Tillibai was in criminal possession of excisable articles and consequently we must hold for the purposes of this application that the learned Magistrate was right in his finding that she had committed the offence under section 43 (1) (a) of the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878.

We, therefore, reject this application.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1895), ss. 191, 476—Magistrate instituting proceedings—Jurisdiction to try case—Omission to inform accused of privilege of transfer.

Where a Magistrate instituting proceedings under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, takes cognisance of the offence himself without informing the accused under section 191 of the Code that he is entitled to have his case tried by another Court, the omission is more than a mere irregularity and vitiates the whole trial.

Emperor v. Chhedi, 28 A. 212; A. W. N. (1905) 258, 2 A. L. J. 745; 2 Cr. L. J. 809, relied upon.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Fyzabad, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

ORDER.—This is a Reference under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the Sessions Judge of Fyzabad. Naipal was convicted under section 171 (f) of the Indian Elections Offences and Inquiries Act, (XXXIX of 1920) and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 35 or in default to undergo one month's rigorous imprisonment.

The learned Judge is of opinion that the trial of Naipal and consequently his conviction by the Joint Magistrate, Mr. A. J. Hopkinson, was illegal for the reason that the Magistrate had himself instituted the criminal proceedings against Naipal under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and, therefore, he was debarred from trying the accused under section 191 of the same Code unless and until he had informed the accused before taking any evidence that he was entitled to have his case tried by another Court. It is admitted that no such information was given to Naipal. According to the decision in the case of Emperor v. Chhedi (1) this omission is more than an irregularity and vitiates the whole trial.

I, therefore, accept the recommendation of the learned Judge, set aside the conviction of Naipal and direct that the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 562; applicability of—Court, what must consider

Before applying section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Court must consider whether there is a good case for its application or not, and must guard against two things, viz. one, danger to the public and the other, danger to the accused himself, which may result from the applicability of the section. [p. 153, col. 1.]

Where a juvenile offender has shown criminality rather than mere thoughtlessness and a general character of craft and deceit, section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code should not be applied. [p. 153, col. 2.]

Mr. Motiram Idanmal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, 2nd Assistant Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—In this case one Dhanbai, widow of Khimji, was in possession of considerable property which she kept in a safe which was originally in her house. About three years ago she lost one set of keys of this safe. She, therefore, removed the safe to the shop of a friend which shop was generally occupied by the friend or his relation. Unfortunately both the friend and the relation were away for some days recently and in that time the shop was broken open and the safe was unlocked and several thousand rupees worth of property was removed. A portion of this property was ultimately traced to the house of Gangaram, where it was found concealed in some bedding. Gangaram is the father of the appellant, Daryalal, who is a boy of about 17 years of age. Daryalal eventually pleaded guilty; he has not made a very truthful statement but on his own admission it appears that he under the influence of the appellant No. 1 Khatoor, having accidentally come into possession of these keys, stole this property from the safe and concealed part of it in the bedding. As regards the guilt of Daryalal, therefore, inasmuch as he has pleaded guilty there can be no doubt, and his appeal is only as to the sentence.

Before dealing with that question of sentence, I must dispose of the appeal of Khatoor, as it would certainly seem that the evidence against him is not sufficient. No part of the property was found with him and the direct evidence of his connection with the crime is only the evidence of his co-accused Daryalal. There is in fact no corroborative evidence and I do not think that the evidence of Daryalal in itself justifies the conviction of Khatoor. As far as Khatoor is concerned, his appeal must, therefore, be admitted and the conviction and sentence set aside and he must be acquitted and discharged.

As regards the offence of Daryalal he has been sentenced to one year, and the sentence is to be served in Dharwar, and I am urged in appeal to apply the provisions of section 562. I daresay section 562 may be a very valuable section if properly applied; and it may very often happen that a juvenile offender who is sentenced to jail for a short period of imprisonment for a trivial offence may be practically ruined for life, whereas he would be saved by the due application of section 562. But in passing a sentence at least two things are necessary, to guard against, viz., one danger to the public and the other danger to the accused himself. The public must not be led to suppose that all juvenile offenders may commit any crimes that they like, without any fear of punishment because that of course would be an incentive to criminal parents to initiate their children into a life of crime. And even children themselves being immune from the fear of punishment might be tempted to go astray from the unpleasant paths of virtue into paths of crime. It is obvious; therefore, that before applying section 562 one must consider whether there is a good case for its application or not. In the present case there can be no doubt that the dictum of malitia supplet aetatem applies, because the crime committed by Daryalal is by no means a simple crime such as is committed by children out of mere thoughtlessness, rather than criminality, but it shows a singular combination of design and ingratitude, and a general character of craft and deceit, which in the case of an adult would surely call for a very severe punishment indeed. If an offence of this kind is not to be punished it is difficult to say how any juvenile offender could ever be punished for any offence short of murder. That is as far as the public is concerned. As regards Daryalal himself, I am by no means certain that his home influences are at all good. His father Gangaram has apparently been guilty of doubtful, if not criminal, behaviour in respect of property belonging to other members of the family and on his own admission Daryalal has made a friend of a recidivist convict in Khatoor who is under this order in appeal free to consort with him. On the whole it looks very doubtful whether Daryalal will be free from danger without being removed from the temptations of Karachi for as long a period as possible. I, therefore, dismiss his appeal.

—Complainant or his Pleader disallowed to examine witnesses—Court examining witnesses itself—Reasonable apprehension—Transfer of case.

Generally, it is not the province of the Court to examine witnesses, and as a rule the Court should leave the witnesses to the Pleaders, to be dealt with as is provided for in section 133 of the Evidence Act or in section 495, sub-section (3), of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Where a Magistrate does not permit the complainant or his Pleader to examine his witnesses but proceeds to examine them himself, the procedure adopted by him is one that is likely to raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the complainant that he will not obtain a fair trial in his Court and constitutes a sufficient ground for transfer of the case to some other Court.

Application for transfer of a case from the Court of a Magistrate.

Mr. H. C. Dutt, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure asking for the transfer of a criminal proceeding instituted by the applicant against four persons under sections 295 and 335 of the Indian Penal Code and section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, in whose Court the complaint was filed, instituted proceedings under section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. For the purposes of that section the case was taken up at the first instance on the 5th February 1924. On that date the applicant appeared before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate accompanied by a legal practitioner. His witnesses, whom he wanted to produce in support of the complaint, were not permitted to be examined by him or his Pleader. The Court took the witnesses into its own hands and proceeded with their examination. The case was again heard on the 4th March, 1924, and the procedure in respect of examination of the complainant's witnesses adopted on the preceding hearing was repeated on this date. Generally it is not the province of the Court to examine witnesses and as a rule the Court should leave the witnesses to the Pleaders to be dealt with as is provided for in section 133 of the Indian Evidence Act. Section 495, sub-section (3), of the Code of Criminal Procedure also tends in the same direction. The procedure adopted by the learned Magistrate in this case has given rise to a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the complainant, that he will not obtain a fair trial of his case in the Court in which it is now pending. Notice of this application was issued to the District Magistrate and to the Government Pleader of this Court. No appearance is made on their behalf at the hearing of this application.

I, therefore, order that the case be transferred from the Court in which it is now pending to some other Court sitting in Lucknow and competent to try it. The District Magistrate will name the said Court.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 112, 118—Prevention of offences—Sureties, production of—Imposition of fresh conditions—Good faith of sureties—Court, jurisdiction of.

The object of Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code is not the punishment of a suspect for past unproved crimes but to prevent him from committing offences and to afford him an opportunity of reforming himself. [p. 155, col. 2.]

When once a Magistrate has, while passing orders under section 112, Criminal Procedure Code, imposed conditions as to the nature of sureties and the amount of their liability, he cannot, when making the order absolute under section 118 of the Code, vary his previous order and impose fresh conditions, and he cannot reject as unfit sureties who comply with conditions originally laid down and are not personally unfit. [ibid.]

Muhammad Ibrahim v. Emperor, 27 Ind. Cas. 143; 8 S. L. R. 173; 16 Cr. L. J. 100, relied upon.

Sureties are not unfit because it is alleged that the suspect cannot be controlled by them, nor can it be made a condition precedent for acceptance of sureties that they should show their good faith and influence over the suspect, e.g., by producing his father who is absconding. [p. 155, col. 1.]

Report under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sessions Judge, Hyderabad (Sind), dated the 7th January, 1923, against the order of the District Magistrate, Hyderabad, confirming the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Tando!

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Tando, rejected the sureties tendered by the suspect Manu, firstly, on the ground that the suspect was a notorious thief and the control of the sureties over him will, therefore, not likely be effective or give protection to the public, and secondly, that the father of Manu who was one of the leaders of the gang had absconded and unless the sureties showed their good faith and the influence they could exert by producing the father, he declined to release the son and allow him to remain under their control. In appeal the second ground found favour with the District Magistrate, Hyderabad, and he confirmed the action of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. This matter has come before us on a reference made by the Sessions Judge of Hyderabad.

In the order issued by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which was subsequently made absolute the suspect was required to find two sureties in the sum of Rs. 500 each, the sureties to be men of position and respectability, living in the neighbourhood and belonging to the land holding class. It is admitted that the sureties offered by the suspect comply with this somewhat high standard imposed by the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

In the case of Muhammad Ibrahim v. Emperor (1) it was pointed out by this Court that if the sureties offered come fairly within the terms of the order under section 112 they can only be rejected on this ground that they are personally unfit, and that it is obviously unfair to a suspect to call on him to produce sureties of a certain class and standard and then to reject the persons offered on certain arbitrary grounds. It is not alleged that the sureties offered in this case are badmashes themselves or are personally unfit to be accepted as such. Nor is there any allegation that they have been terrorized by the suspect and are offering themselves as sureties under threats of coercion. It has been often laid down and it seems desirable to repeat once again, that the primary object of Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code is not the punishment of a suspect for past unproved crimes but to prevent him from committing offences and to afford him an opportunity of reforming himself. Section 112 requires the Magistrate to impose reasonable conditions as to the nature of the sureties and the amount of their liability. Section 118 bars the right of the Magistrate to impose fresh conditions at the time of making his order absolute. Ipsa facto it follows that it is not open to the Magistrate to reject sureties as unfit because they do not comply with certain arbitrary conditions which were not included in the order under section 112. A somewhat high standard was fixed in this case by the learned Magistrate on account of the notorious character of the suspect. It is not open to him to say arbitrarily that though the sureties answer the conditions imposed by him, they are unfit as the suspect cannot be controlled by them. This is tantamount to saying that as the suspect is a notorious scoundrel, he must be consigned to Jail and denied the opportunity of reforming.

LALJI SINGH v. EMPEROR.

The second ground is more arbitrary than the first. In making it a condition precedent to the accepting of the sureties that they should show their good faith and influence over the suspect by producing his hoary headed father who was absconding, is again tantamount to punishing the son for the sins of his father and to introducing in Criminal Procedure Code supplementary provisions for securing the apprehension of absconding offenders.

We are of the opinion that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate has failed to exercise the discretionary power vested in him in a proper and reasonable manner and we accordingly make this Rule absolute and set aside his order rejecting the sureties and order that the said sureties be accepted.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 97, 95, 147, 148, 149, 392—Unlawful assembly—Common object —Murder—Right of private defence.

Several heads of cattle belonging to the party of the complainant trespassed into a maize field belonging to the party of the accused. The members of the latter party captured the cattle and began to drive them towards the cattle pound, whereupon the members of the opposite party, armed with lathis, etc., set upon them and rescued the cattle. Upon this there was a serious fight which resulted in the death of several men on both sides. The fight took place in a field belonging to the party of the accused.

Held, (1) that as the rescue of the cattle amounted to theft under the Penal Code, apart from an offence under the Cattle Trespass Act, the right of private defence was available to the party of the accused, [p. 162, col. 1].

(2) that if the men of the party of the complainant entered upon the field, belonging to the party of the accused, with the object of committing an assault, they were guilty of the offence of criminal trespass and the members of the party of the accused had the right to eject them by such force as was necessary; [ibid.]

(3) that there was nothing wrong on the part of the party of the accused in awaiting the coming of their antagonists and in maintaining their possession of the cattle which they had lawfully seized; [p. 161, col. 2].

(4) that it was not the duty of the party of the accused to release the cattle and complain to the authorities. [ibid.]

Where possession is undisputed or where there is no time to seek the aid of the authorities, there is no obligation upon a person entitled to exercise the right of private defence and to defend his person or his property, to retire from the field merely because his assailant threatens him with violence. A man acting under an apprehension of death cannot be expected to judge too nicely the force of his own blow. He is not bound to modulate his defence step by step according to the attack; before there is reason to believe that the attack is over, he is not obliged to retreat but may pursue his adversary till he finds himself out of danger, and if in a conflict between them, he happens to kill, such killing is unjustifiable. JUDGMENT.

DEATH REFERENCE NO. 6 OF 1923

CR. A. No. 20 OF 1923.

Mullick, J.—About 8 A. M. on the 11th August, 1922, a serious fight took place between the inhabitants of Mauza Gopalpur on the one hand and Mauzas Chainpurwa and Naraon on the other resulting in the death of five men, namely, Doman Ahir, Mahabir Ahir, Sheogulam Ahir, Jangi Ahir and Bhirgu Mahto on the Gopalpur side and three men, namely, Deonandan Singh, Kamla Singh and Deepan Singh on the other side. Among the wounded were also Mukhram Singh, Kamla Singh, Prem Narain Singh, Pokhan Ahir and Ambica Ahir on the Gopalpur side and Narayan Singh and Sheobaran Singh on the Chainpurwa and Naraon side.

Gopalpur, Chainpurwa and Naraon are all villages within the jurisdiction of Police Station Garka, which is six miles from Gopalpur, but instead of going to their own Police Station Mukhram Singh of Gopalpur and Ram Andeshi Singh of Chainpurwa went by train to Chapra and appeared at the Police Station there at 1-15 P.M. and lodged First Informations giving their respective versions of the occurrence.

Mukhram Singh's information was to the effect that nine buffaloes and cows belonging to Birchi Singh of Chainpurwa and Lalji Singh of Naraon had trespassed into his maize and raher field and that while he accompanied by his co-villagers, Bhirgu Mahto, Prem Singh and Narsing was driving them towards the pound at Santa, 60 to 70 men of the opposite party armed with lathis, spears, garasas and pherasas, set upon them and rescued the cattle, and in the course of the attack caused injuries to the persons mentioned above.

Ram Andeshi Singh's account was that owing to long standing enmity some Ahirs of Gopalpur were cutting Deonandan Singh's paddy, that Deonandan Singh and his son Kamla succeeded in catching an Ahir named Binda, that thereupon 100 to 150 men from Gopalpur came up and attacked Deonandan and Kamla, who were re-inforced by a number of Chainpurwa and Naraon men and that a fight resulted in the course of which Deonandan and others of his side received serious injuries and Binda was rescued. Deonandan's paddy field in question is about 300 steps from the Local Board Road to Santa which runs north and south and separates Naraon from Gopalpur. Mukhram's maize field is a little to the south of the road; to the west of it is the paddy field of one Chamru and to the west of it again is the orchard of Mukha Singh; north of this orchard are the fields of Jangi Ahir, Chirkut Ahir and Pokhan Ahir.

The Police on arrival in the village on the night of the 11th August found copious marks of blood in the orchard and in the parti fields of Chirkut and Pokhan. It was conclusively proved at the trial that the fighting took place in these fields and that the casualties occurred there. On the other side of the road in the field of one Rambhajan the Police found marks of the trampling of many feet and north-west of this field is the orchard of Pertap Singh, where, according to the Gopalpur men, their assailants halted after the fight.

On the Gopalpur side Doman, Mahabir and Sheogulam are alleged to have died on the spot where they fell. As for Bhirgu and Jangi, they were taken by train to Chapra by Mukhram and some others and their dying declarations were recorded in hospital at 2-25 and 2-40 P.M. respectively and they died there later in the day.

LALJI SINGH v. EMPEROR.

By the same train went Ram Andeshi with Deonandan's body and with Kamla and Sheobaran, two of the injured men. Kamla's dying declaration was recorded in Chapra hospital at 2-35 p.m. and he also died a few hours later. Sheobaran also made a dying declaration but he recovered and is one of the Chainpurwa accused.

It appears that the train got into Chapra some time between 11 and 12 and that Mukhram went straightway to two Mukhtars, named Sukhdeo Narain and Ram Lal. The former prepared a draft complaint which the latter copied out and presented before the Deputy Magistrate of Chapra. The other side did not file any complaint, but both parties appeared at 1-15 p.m. at the Police Station and lodged formal First Informations. Maulvi Zahiruddin, the Sub-Inspector of Garkha, who happened to be at that time at the Chapra Police Station on some business, recorded the statement of Mukhram Singh while the Sub-Inspector of Chapra recorded the statement of Ram Andeshi, and a number of accused on either side were arrested by the Police immediately after these First Informations were recorded.

After recording the First Information, Zahiruddin appears to have gone by motor car to Santa and to have found at the Railway Station the dead body of Deepan Singh one of the Chainpurwa men which the Chainpurwa men were just taking to Chapra. From the Railway Station he went by boat to Gopalpur and found every house in the village deserted by the male occupants with the exception of the chaukidars.

The result of the Police investigation was that the Sub-Inspector found that Mukhram Singh's information was substantially true and on the 6th September, 1922, he sent up for trial 22 men from Chainpurwa and Naraon for offences under sections 147, 143 and 302 read with 149, Indian Penal Code, but his superior officers being of opinion that the accused in the counter-case should also be sent up for trial he on the 18th October, sent up 19 of the Gopalpur men for trial for similar offences.

The Sessions Judge began the trial of the former case on the 3rd January, 1923, and concluded the hearing on the 16th January. He began the other case on the 23rd January and concluded the hearing on the 31st January. On the 3rd February, 1923, he delivered judgment in both cases. Out of the 20 men on the Chainpurwa and Naraon side, who were committed for trial, the Sessions Judge acquitted five and sentenced the remainder under section 302 read with section 149, Indian Penal Code as follows: Narayan Singh and Lalji Singh to death; and Ram Andeshi Singh, Birchi Singh, Rambaran Singh, Suraj Singh, Sheobaran Singh, Hazari Singh, Sheonandan Singh, Khuba Ahir, Naresh Singh, Sahdeo Singh, Chanderdeo Tewari and Jwala Singh to transportation for life. Out of the 18 men in the counter-case the learned Judge acquitted nine and sentenced the remainder under section 302 read with section 149, Indian Penal Code, as follows: Nareshi Singh to death, and Kamla Singh and Mukhram Singh, Narsingh Singh, Prem Narain Singh, Subhag Singh, Pokhan Ahir, Ambika Ahir and Jamuna Singh to transportation for life.

The accused in the former case have preferred Appeal No. 20 (Death Reference No. 6) and those in the latter have preferred Appeals Nos. 21 and 22 of 1923 (Death Reference No. 7 of 1923).

Before proceeding to deal with each appeal separately, it is necessary to observe that neither the Public Prosecutor nor the learned Judge nor in one case the Assessors seem to have believed the respective accounts of either party regarding the origin of the fight. The Police were inclined to believe the "cherai" (grazing) story but in the Sessions Court the Public Prosecutor appears to have boldly told the Court that he would not support either that story or the paddy cutting story and he set up altogether a new theory, namely, that both sides by agreement had fought a pitched battle. The learned Judge has accepted that view with the result that a situation of some difficulty has arisen before us.

In the case against the Chainpurwa and Naraon men, the accused cross-examined the prosecution witnesses in order to show that their story as to the grazing and the capture of cattle was false, but they did not call any evidence to show that their own account as to the paddy cutting was true. Some of them, however, went to considerable trouble to call evidence to prove alibis.

In the counter-case, the Gopalpur men took the same course and one of the Assessors was inclined to believe the story of paddy cutting set up by Ram Andeshi.

Before us the learned Counsel for the appellants in both appeals have had a somewhat easy task in overthrowing the finding of the learned Judge that there was a premeditated and preconcerted fight, for the simple reason that there is no evidence whatsoever upon which such a finding can be based. The learned Judge in the case against the Chainpurwa men relies on the evidence of prosecution witness Sukan Ahir, but, that evidence, in my opinion, proves very little. It merely shows that the two sides were at enmity with each other and that a fight did take place. It altogether fails to show how the fight originated and it cannot warrant the inference that the parties turned out by agreement to have a fight merely for the sake of fighting.

Mr. Hasan Imam on behalf of the Chainpurwa and Naraon men and Mr. Manuk on behalf of the Gopalpur men, therefore, both contend that as the learned Judge's finding cannot be supported and as he himself has disbelieved the prosecution story in both cases the convictions cannot possibly be maintained.

The learned Government Advocate, however, takes up the following position. He agrees with the Police in accepting the churai theory and contends that the conviction of the Chainpurwa and Naraon men is correct on the ground that they formed an unlawful assembly with the common object of assailing the opposite party who had lawfully seized their cattle.

With regard to the counter-case, the learned Government Advocate admits that the allegation of paddy cutting is false, but he does not accept Mr. Manuk's contention that the Gopalpur men acted in the exercise of the right of private defence of person and property. The learned Government Advocate contends that in this case the right of private defence did not arise and that the Gopalpur men went to the assistance of Mukhram Singh not for the purpose of defending him but for the purpose of having a trial of strength with their enemies. It is obvious, therefore, that the Crown has an easier task in Appeal No. 20 of 1923 than in Appeals Nos. 21 and 22.

I propose now to discuss the evidence in Appeal No. 20 and the connected Death Reference No. 6 of 1923.

[After discussing the evidence His Lordship concluded:]

In these circumstances I agree with the Police in accepting the story told by the Gopalpur men as to the origin of the riot.

The evidence in the case conclusively shows that there was enmity between Askrit Singh of Gopalpur and Ganesh Singh of Naraon and generally between the residents of the two villages and the nature of the injuries found by the Civil Surgeon upon the eight men killed in the fight clearly shows the deadly nature of the contest. Death in every case was due to injury in a vital part such as the chest, or the stomach or the head and caused by a weapon such as a spear or an axe and there can be no doubt that the offences of murder under section 302, Indian Penal Code, and rioting accompanied with murder under section 302 read with section 149, Indian Penal Code have been committed.

It remains to consider which, if any, of the appellants were members of the riot, and it is necessary, therefore, to examine the evidence against each of the accused.

[After examining evidence against each accused and finding which of them were members of the riot His Lordship proceeded as follows:—]

It now remains to consider the sentences. The learned Judge has sentenced Lalji and Narain Singh to death on the ground that they were the leaders. Now there is nothing to show that Narain took any active part. Mukhram and Prem Narain state that he was armed with a garasa and Bhirgu mentions him in his dying declaration; but he certainly cannot be placed in the same category as Lalji Singh who appears to have taken a leading part in the attack. In my opinion, Narain Singh does not deserve a sentence of death any more than many of his co-appellants who have been sentenced to transportation for life. The sentence of death passed upon him must, therefore, in my opinion, be set aside and altered to one of transportation for life.

With regard to Lalji, he certainly was a leader but Naresh and Sheodani Singh appear to have been just as active in using their weapons and if it could be quite certain that the witnesses were in a position to state what part the various appellants took in the attack it might have been possible to confirm the sentence of death passed upon Lalji; but it is extremely doubtful whether in a mob of 60 to 70 men the prosecution witnesses even as regards their own injuries can be trusted as to the specific acts ascribed to the various accused and I think it would be safer to put all in the same category and to sentence them to transportation for life. The sentence of death passed upon Lalji will, therefore, be set aside and altered to one of transportation for life.

There can be no doubt that the injuries caused were such that the offence was one within section 302, Indian Penal Code, and no other sentence but that of transportation for life can be passed in this case.

The result is that the appeal of Jwala is allowed and we direct that he be acquitted and set at liberty.

The sentences on Lalji and Narain are modified as indicated above to transportation for life.

The appeals of the remaining appellants Khuba Raut, Ram Andeshi, Sheo-baran, Birchi, Suraj, Rambaran, Hazari, Sheonandan Singh, Sahadeo Singh, Naresh, Sheodani and Chanderdeo Tewari are dismissed.

DEATH REFERENCE NO. 7 OF 1923

WITH

CR. A. Nos. 21 AND 22 OF 1923.

In this case out of 17 men from Gopalpur whom the Police sent up for trial under the orders of the Superintendent of Police and against their own judgment, only ten were convicted. Out of these ten men the appellant Ram Nareshi alias Nareshi has been sentenced to death and the remainder have been sentenced to transportation for life, under section 302 read with section 149, Indian Penal Code.

The learned Judge states that he is not in a position to find which of the accused caused the deaths of Deonandan Singh, Kamla Singh and Deepan Singh, but he finds that one or more members of the unlawful assembly committed murder by killing these men in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly.

As in the counter-case the learned Judge has declined to accept the story that Deonandan and Kamla caught a number of Ahirs of Gopalpur cutting their paddy. The Gopalpur men, who were the accused in this case, have given no substantive evidence in proof of their allegation that the riot originated out of a seizure of cattle by Mukhram Singh, but fortunately for them the prosecution have put upon the record the evidence given by the appellants in the counter-case when they were prosecution witnesses. It is clear from that evidence and from the reasoning of the learned Judge that the account given by the Gopalpur men as to the origin of the riot is substantially correct.

There is no evidence in support of the theory put forward by the learned Judge that the Narain and the Chainpurwa men came to remonstrate with the Gopalpur men as to the cattle grazing of the previous day and of previous acts of aggression and that a quarrel broke out in which both parties joined and engaged in something in the nature of a pitched battle.

LALJI SINGH v. EMPEROR.

The learned Government Advocate, however, contends that accepting that the riot originated as alleged by the Gopalpur men in the seizure of cattle by Mukham Singh yet this is a case in which no right of private defence can be claimed by the Gopalpur men. He contends that in taking the cattle to the orchard of Mukha Singh and collecting re-inforcements and in awaiting the attack of the Chainpurwa and Naraon men the appellants in this case were clearly members of an unlawful assembly, and he relies strongly upon Kabir-ud-din v. King-Emperor (1). In that case the learned Judges appear to have approved of the following statement of the law as given in the Sessions Judge's charge to the Jury: "In laying down the law I rely first, on the clear language of section 141 (4), which refers to an actual right as well as a supposed one, and then on a long series of rulings which begin with Queen v. Jeolall (2) and end with Anant Pandit v. Madhusudan Mandal (3). There can, I tell you, be no right of private defence either on one side or on the other, where both parties are evidently aware of what is likely to happen and turn out in force. The right of private defence cannot be pleaded by persons who expecting to be attacked go out of their way to court an attack. When the parties of the complainant and accused are prepared to fight, it is immaterial who was the first to attack, unless it be shown that the accused were acting in the exercise of the right of private defence. If the accused—it was held by the Judges at Allahabad not many years ago, see Queen-Empress v. Prag Dat (4)—were determined to vindicate their supposed rights and engaged in a fight with men equally determined to vindicate them no question of private defence can arise. It comes to this simply, that our law does not permit rival claimants to enter in cold blood into battle to settle a dispute which can be settled in a lawful manner." And the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court draw attention to the words of Holloway, J., in Madras High Court Proceedings, 8th January 1873, No. 59 (5) where that learned Judge observes as follows: "The natural tendency of the law of all civilised States is to restrict within constantly narrowing limits the right of self-help, and it is certain that no other principle can be safely applied to a country like this."

It is clear, however, that the decision in Kabiruddin's Case (1) was founded on the fact that the question of possession was in dispute and that the appellants before their Lordships were members of an unlawful assembly, firstly, because they were attempting to enforce a right or a supposed right by violence, and, secondly, because there was sufficient time to inform the authorities. Where, however, possession is undisputed or where there is no time to seek the assistance of the authorities, I cannot agree that there is any obligation upon a person entitled to exercise the right of private defence and to defend his person or his property to retire from the field merely because his assailant threatens him with violence. I see nothing wrong on the part of the Gopalpur men in awaiting the coming of their antagonists and in maintaining their possession of the cattle which they had lawfully seized. The law did not require them to retire as soon as Deonandan and Lalji went away to fetch re-inforcements. The learned Government Advocate seems to suggest that it was their duty to release the cattle and to complain to the authorities, but I entirely disagree with him. He next contends that it was not their intention to impound the cattle at all; and that their object was merely to fight for fighting's sake; and he relies on the circumstance that they remained in Mukha Singh's orchard for an hour before the fight began. There is, however, no clear evidence in support of the theory that the common object of the Gopalpur men was not to resist aggression but to resort to the ordeal of battle. The facts are equally consistent with their allegation that they did intend to take the cattle by the Local Board Road and that as it passes Chainpurwa it was necessary for them to collect men in order to resist a possible attack. Something might perhaps have been said for the learned Government Advocate's theory if they had let the cattle go and had then assembled on Mukha Singh's orchard and given a challenge to the other side to come there and fight; but the evidence does not disclose any such conduct and as the rescue of the cattle amounted to theft under the Indian Penal Code, apart from an offence under the Cattle Trespass Act, the right of private defence of property was, in my opinion, clearly available to them. As a matter of fact the cattle escaped in the course of the fight and, in my opinion, it is established that the Gopalpur men did intend to maintain their possession of them.

Again, if the Chainpurwa and Naraon men entered upon Mukha Singh's plot without the consent of the Gopalpur men and with the object of committing an assault then they were guilty of the offence of criminal trespass and the Gopalpur men had the right to eject them by such force as was necessary. It would have been otherwise if the entry was made in answer to a challenge to fight, but of this there is no evidence.

I think then that the appellants are entitled to plead section 97 of the Indian Penal Code and the only question is whether the force used was excessive.

Having regard to the savage nature of the attack and to the fact that no less than five of their men were killed I cannot say that the right of private defence was exceeded by the appellants. As was observed by Jenkins, C. J., in Bhut Nath Dome v. Emperor (6) a man acting under an apprehension of death cannot be expected to judge too nicely the force of his own blow; and the Common Law of England which is substantially also our law on this topic says that he is not bound to modulate his defence step by step according to the attack before there is reason to believe that the attack is over; he is not obliged to retreat but may pursue his adversary till he finds himself out of danger and if in a conflict between them he happens to kill such killing is justifiable.

The evidence is that the attack was commenced by the Chainpurwa and Naraon men and, in my opinion the Gopalpur men did not use unnecessary force in repelling it.

The learned Counsel for the appellants in one part of his argument seemed to suggest that once the right of private defence is conceded there can be no conviction under section 302 read with section 149, Indian Penal Code. He contended that individuals might perhaps be convicted of exceeding the right of private defence but there could be no conviction of the other members or the assembly of that excess by implication, and he relied on Kunja Bhuniya v. Emperor (7). I do not, however, understand that case to lay down any such general proposition. In my opinion the law is that if the members of an assembly act with the common object of exceeding the right of private defence, then they are not only all generally guilty of rioting but also of the particular offence constituted by such excess of user.

Under our law an assault is a crime except under certain special circumstances. But in one sense criminal force is a continuing wrong and there is a limit where the plea of justification ceases to operate and the liability to punishment revives; if one member in prosecution of the common object of an assembly exceeds that limit every other member shares with him the guilt of his act.

In the present case, however, the right of private defence not having been exceeded the question does not arise.

The result is that the conviction and sentences must be set aside, and, acquitting the appellants, we direct that they be set at liberty.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—The appellant has been convicted by a Presidency Magistrate of an offence under section 406 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a term of two years. Section 406 under which the appellant was convicted relates to criminal breach of trust and criminal breach of trust as defined in section 405 means dishonest misappropriation or conversion by some one of property entrusted to him or over which he has been given dominion.

The facts of the present case are as follow:—On the 31st of May last year the appellant called at Messrs. Boseck and Co. a jeweller in Chowringhee Road and represented that he was a relation of the Raja of Naldanga and stated that he wanted to buy some jewellery for his daughter's wedding and that he wanted the goods for approval as his daughter could not come out. According to the prosecution story the appellant selected some articles of jewellery and signed a receipt for them in the inspection book and took them away. He subsequently returned on the 1st of June, brought back two of the articles taken by him on the 31st May of which he did not approve and selected some further articles of jewellery which he took away also on approval. On the 4th June, the accused came again to the shop and took some further articles which he put on his person. It subsequently transpired that on the 2nd June, he had sold the articles taken away by him on the 31st May and the 1st June, as to the articles taken away on the 1st June at prices about a third of those at which they were priced by Messrs. Boseck & Co. Under these circumstances the appellant has been convicted and it is now contended on his behalf that he was wrongfully convicted of criminal breach of trust under the provisions of section 406 of the Indian Penal Code and reliance is placed on the provisions of section 78 of the Indian Contract Act and Illustration (b) thereto. It is said that when a person is given articles of jewellery, as in the present case, for approval, nothing being agreed or said as to the terms of payment, the property in the goods passes to the person entrusted with the goods, whenever he exercises his approval and elects to take the goods and, it is said, that thereupon the trust ceases and the property becomes the absolute property of the person to whom the goods have been handed over and reliance is further placed on two cases that were cited to us in the argument, namely, Ex parte Wingfield in re Florence (1) and Krikham v. Attenborough (2). Both those cases are cited as authorities for the proposition that where property has been handed over on approval the property passes to the person to whom it is entrusted as soon as he has elected to approve of the property and that in these circumstances no case of criminal breach of trust arises. As against this we have been referred by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer to the case of Weinert v. Gill (3) which, it is said, closely resembles the facts of this case. It is necessary under the circumstances to see on what terms the goods were entrusted or handed over to the appellant on the 31st of May and the 1st of June of the last year. The first prosecution witness Mr. Ball, who is a partner or Director of Messrs. Boseck and Co., states that he saw the appellant on the 31st May and that the arrangement was that the goods approved of were to be paid for in cash. Mr. Ball states with regard to the goods taken away on the 1st June that the appellant stated that he would pay for these goods together with those previously taken away. In cross-examination he stated that there was no writing that the payment was to be in cash and with regard to the visit on the 1st June he states that the cashier was ordered to make out cash bills as the accused was ready to pay and he denied that there was any talk of payment by instalments. I should say that in the events which have happened certain small sums were paid by the accused on account.

but I do not think that this really affects the matter. What one has got to see is what was the arrangement arrived at between the parties on the 31st May and the 1st June. The evidence of prosecution witness No. 5, the cashier of Messrs. Boseck and Co., is also material. He stated that on the 4th of June he made out two bills at the request of the appellant and that the appellant handed him a note for a thousand rupees and asked him to debit 800 rupees to one bill and 200 rupees to the other. It appears that the handing of the note for one thousand rupees took place after the first visit of the appellant to Messrs. Boseck and Co's shop on the 4th June. On the first occasion he fumbled in his pockets and pretended that he had left his money behind by mistake and asked Messrs. Boseck and Co. to send an assistant with him to his house ostensibly to fetch the money. Then, as I have already said, when he came back, instead of paying the whole amount of the bills that were made out, he tendered the note for thousand rupees making a request for its division between the two bills in the manner, I have already indicated. The cashier states that he thereupon took the two bills to Mr. Ball for his signature and that Mr. Ball said that this was not the arrangement, the arrangement made on the 1st June being that the goods taken away on that day were to be paid for in cash on the spot and that with regard to the other goods taken on the 31st May half was to be paid in cash on approval and the other half subsequently.

After reading the evidence and considering the documents the conclusion I have come to is that nothing was said about the payment of cash as against the acceptance of the goods on the 31st May. But I accept, as the learned Magistrate has done Mr. Ball's account of what happened on the 1st of June, because, I think that this is borne out by two things which subsequently happened, that is to say, by the conduct of the accused, to which I have already referred on the 4th June when he purported to be ready to make a cash payment for the bills of the whole amount, and also the part payment in respect of the other articles and I think it is further corroborated by what the accused himself surreptitiously wrote on the Exhibits 4 and 5. If there had been no arrangement for payment in cash either on the 31st May or on the 1st June there would have been no need to write as the accused did on Exhibit 4, "payment of Rs. 200 a month," and further to write "instalment payments" on Exhibit 5. Under these circumstances it seems to me that the arrangement of the 1st June, was that the property in the goods was only to pass if the appellant exercised his option to take the goods and paid cash in respect of the goods, that is to say, a payment in full in respect of the goods taken on the 1st June, and a payment as to half the amount in cash for the goods which he took on the 31st May. In this view of the case the trust continued until the option to take the goods was exercised and the cash payment was made and the property in the goods did not pass from Messrs. Boseck and Co. to the accused until both these conditions were fulfilled. This being so we think that the offence under section 406 of which the accused was convicted has been established and that the only course open to us is to dismiss the appeal. We, however, under the circumstances of the case, reduce the sentence to 18 months.

With regard to the two applications made by the purchasers for the return to them of the goods which they have purchased from the accused the only course open to us is to dismiss these applications having regard to our finding in the appeal that the property in the goods remained in Messrs. Boseck and Co., and has never passed to the accused. This being so the accused, could give no title to the purchasers and the two applications are accordingly dismissed.

An Appellate Court is not required by law to write a judgment when dismissing an appeal summarily, but it is necessary that it should give reasons for dismissing the same. [p. 166, col. 1.]

Gurubari Behara v. Emperor, 43 Ind. Cas. 439; 2 P. L. J. 695; 4 P. L. W. 153; 19 Cr. L. J. 151, followed.

Where a person arrested in execution of a decree refuses to follow the peon who arrests him, and threatens to use violence, the whole occurrence amounts to one offence under section 189, Penal Code, and a conviction for two offences under sections 186 and 189, Penal Code, is not justified. [p. 166, col. 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the District and Sessions Judge, Monghyr, refusing to interfere with an order of the District Magistrate, dated the 22nd May 1924, by which he dismissed an appeal against an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Jamui, dated the 20th of May 1924.

Mr. Janak Kishor, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Jamui under sections 186 and 189 of the Indian Penal Code. He has been sentenced to simple imprisonment for fifteen days and to pay a fine of Rs. 50 under section 186; and simple imprisonment for six weeks and to pay a fine of Rs. 50 under section 189, Indian Penal Code. His appeal has been summarily dismissed under section 421 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the learned District Magistrate and an application for revision has also been dismissed by the learned Sessions Judge.

The facts are shortly these. It appears that one Mr. Christian obtained a decree for money against the petitioner. He took out execution of the decree and applied for the arrest of the petitioner in execution of the decree. The warrant of arrest was issued by the Munsif and made over to the peon Ajodhya Singh. Ajodhya Singh reported that he went to the place of the accused, showed him the warrant, arrested him and demanded the payment of the decretal amount and failing payment, he directed him to follow him. The accused, however, refused the Court's order to pay the amount and cried out "Go out, I do not obey the Court's order and I would not pay the amount". The peon became frightened and left the place. The Munsif thereupon lodged a complaint under sections 186 and 189 of the Indian Penal Code, and the accused was placed on his trial and convicted and sentenced as stated above. The finding of the the Trying Magistrate is that the peon was obstructed in the discharge of his duty and he was also threatened and deterred from discharging his duty as a public servant.

The first point taken by the learned Vakil for the petitioner is that the District Magistrate was wrong in dismissing the appeal summarily without writing out a judgment. Now, section 421 of the Code of Criminal Procedure empowered the District Magistrate to dismiss the appeal summarily and it is not necessary that in dismissing an appeal under section 421 the Magistrate should write out a judgment as required by section 367 of the Code. The learned Vakil relies upon the case of Gurubari Behara v. Emperor (1). That case is a clear authority for the proposition that an Appellate Court is not required by law to write a judgment when dismissing an appeal summarily. It is, no doubt, necessary that in dismissing the appeal summarily the Appellate Court should give reasons for dismissing the same. A mere order to the effect that the appeal is summarily dismissed, without giving any reason whatsoever would be, according to the authorities, bad in law. In the present case the Magistrate gives his reasons for dismissing the appeal summarily; and, having regard to the fact that the issue for decision in the case was a very simple issue of facts and there were no complications in the case, I am not prepared to say that the dismissal of the appeal under section 421 was in the present case bad in law.

The second point taken by the learned Vakil is that upon the finding arrived at, the utmost that can be said is that only one offence was committed and the conviction for two offences under sections 186 and 189 was not justifiable. In my opinion, this contention is sound. What has been found is that the petitioner refused to follow the peon when he arrested him and threatened to use violence towards him. In my opinion, the whole occurrence amounts to one offence under section 189, Indian Penal Code; and two separate convictions under sections 186 and 189 are bad in law. I would, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence under section 186, Indian Penal Code.

As regards the conviction under section 189, it has been contended that the facts found do not amount to an offence under section 189. I am, however, of opinion that the Trying Magistrate was right in his finding that the facts do amount to an offence under section 189. As regards the sentence, however, the learned Trying Magistrate has observed that he would have let off the accused with a punishment of fine only; but, having regard to the fact that the accused was an elderly man and has lived to an age to know that laws are to be obeyed and debts to be honoured, he thought that a severe sentence was required. I am of opinion that the fact of his being an elderly man does not aggravate the nature of the offence. I am informed that the petitioner has already undergone imprisonment for more than three weeks.

Having regard to the circumstances of the case I am of opinion that the sentence already undergone is sufficient to meet the ends of justice, I, therefore, reduce the sentence of imprisonment under section 189, Indian Penal Code, to the period already undergone. The sentence of fine under section 189 will stand. The fine imposed under section 186, Indian Penal Code, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 24th April 1924.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Applicants.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is, (if it were not for the referring order of Mr. Justice Boys in which he seems rightly, in our opinion, to think that further consideration is required of one authority to which we will refer in a moment), a matter of no importance to anybody except the parties, none of whom seem to be very attractive persons, or to be worth the time which has been already spent upon them by a large number of judicial authorities. Somehow or other Kashi Ram, the present applicant, got it into his head that he had been robbed by two prostitutes and their brother, or one or other of them. Ultimately criminal proceedings were taken against these persons, or rather against the two women, their brother being omitted from the charge. The two women were acquitted, and now the brother, who was only verbally charged and never put upon his trial, wants to vindicate the law and clear himself by taking proceedings against Kashi Ram and his associates who made the charge. The Magistrate, who was originally seized with the matter in Saharanpur, rightly, according to our view, held that the offence committed by Kashi Ram and his two associates was an offence under section 211 and no preliminary sanction was necessary. In revision the matter came before the Sessions Judge who held the contrary and referred to the authority which we have already mentioned, namely, Emperor v. Hardwar Pat (1). He then, in the ordinary course, referred the matter to the High Court, thinking the Magistrate was wrong and also submitted the matter to the Magistrate again for his explanation. The Magistrate was converted by the authority which the Sessions Judge quoted and being bound by a two Judge decision of this Court, naturally came to the conclusion that his previous opinion was wrong, saying that he was not aware of the authority when he decided the case. The matter thereupon came before Mr. Justice Boys on a reference from the Sessions Judge, and Mr. Justice Boys, not agreeing with the view laid down in the case in Emperor v. Hardwar Pat (1), referred the matter to a Bench, and it now comes before us with a view to clear the ground, if possible. In our view there is a fallacy underlying the decision in Emperor v. Hardwar Pat (1) which Mr. Justice Boys has rightly pointed out. The mere fact that subsequent proceedings in Court are taken either against the person originally charged, or against somebody else, cannot effect what was done when the original charge was made, if it was a charge. In Emperor v. Hardwar Pal (1) a charge was made against several people including one S, but S was never charged in Court. S was not put upon his trial and no proceedings were taken against him. The other people were, and the ratio decidendi in Emperor v. Hardwar Pal (1) is that the charge against S amounted to a charge in Court because Court proceedings were taken against somebody else. In this respect we are unable to agree with Emperor v. Hardwar Pal (1). It so happens as regards the question, what amounts to a charge under section 211 and what is a mere report which comes within section 182, that I myself, on a previous occasion sitting alone, happen to have been compelled to express my opinion. Possibly an English lawyer is tempted to take a broader view, inasmuch as in England the meaning of "charge" is clearly defined, and the step involved in making a charge is identified, because every Station Officer has a charge-sheet, and if the complainant makes a report desiring that criminal proceedings shall be brought, he is asked if he is prepared to sign the charge-sheet and if he does so, he identifies himself as the person making the charge. If he says no, it is left to the Station Officer to decide whether he, as Station Officer, will continue the matter by making the charge himself. But, in substance there ought not to be any real difficulty in deciding the question where a report stops and charge begins, and my brother and I, agreeing in substance with the view which I took in the case which I decided, reported as Mathura Prasad v. Emperor (2) have agreed upon the following formula which in our view, in substance, not necessarily in every term or expression, correctly states the dividing line between the two classes of acts:—

"If the complainant confines himself to reporting what he knows of the facts, stating his suspicions, and leaving the matter to be further investigated by the Police, or leaving the Police to take such course as they think right in the performance of their duty, he may be making a report, but he is not making a charge. But if he takes the further step, without waiting for any official investigation, of definitely alleging his belief in the guilt of a specified person, and his desire that the specified person be proceeded against in Court, that act of his, whether verbal or written, if made to an officer of the law authorised to initiate proceedings based upon the complainant's statement, whether amounting to an expression of the complainant's belief in the guilt of the specified person, or his desire that Court proceedings be taken against him, amounts to making a charge."

Applying that to the facts of this case, what happened was, that these three people, having apparently reason to suspect the other three of theft, approached the Police and desired that a search be made. Up to that time they had made no charge. Search was made in their presence, and an attractive article of clothing was identified by Kashi Ram as being unlawfully in the box of Miyan Jan, the present complainant. He identified it and indicated to the Police Officer that Miyan Jan was guilty either of having stolen, or wrongfully received it knowing it to have been stolen. That, in our view amounted to a charge. The Magistrate was right, on the complaint of Miyan Jan, in formulating a charge against Kashi Ram of having made that charge, assuming it to have been false to Kashi Ram's knowledge. With regard to the other two persons, Shikri Prasad and Dip Chand, all that we know about them is that they were present, and may fairly be presumed to have demonstrated a sympathetic approval of the conduct of Kashi Ram. Whether this amounts, as a matter of special pleading, to aiding and abetting Kashi Ram in making the charge, is a matter of no importance. We think that justice will be done by sending back the record with a direction to the Magistrate to proceed with the case against Kashi Ram. The charge against the other two persons is not pressed, and, therefore, the case against them must not be proceeded with. It should be added that the precise question of formal sanction is no longer relevant because of the amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that under section 195 (1)-(b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure a complaint by the Court was not necessary because the charge was not in a Court.

—Conspiracy to overawe Government by killing Europeans—Conviction for conspiracy to overawe Government—Subsequent trial for conspiracy to kill Europeans, maintainability of

A person, who has already been convicted of an offence under section 121A, Penal Code, for a conspiracy to overawe the Government of India by means of criminal force, to wit, by causing bombs to be thrown at British officers, cannot, on the same facts, be subsequently convicted under section 120B, Penal Code, for a conspiracy to kill the Europeans, having regard to section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for in such a case there are not two conspiracies; one to overawe the Government of India and another to kill the Europeans, but the conspiracy is one, the killing of Europeans being the means to be employed for carrying out the object of overawing the Government of India.

Appeal from an order of the Special Magistrate with section 30 powers, Gujranwala, dated the 10th May 1923.

Babu S. C. Chatterji, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Hussain alias Umar has been convicted of two offences, one under sections 302/120B of the Indian Penal Code for having entered into a criminal conspiracy with the Mujahidins in Asmas, Chamarkand, and British India to kill European British subjects in the Punjab, and the other under section 20 of the Indian Arms Act for having imported bombs, rifles, and ammunition into the Punjab and concealed them at Kot Kazi in the Gujranwala District. He has been sentenced to seven years' imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500 for the former offence and to seven years' imprisonment for the latter.

The appellant was tried by a Magistrate exercising powers under section 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and his first contention is that the Magistrate was not competent to try him for an offence under sections 302/120B of the Indian Penal Code. This contention is wrong. Murder was not committed in pursuance of the conspiracy, so that the offence was not punishable with death and the Magistrate was competent to try it.

But the appellant's second contention that section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, is a bar to the trial for the offence under sections 302/120B by reason of his having already been convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge of Peshawar on the same facts of an offence under section 121A of the Indian Penal Code appears to be correct. The charge on which he was convicted in the case tried at Peshawar was that he had at Chamarkand conspired to overawe the Government of India by means of criminal force to wit by causing bombs to be thrown at British officers. Although the charge in that case was for an offence falling under a different section of the Indian Penal Code from that under which the offence falls of which he has been convicted in the present case there is no practical distinction between the two offences. There were not two distinct conspiracies, one to overawe the Government of India and another to kill the Europeans; but the conspiracy was one, killing of Europeans being the means which was to be employed for carrying out the object of overawing and waging war against the Government of India. At any rate the facts constituting the two offences were exactly the same and the appellant could have been convicted in the former case of the offence for which he has now been tried if the Additional Sessions Judge of Peshawar was competent to try it. The Magistrate thinks that the offence was not committed in the Punjab and that, therefore, the Additional Sessions Judge of Peshawar could not have tried it but he appears to be confusing the acts committed in pursuance of the conspiracy with the conspiracy itself. The conspiracy to commit murder was entered into at Chamarkand beyond the limits of British India, and the Additional Sessions Judge of Peshawar was competent to try the appellant for that offence under the provisions of section 188 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I, hold, therefore, that section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code is a bar to the trial for the offence under sections 302/120B of the Indian Penal Code.

There is, however, no such bar to the trial for the offence under the Arms Act, and I think the conviction for that offence is justified. Bombs, rifles, and ammunition were found buried in a house at Kot Kazi in the Gujranwala District. The evidence of the approver, Obedullah shows that four bombs were brought to that house by the present appellant and his evidence is sufficiently corroborated by the appellant's confession recorded by a Magistrate on the 3rd September 1921, the day of his arrest, in which the appellant said he had brought bombs to Kot Kazi from Chamarkand. That Magistrate has been examined with regard to the confession and no reason has been shown for doubting that the confession was voluntarily made. I accordingly uphold the conviction and sentence for the offence under section 20 of the Indian Arms Act, for the reason given I set aside the conviction and sentence for the offence under sections 302/120B of the Indian Penal Code.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 146—"Competent Court," meaning of—Mutation order—Person entitled to possession, whether determined.

The words "competent Court" in section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not confined to mean only a "competent Civil Court." [p. 171, col. 2.]

An order of a Revenue Court directing mutation to be made in favour of a certain person is an order of a competent Court determining the person entitled to possession within the meaning of section 146 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. [ibid.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, Etawah, dated the 17th of April 1924.

Messrs. Baleshwari Parshad, Kumuda Prasad and Ambika Prasad, for the Applicant.

Dr. M. Wali Ullah, for the Opposite Party.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Jado Rai died on May the 9th, 1923. There were three claimants to his property. Firstly, the present applicant, his widow, secondly, some collaterals and thirdly, Sri Thakurji through Sheo Manohar. With the third of these we are not concerned. A civil suit was filed on behalf of Sri Thakurji but Sheo Manohar expressed his inability to pursue it and it was dismissed. The remaining two parties, the widow applicant and the collaterals have been contending before the Magistrates under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure and in mutation proceedings before the Revenue Court. At the request of the parties on the 10th of August 1923, the District Magistrate attached the property under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In the mutation proceedings mutation was ordered on the 20th of February 1924 in favour of the widow practically on the basis of title. No emphasis, however, need be laid particularly on this last point because whether the mutation Court finds a party entitled on the basis of possession, supported by evidence of title or on title alone, it declares that person's possession and if necessary orders that he be put into possession. In this case the order would necessarily be one that the applicant widow be put into possession as she could not be in possession already, the property being under attachment. In pursuance of this order in favour of the present applicant widow, the Assistant Collector on the 26th of February ordered the Receiver to "hand over" the property to the widow. One day before this, the Collector had, on the application of the opposite party without notice to the present applicant, passed an order staying the delivery of the property to the applicant by the Receiver. Of this order the Assistant Collector had been unaware. On the 28th of February the Collector refused till the hearing of mutation appeal an application by the widow that the property be given to her. This appeal was dismissed on the 17th of April and on the 8th of April the Collector again refused the widow's application for possession until the period of limitation for a second appeal had expired or if a second appeal was filed till that appeal was decided. The applicant widow, next on the 17th of April 1924 tried to get the Assistant Collector to order the execution of his order of the 26th of February. This he naturally refused to do in view of the fact that his superior Court, (that of the Collector) had already refused to allow the property to be handed over. At the end of all these proceedings, the applicant has come up in revision against the order of the Assistant Collector dated the 17th of April and has made no application against the order of the Collector dated the 8th of April. If, however, it appears to me that the Collector was not justified in refusing to hand over possession, I think, I in turn should not be justified in refusing to give the applicant here an order merely because she has applied in revision against the order of the Assistant Collector instead of that of the Collector. It would obviously be desirable in the plain interest of justice to pass such an order as I could properly pass under section 561 (a) if not otherwise. In one sense the applicant in not wholly to blame for coming up against the wrong order, for originally it was the Collector himself who made a mistake on the 25th of February 1924 in passing his order without notice. It was this that led to alternative cross-applications in his Court and that of the Assistant Collector. The point now that I have to consider is whether the order of the Revenue Court in favour of the applicant widow was an order such as is contemplated by section 146 clause (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, i. e., an order of a competent Court determining the person entitled to possession. Two questions arise in this connection:—Firstly. Do the words "competent Court" mean "a competent Civil Court"? I think that it is really clear that they are not so limited. In the first place where the intention is to confine the power to a Civil Court we find it so stated and secondly the Code of 1882 actually had the phrase "a competent Civil Court" and the word "civil" was deliberately dropped in the Code of 1891. The next question is whether the Revenue Court's order under section 40 determined the person entitled to possession. I think this also is hardly open to doubt. Section 40 clause (2) says that the Court, if unable to satisfy itself as to which party is in possession "shall ascertain by summary enquiry who is the person best entitled to the property and shall put such person in possession". It, therefore, appears clear that a competent Court has now determined the right of the widow-applicant here to possession. I may note here that the Collector has not supported his refusal to allow the widow to have possession by any argument that her right to possession has not been determined by a competent Court but merely apparently has been guided by his idea of its being likely to prove convenient to wait further till the matter had been conclusively determined in favour of the widow or the other party. Possession in this view might have to remain with the Receiver until the matter had been decided, some ten years hence, possibly more by the Privy Council.

The application is, therefore, allowed and I order the Collector to take action under section 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to release the property from attachment and to order the Receiver to hand it over to the applicant, Musammam Ram Sri.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 414, 562—Order under s. 562 passed in summary trial—Sentence—Appeal.

An order passed under section 562, Criminal Procedure Code, in a summary trial, is appealable. [p. 172, col. 2.]

Section 414, Criminal Procedure Code, says in what cases there shall be no appeal. It does not say in what cases there shall be an appeal. [ibid.]

Obiter.—An order under section 562, Criminal Procedure Code, does not amount to a sentence. [ibid.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 14th March 1924.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcolmson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against an order of the Sessions Judge refusing to hear the appeal of one Hira Lal against whom an order in a summary trial has been passed under section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the refusal being based on section 414 of the Criminal Procedure Code which he held barred the right of appeal.

Section 408 gives an appeal from the order of a Magistrate of the First Class to the Sessions Judge. Section 410 gives an appeal from the Sessions Judge to the High Court. If these two sections are uncontrolled there can be no question that an appeal lies under them from orders under section 562 by a Magistrate or by the Sessions Judge respectively.

The case for the Crown here is that as there was a summary trial an appeal is barred by section 414; the argument being that as there is no sentence at all it must be held to be a sentence less than the maximum which is referred to in section 414.

To support the exclusion of a right of appeal, it will have to be argued that "no sentence" is "a sentence of less than a certain maximum". I find it impossible to hold that this is a permissible meaning to give to the language used. It is only necessary to read section 414 to realise instantly on coming to the words "passes a sentence" that here there was no "sentence". It has not been suggested here that an order under section 562 amounts to a sentence. It clearly does not do so and in this connection reference may be made to the words in section 380 "pass such sentence or make such order". This, to my mind, is really sufficient to conclude the question. The learned Sessions Judge says: "Section 414 provides that notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained there shall be no appeal by a convicted person, in any case tried summarily, in which a Magistrate empowered to act under section 260, passes a sentence of fine not exceeding 200 rupees only." This is a perfectly correct statement of what section 414 provides, namely, that there shall be no appeal in certain cases. It does not say anything at all about whether there shall or shall not be an appeal in other cases but the learned Judge continues: "By this section an appeal is allowed only in cases in which the Magistrate empowered to act under section 260, Criminal Procedure Code, imposes a fine exceeding 200 rupees or passes a sentence of imprisonment". It is this latter paraphrase of the section that he has misdirected himself. The section says in what cases there shall be no appeal. It does not say in what cases there shall be an appeal and it is by paraphrasing it in this way that he suggests the inference that there shall be no appeal in other cases and in this way has led himself to the conclusion that the section says what it does not say that there shall be no appeal where there is no sentence at all.

There are one or two further points that I may mention. It is asked why should the Legislature have taken away any right of appeal when there is a definite sentence, certainly a fine, and possibly a sentence of imprisonment, and yet have allowed a right of appeal when no sentence was passed. An explanation readily suggests itself. It is quite conceivable that many persons would regard an order of release under section 562 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, coupled with having to enter into a bond to keep the peace and to be of good behaviour for any period up to three years, as something very much more serious than a substantive sentence of fine of, perhaps Rs. 10 or even Rs. 200. In this connection one may notice that an appeal always has been given to the District Magistrate against an order of a Magistrate demanding security for good behaviour, and now the right to appeal against an order for security for good behaviour and also an order for security for keeping the peace has been still further extended. There is, therefore, nothing whatever unnatural or unreasonable in giving a right of appeal to a person who under section 562 has to file a bond both for good behaviour and for keeping the peace. Again, there can be no particular significance in the fact that this was a summary trial. If there is anything in this argument for the exclusion of the right of appeal, that exclusion will be effected just as surely by section 413 whether the trial was summary or not as by anything in section 414 and we may, therefore, take it that anything which is authority for the proposition that section 414 excludes a right of appeal is equally authority in reference to section 413.

Again, if the argument for the Crown be accepted that a right of appeal is excluded by sections 413 and 414, then the whole right of appeal given by sections 408 and 410, under ordinary circumstances, goes clean out of the Statute Book. If that be so, then what is the meaning of the words in section 562, clause (3) "the High Court may, on appeal, when there is a right of appeal to such Court"? To suggest that there never is a right of appeal is to make nonsense of that clause. Section 562, clause (3), only happens to make mention of a right of appeal because it is considered desirable to give the High Court a power of what practically amounts to an enhancement when hearing the appeal. But in whatever connection the mention may be made of a right of appeal, it is a certain indication that such a right must exist. If then there is a right of appeal to the High Court from an order under section 562 made by a Sessions Court, there is no logic in suggesting that there is not a similar right of appeal to the Sessions Court from an order of a Magistrate.

The order of the Court is that the order of the Sessions Judge, dated the 14th of March 1924, dismissing the appeal is set aside and he is directed to re-admit it and hear it in accordance with law.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Two persons tried together—One person acquitted and other convicted—Appeal by convicted person—Appellate Court's right to express opinion against acquitted person—Remarks expunging of.

In disposing of the appeal of one of two co-accused, who were tried together, and one of whom was acquitted, the Appellate Court has no right to make use of expressions which amount to a finding that the acquitted accused was wrongly acquitted. Once a person is tried and acquitted of an offence by due process of law and no appeal is preferred against his acquittal, he must be deemed to be innocent of the charge upon which he was tried, and a Court superior to that which tried him has no right to express the opinion that he is in fact guilty, although acquitted by the Trial Court. The High Court will not allow such expressions to remain on record. [p. 174, Vol. 1.]

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 5th November 1923.

Sheikh Niaz Muhammad and Lala Lachmi Narain, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application on behalf of Abdul Aziz asking that certain statements concerning him appearing in the judgment of the Sessions Judge dated the 5th November 1923, should be expunged. The judgment in question was made upon an application by Abdul Aziz for an order for sanction of prosecution of certain witnesses who had given evidence in a criminal case in which he and one Abdul Majid had been prosecuted under section 381 of the Indian Penal Code. In that prosecution Abdul Majid was convicted of the offence charged; but the applicant was acquitted.

In the course of the judgment, which is now complained of, the learned Sessions Judge made the following remarks:—

"(1) The manner in which these cigarette cases were delivered at Jullundur does render it probable the applicant Abdul Aziz had a considerable hand in the successful delivery of this consignment. But as the prosecution witnesses were won over he was lucky enough to be acquitted though the lower Court was of opinion that a prima facie case had been made out against him and he was charged.

"(2) The case was a true one. The cigarette cases were stolen and one of the accused has been convicted. Therefore, I have no reason to believe that the witnesses falsely implicated this man. He, however, was lucky enough to get off because some of the witnesses were inimical or because some of the prosecution witnesses were won over to him."

In my opinion the learned Sessions Judge had no right to make use of expressions which amounted to a finding that the applicant had been wrongly acquitted. He was tried and acquitted by due process of law of the offence for which he had been tried. No appeal was ~~had~~ against that acquittal, and accordingly he must be deemed to be innocent of the charge upon which he was tried. The words used by the Sessions Judge place on the record an expression of opinion of a Court superior to that which tried the appellant to the effect that he is in fact guilty although acquitted by the Trial Court. In my opinion it would be a grave injustice to allow such expressions to remain on the record and I accordingly order that the words complained of be expunged from the judgment in question.

The weight to be attached to a decree must depend upon the particular circumstances of the case and no hard and fast rule can be laid down that a decree of a Civil Court is for ever and always binding on the Magistrate or that his discretion is never fettered. [p. 175, col. 1.]

Where in an application for maintenance under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code it appeared that some 13 months before the application the husband had obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights but soon after taking the wife to his house had turned her out with blows:

Held, that the Magistrate was justified in exercising his discretion in favour of the woman and in favour of absolving her from the condition that she must live with her husband. [p. 175, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference by the Sessions Judge of Benares recommending this Court to quash the order of the Joint Magistrate of Benares ordering the accused in the case Rajpatti to pay a monthly allowance of Rs. 8 to Musammat Deoli, the applicant in a case under section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It appears that on the 15th of November 1922 the husband got a decree against the wife for restitution of conjugal rights. The Magistrate in this case was asked by the wife to give her an order for maintenance, unrestricted by any condition that she should live with him. The order actually passed by the Magistrate does not expressly free her from any condition. But it was clearly intended so to do, in that the Magistrate says that he thinks "she is quite justified in refusing to live with him" and then goes on to give her an order. That order he was entitled to make under the proviso to clause (3) of section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code under ordinary circumstances. The learned Sessions Judge remarks that he would consider the Magistrate's order justified if the matter were res integra. But he considers that the decree passed on the 15th of November 1922 was binding on the Magistrate. It seems to me that the weight to be attached to a decree must depend upon the particular circumstances of the case and that no hard and fast rule can be laid down that a decree of a Civil Court is for ever and always binding on the Magistrate or that his discretion is never fettered. It is clear that if the decree had only been passed the day before it would require something very strong indeed to justify a Magistrate in ignoring it. It is equally clear that if it had been passed 20 years before and the woman had yearly endeavoured to get her husband to allow him to live with her and he had driven her out with blows, the Magistrate could not possibly be expected to hold himself bound in any way by the terms of that decree. Now in this case the decree was passed some 13 months before. She made her application on the 11th of January 1924. It is equally clear from her own evidence which I have had read to me that after the decree she was taken to her husband's house and was driven out from there with blows. In other words she was so ill-treated when there that she had to go. The truth of this evidence is confirmed by Damri the Chaudhri of the caste who says that he and others had to go to the husband's house at the request of the husband's mother in order to bring the applicant Musammatt Deoli away because there were constant rows and she was being ill-treated. Under the circumstances it appears to me that the Magistrate was justified in exercising his discretion in favour of the woman and in favour of absolving her from the condition that she must live with her husband. In fact, any other order would simply amount to this that the husband can first get a decree for restitution of conjugal rights and then turn his wife out without an allowance at all. Let the reference be returned.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 520—Sessions Judge's power to vary order of Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed in appeal—Courts of Appeal, Revision, Reference, or Confirmation, what are.

A Sessions Court has no power under section 520, Criminal Procedure Code, to vary or revise an order of a Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed in appeal against a conviction by a Sub-Magistrate, as, in respect of such orders, the Sessions Court is neither a Court of Appeal or Revision nor a Court of Reference or Confirmation. [p. 176, col. 2.]

Criminal Revision No. 236 of 1904; relied on.

A Court of Reference means a Court to which references are made and which on reference is entitled to go into the matters and dispose of them. [ibid.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 and 520 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of 30th October 1923 of the Sessions Court, South Arcot, in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 19 of 1923, preferred against the order, dated 1st February 1923, of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First-Class Magistrate, Chidambaram, in Criminal Appeal No. 57 of 1922.

SOMU PILLAI v. KRISHNA PILLAI.

Messrs. K.V. Krishnaswami Aiyar and S. Panchapagasa Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. V. L. Ethiraj and K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This is an application to revise the order of the Sessions Judge of South Arcot in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 19 of 1923. The complainant, Somu Pilli, brought a case of theft of bulls against the accused in the Court of the Second Class Magistrate of Chidambaram Taluk. The Sub-Magistrate convicted the accused and directed the bulls to be handed over to the complainant. The accused appealed to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chidambaram who acquitted the accused and declined to interfere with the order of the Sub-Magistrate regarding the bulls. Against this order of the Divisional Magistrate, an appeal was preferred to the Sessions Judge of South Arcot Division who set aside the order of the Divisional Magistrate and directed the bulls to be handed over to the accused. It is urged before me that the Sessions Judge had no power under section 520 to vary the order of the Divisional Magistrate. Section 520 is in these terms: "Any Court of Appeal, confirmation, reference or revision may direct any order under section 517, section 518 or section 519, passed by a Court subordinate thereto, to be stayed pending consideration by the former Court, and may modify, alter or annul such order and make any further orders that may be just." The Court of Session of South Arcot is not a Court of Appeal, so far as the order of the Second Class Magistrate concerned. Appeals from the decisions of Second Class Magistrate lie to the District Magistrate and to Sub-Divisional Magistrate who are empowered to hear appeals from Second Class Magistrate. So the Sessions Court is not a Court of Appeal so far as the Stationary Magistrate is concerned. It cannot be said to be a Court of Appeal in respect of the order by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate heard the appeal from the decision of the Second Class Magistrate and no second appeal lay to the Court of Session against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The Sessions Court is not a Court of confirmation in cases of this kind. It was feebly urged by Mr. Ethiraj that the Sessions Court may be called a Court of Reference. I think a Court of Reference means a Court to which references are made and which on reference is entitled to go into the matters and dispose of them. The High Court is a Court of Reference in Jury cases where the Judge differs from the Jury. The Sessions Court is not a Court of Revision so far as the judgment of the Second Class Magistrate are concerned and the Sessions Court has no revisional powers over the orders of a Divisional First Class Magistrate in appeal cases. Section 520 has, therefore, no application to the Sessions Court in cases like this. This point came up for decision in Criminal Case No. 236 of 1904 before a Bench of this Court. In that case the Second Class Magistrate convicted the accused and directed the property to be taken possession of by the Forest Officer. This order was made under section 44 of the Madras Forest Act. On appeal the First Class Magistrate reversed the order of the Second Class Magistrate and acquitted the accused under section 47 of the Madras Forest Act and made the order which the Sessions Judge took upon himself to revise. The learned Judge held that the Sessions Court was not a Court of Appeal, etc., in those circumstances from the First Class Magistrate, and had no jurisdiction to revise the order. I hold that the order of the Sessions Judge is not authorised by section 520 or any other section of the Criminal Procedure Code. I set aside the order of the Sessions Judge and direct that the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chidambaram be given effect to.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17—Suit against Agent of Railway Company—Defence by Railway Company—Amendment of plaint—Prejudice.

In a suit against a Railway Company, the defendant was described as the Agent of the Railway Company, but all the parties were perfectly aware that the suit was against the Railway Company and the relief asked was against the Railway Company who defended the suit as such.

Held, that the amendment of the plaint by striking out the word "Agent" would not prejudice any rights acquired by the Company by virtue of the Statute of Limitation. [p. 178, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 7th October 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 93 of 1922.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued the Agent, B. N. Railway Company, for damages for failure to deliver goods consigned to the Railway Company, within a reasonable time and obtained a decree for Rs. 1,487-8. The claim was against the Bengal Nagpur Company, and the suit was defended by the Company.

No objection was taken in the First Court as to the form of the suit. On appeal to the District Judge, Nimar, it was contended that the suit was bad as being brought against the Agent of the Company and not the Railway Company itself. The District Judge accepted this contention and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff makes this second appeal.

A preliminary objection is taken that the appeal is time-barred by six days. The plaintiff put in an affidavit to the effect that he was prevented by illness from taking any steps in the matter of filing the appeal from October to January. No counter-affidavit has been put in, and the appeal was admitted by my learned predecessor without any note as to limitation; so it appears that he accepted the appellant's affidavit. It is true that this is not binding on the respondents, but in the absence of any evidence that the plaintiff is not speaking the truth and in view of the fact that the plaintiff has a decree in his favour and that his suit is dismissed in appeal on technical grounds, there seems to be no reason why the plaintiff should not have appealed against that decision. I therefore hold that under section 5 of the Limitation Act the appeal should be admitted.

As regards the question of the suit being brought against the Agent of the Railway Company instead of the Railway Company itself, there are numerous authorities on this point, and the High Courts have taken different views. The learned District Judge has relied on the case of Sinehi Ram Bihari Lal v. The Agent, East Indian Railway Co. (1). It is on all fours with the present case. That case relies on Ram Dass Sein v. Cecil Stephenson (2), Nubeen Chunder Paul v. Cecil Stephenson (3), and India General Steam Navigation and Railway Company, Ltd. v. Lal Mohan Saha (4). The Patna case has been expressly dissented from in a recent case. The Saraspur Manufacturing Co. v. B. B. and C. I. Railway Co. (5). The Patna case was also not followed in an unreported case of this Court [Firm of Haji Suleman Hussan v. Agent, G. I. P. Railway Company] (Civil Revision No. 114 of 1922; decided on 27th January 1923). The facts in that case are precisely the same as in the present case and the Bombay case.

It has to be observed that in the present case the Railway Company defeated the suit on its merits. I find that the printed form of wakalatnama, used by the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company in suits against them, has the "Agent, Bengal-Nagpur Railway" printed as the name of the defendant.

No question arises of any uncertainty as to who was being sued. The suit was against the Railway Company and was defended by the Railway Company and not by the Agent in his personal capacity. It is sought to distinguish the Bombay case on the ground that the Bombay High Court held that there was a practice in the Presidency of Bombay filing suits against Railway Companies in the name of their agents, but the same appears to be the case here in the unreported case of this Court quoted above, and also in Civil Revision No. 113 of 1922, decided on 3rd November 1922, which was also against the Agent, B. B. & C. I. Railway Company.

I entirely agree with the observations of the Bombay High Court in the Saraspur Manufacturing Co. v. B. B. and C. I. Railway Co. (5) (Supra), and I would adopt the reasoning of Crump, J., at pages 788 and 789. In the present case all the parties were perfectly aware that the suit was against the Railway Company, and the relief is asked against the Railway Company who were substantially on the record, and the amendment of the plaint by striking out the word "Agent" would not prejudice any rights acquired by the Company by virtue of the Statute of Limitation. I also agree with the view of my learned predecessor in Firm of Haji Suleman Hussan v. Agent, G. I. P. Railway, that this is a mere misdescription and that it was the Company who was really being sued.

In these circumstances the decree of the lower Appellate Court dismissing the suit will be set aside and the appeal remanded for its disposal on the merits, the plaintiff being allowed to amend the plaint by striking out the word "Agent". Costs in this appeal will be borne by the respondents; the costs in the lower Appellate Court to abide the result of the appeal.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from a decision of this Court setting aside an order of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad appointing a Receiver of the properties, the subject of the suit.

The suit was a mortgage suit instituted by the petitioner against Nil Money Choudhury and the mortgage which was to secure an advance of eight lakhs of rupees hypothecated certain property for that purpose. Amongst other terms in the mortgage-deed it is provided that if default shall be made in payment of any instalment of interest or if the mortgagor should make any breach of any of the covenants and conditions to be performed by him, the mortgagee shall be entitled to call in the whole of the principal and interest notwithstanding the fact that the date of repayment shall not have arrived, and in the event of a suit being filed it shall be lawful for the mortgagees without any further consent on the part of the mortgagor to apply for the appointment of a Receiver to take possession of the mortgaged property. The property in this case was certain coal lands and collieries. In the plaint the plaintiffs claimed in addition to their ordinary remedies in a mortgage suit that a Receiver should be appointed. Before the suit came on it appears that the mortgagor Nil Money Choudhury and his brother Sridhar Choudhury (the latter not being a party to the mortgage bond) had instituted a suit in the Calcutta High Court for dissolution of partnership, it being contended that they were in partnership and that the mortgaged property (the subject of the present suit) was part of the partnership assets. In that suit a Receiver was appointed and put in charge of the partnership assets.

The learned Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad, before whom the mortgage suit came for trial, in a preliminary application asking for the appointment of a Receiver, after discussing at some length the questions raised in that application, ordered a Receiver to be appointed. It should be mentioned that before the present suit was instituted the plaintiff had obtained leave from the Calcutta High Court to add the Receiver appointed by that Court as a party to the suit. In the result the Receiver Mr. R. N. Mitter, who had been appointed in the proceedings in the Calcutta High Court, was appointed Receiver on behalf of the mortgagee in the mortgage suit by the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad.

From that decision Sridhar Choudhury, the brother of the mortgagor, appealed to the High Court at Patna. The appeal was heard before a Bench of two Judges who overruled the decision of the lower Court and set aside the order appointing a Receiver. One of the grounds, if not the main ground, for that decision was that a Receiver having been appointed by the Calcutta High Court there would be a conflict of jurisdiction if this High Court were to appoint another Receiver or even the same Receiver in the interests of other parties.

From that decision we are asked for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

In my opinion this was not a final order within the meaning of section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code. The appointment of a Receiver is in no way a matter which finally determines the rights of the parties. It was pointed out, however, that in the present case the appointment of a Receiver was one of the remedies which the mortgagee was entitled to in certain events, and that his right to such appointment was a substantive part of the claim in the mortgage suit. I do not take this view. In the clause which deals with the matter in the mortgage bond, the right that is given to the mortgagee in certain events, seems to me to be practically no more than a right he would have without such a clause. The only right he is given is, in the event of a suit being filed to apply for the appointment of a Receiver, to take possession of the coal land and it stipulates that he may do that without any further consent on the part of the mortgagor. But in any event it is always for the Court to say in its discretion whether it will appoint a Receiver or not. But for the complications which have arisen by the appointment of a Receiver by the Calcutta High Court in this case I have no doubt whatever that upon an application being made on the mortgage suit being filed the Court would have appointed a Receiver forthwith. The matter, however, is one entirely for the discretion of the Court and whichever way the Court decided it certainly does not, to my mind, finally determine any of the rights of the parties which have arisen out of a mortgage bond. For these reasons I do not think that the case falls under section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code.

We have been asked to say. However, that the case is of such importance that we ought to exercise our jurisdiction in granting leave under section 109 (c) and certify that this is a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council. It is true that a question arises in this case as to what is to be done where there would be apparently a conflict of jurisdiction between two different Courts if the order were acceded to. I do not

BISHUNATH RAI v. JODHI RAI.

I think, however, that this is in itself any sufficient ground for allowing an appeal to be carried to His Majesty in Council. It seems to me that in the existing circumstances the Receiver, who is now fully aware of the claims of the mortgagee, will be acting at his peril if he deals with the property in any way contrary to his interests. Moreover, it is always open to the mortgagor to apply in the proceedings now going on in the Calcutta High Court, if he considers that his interests are in any way being jeopardised. In the only cases which have been drawn to our attention in which this matter has been considered, namely, the cases of Chundi Dutt Jha v. Padmanund Singh Bahadur (1) and Muhammad Musaji Saleji v. Ahmed Musaji Saleji (2) it was laid down on both occasions that an application, such as this, asking for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from an order refusing or granting the appointment of a Receiver was not such an order as fell within the provisions of section 109. It may be that the present case is somewhat unusual and raises questions which have not been determined on a previous occasion, but at the same time I do not think the matter is one of such importance that we ought to exercise our powers under section 109 and grant this application. The application should be dismissed with costs. Hearing fee five gold mohurs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Father's debt—Son's duty to pay—Mortgage-decree against father—Ancestral property sold—Suit to cancel auction sale—Burden of proof—Immoral or illegal debt.

It is the pious duty of a Hindu son to pay a simple money debt due from his father even during the lifetime of the father. [p. 180, col. 2.]

Where a Hindu son sues for cancellation of a sale of joint family property in execution of a mortgage-decree against his father, the burden is on him to prove that the debt in respect of which the decree was passed was contracted for illegal or immoral purposes. [p. 180, col. 2.]

Second appeal, against a decree of the District Judge of Ghazipur, dated the 12th October, 1922.

Mr. Hamid Hasan, for the Appellant.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT:—A Hindu son sued for the cancellation of two auction sales of joint family ancestral property sold in execution of decrees which the lower Appellate Court held were not binding on him. The question was whether the decrees were such as would bind a Hindu son. One sale was held on the 28th June 1911 in execution of a decree for sale on foot of a mortgage, and the other sale took place on the 28th September 1912 in execution of a simple money decree. The simple money decree was for a debt contracted by the father to pay pre-emption money. Both the lower Courts have held that this was a legal necessity for which the father, the managing member of the family, may borrow money. The property is still in the possession of the family. Apart from that it will be the pious duty of the son to pay a simple money debt due from his father even during the lifetime of his father.

The second sale raises a question of burden of proof. It was argued here that it lay on the auction-purchaser to prove that the debt was contracted for valid necessity. This is not correct. The First Court held that the plaintiff and his father were members of a joint family and that the family property was jointly held. Thus the plaintiff could not claim half share of the property in suit as there has been no division of the joint family property. He can avoid the sale entirely if he could prove that the debt was contracted for immoral purposes. This he has failed to do.

The argument was that the burden lay on the purchaser. I had occasion in Oudh to discuss this matter in First Appeal No. 70 of 1921 [Rup Kishore v. Kanhaiya Lal]. The distinction between the son's liability under a mortgage executed by a father in a joint Hindu family, and his remedy after proceedings taken against the father on the foot of the mortgage was first stated by Lord Hobhouse in the Privy Council judgment of Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (1).

"It appears to their Lordships that sufficient care has not always been taken to distinguish between the question how far the entirety of the joint estate is liable to answer the father's debt, and the question how far the sons can be precluded by proceedings taken by or against the father alone from disputing that liability. Destructive as it may be of the principle of independent coparcenary rights in the sons, the decisions have for some time established the principle that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father's alienation for antecedent debt or against his creditors' remedies for their debts, if not tainted with immorality. On this important question of the liability of the joint estate their Lordships think that there is no conflict of authority."

In Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (2) the law on the subject was again examined by the Privy Council. The question at issue there was the nature of an antecedent debt. Their Lordships pointed out that so far as the joint family estate was concerned the law had been invoked for the protection of third parties whose rights in or with regard to it have been acquired in good faith and they went on to observe—

"A perusal of the numerous authorities will show that where a joint family property has been sold out and out, or where a decree in execution of the mortgage has been obtained against the property, and rights have thus sprung up with regard to the joint family estate, these rights are not to be defeated by the members of the joint family simply questioning the transaction entered into by its head."

These pronouncements leave no doubt that the burden of proof in a case like the present lay on the plaintiff. It is admitted that he has not discharged it, so the decree of the lower Court is perfectly correct.

This appeal is dismissed with costs which will include fees here on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This application must succeed. A consent-decree was passed in a suit on the 20th of November 1920. Thereafter the defendant in that suit, the opposite party before us, instituted a suit, being Suit No. 791 of 1922, against the plaintiff, the petitioner before us, for setting aside the consent-decree on the ground that it was obtained by fraud. That suit succeeded and the petitioner thereupon asked the Court to proceed with Suit No. 216 of 1920 on the ground that the consent-decree, having been set aside he was entitled to proceed with the suit. Munsif dismissed this application holding that "the plaint is now dead" and that "it cannot be received without any formal judicial order of a competent Court to that effect."

The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the opposite party has relied upon the decision in Bhimaji Govind Kulkarni v. Rukmabai (1). But he has very properly given us a list of cases against him: Of these cases there is one which was decided by the Judicial Committee in 1876 viz., Khajooroonissa v. Rowshan Jehan (2). In that case it was held that "the effect of setting aside the compromise was to remit both parties to their original rights." There is a large number of cases on this point, but it is unnecessary to refer to them; and, it is sufficient to say, that we are bound by the decision of the Judicial Committee and that there is no justification of the order passed by the Court below.

The order of the Munsif is accordingly set aside and he is directed to proceed with the hearing of Suit No. 216 of 1920. There will be no order as to costs.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), s. 205

The occupation by a tenant of an abadi site in a village makes him a licensee and unless the land is given to him as a house site he is not protected by section 203 of the Land Revenue Act. A sale by the landlord puts an end to the license. [p. 183, col. 1.]

No title by prescription can be acquired in respect of such land by the tenant in the absence of any assertion of adverse title against the landlord. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nimar, in Civil Appeal No. 191 of 1922, dated the 2nd February 1923.

Mr. A. C. Roy, for the Appellant.

Messrs. J. C. Ghosh and W. R. Puranik, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of two small portions of abadisite sold to him by defendant No. 2, the malguzar, from defendant No. 1 who is alleged to have taken wrongful possession of them. The defendant No. 1 contended that they were his property. Both the Courts below have found that though he had been long in possession, his possession was merely that of licensee, and under section 59 of the Easements Act, the transferee of the grantor is not bound by the license.

The defendant No. 1 appeals on the ground that the site is occupied by him as part of the abadi, in which he has a heritable though not a transferable right under section 203 of the Land Revenue Act. Reference is made to Bhondusao v. Jagat Ram (1) Bhayalal v. Chunnilal (2) Govind Rao v. Amrit Rao (3) and Motiram v. Rup Khan (4).

These are all cases of transfer by tenants and are not applicable to the present case, and the remarks in the last 2 cases go against the appellants. In Govind Rao v. Amrit Rao (3) it is remarked that the object of the wajib-ul-arz is to recognize the proprietary right of the landlord consistently with the undisturbed occupancy of village building sites by the licensed occupants and their customary successors, and in the next case at page 156 it is distinctly laid down that the occupiers are mere licensees. Their right does not amount to an interest in the property and seems to be a mere license within the definition of that term given in section 52 of the Easements Act.

The leading case on the point is Narain v. Behari (5) where it is held that tenants residing in the abadi are licensees.

Section 203 of the Land Revenue Act refers to house sites. The land in dispute in the present case does not form part of the house site, but is a mere open space near defendant No. 1's house used by him for the purposes of a latrine. There are no permanent structures on it now and though it may have been in his occupation a long time, no title by prescription has been acquired in the absence of any assertion of adverse title against the landlord. Such user as the defendant has made cannot amount to adverse possession: cf. Radhikadas v. Harimohanlal (6) following Franki Cursetji v. Gokuldas Madhowji (7).

It was not the appellant's case that this land was granted to him by the malguzar along with the house site and this being so, although he may be protected by section 203 of the Land Revenue Act and the wajib-ul-arz as regards the site in question he is a mere licensee of the landlord, the Malguzar, and under section 59 of the Easements Act the sale to the plaintiff puts an end to the license.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 762 of 1920, preferred against a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Manjeri, in Original Suit No. 390 of 1919.

Mr. B. Pocker, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first defendant is the appellant. The plaintiff, a member of a Malabar tarwad, sues to recover possession of the suit properties allotted to the deceased Krishna Wariar under Exhibits B and C. The defendant is in possession of these properties under the mortgages executed by the deceased Krishna Wariar. The lower Courts have decreed possession to the plaintiff holding that the mortgages are not binding on the tarwad. The learned Vakil for the appellant has advanced various arguments in the second appeal. His first argument is that the arrangement under which these properties were allotted to Krishna Wariar amounted to a partition of the tarwad properties, that accordingly Krishna Wariar got these properties absolutely for himself and through him his client the mortgagee has now got valid rights to these properties. On a construction of Exhibits B and C, it cannot be held that Krishna Wariar had effected partition of the properties from the tarwad.

It is next argued that the present plaintiff was not entitled to institute this suit on the ground that Krishna Wariar who had left the tarwad under the maintenance arrangements was not a party to Exhibit D. It is admitted that Exhibit D gives him the right to institute the suit. Krishna Wariar must be considered to have dissociated himself from the tarwad under B and C and, therefore, the fact that he was not a party to D, cannot affect the arrangement for the administration of the tar-was embodied in it and in pursuance of which the present plaintiff gets the right to institute this suit. In my opinion, the plaintiff is entitled to institute this suit under Exhibit D.

The next argument which has been advanced on behalf of the appellant is that his client has perfected a title by adverse possession of mortgagee's interest in the suit properties. It is argued that under the maintenance arrangements in pursuance of which Krishna Wariar got these properties, he is not allowed to encumber them, and that since he encumbered them in violation of the terms, the defendants have perfected for themselves a legal title by adverse possession. The decision of this question depends on the construction of B and C as regards the interest that was conferred upon Krishna Wariar under their provisions. As may be seen from paragraph No. 1 and paragraph No. 2 of Exhibit B, the intention of the parties to the document was to give Krishna Wariar a life interest in these properties. It is specifically stated that he will continue to enjoy those properties set apart for him throughout his life-time. The statement that he is not to create any encumbrance in my view only amounts to this, viz., that the tarwad after the death of Krishna Wariar will not be liable for these encumbrances. So long as Krishna Wariar is alive the tarwad is not entitled to immediate possession of the suit properties. The decision in Madhava v. Narayana (1) does not, therefore, apply to the facts of this case. It is not the case of the appellants that after the death of Krishna Wariar his client had been in adverse possession for over 12 years. I may also state that it is nowhere mentioned that the tarwad was aware of these encumbrances created by Krishna Wariar in favour of the defendant. Under these circumstances, I think that the plea of limitation should also be overruled. The second appeal is dismissed with costs of the first defendant.

The decree which is drawn up by a Court must be in accordance with the judgment. Where, therefore, the judgment gives a decree for sale but the decree drawn up is a preliminary decree for foreclosure, it is not in accordance with the judgment, is invalid and vitiates all subsequent proceedings in the case. [p. 186, col. 2.]

A summons cannot be said to be "duly served" within the meaning of O. IX, r 13, Civil Procedure Code, if it is a misleading document having no relevance to the real proceeding which is contemplated. [p. 188, col. 2.]

It is incumbent on the Court to be scrupulous in the extreme, and very careful to see that no taint or touch of fraud or deceit, or misrepresentation is found in the conduct of its ministers. It must at any rate not fall below the standard of honesty which it exacts from those on whom it has to pass judgment. The slightest suspicion of trickery or unfairness must affect the honour of the Court and impair its usefulness. [p. 189, col. 1.]

Therefore, a Court must not enforce against a mortgagor or any one interested in the equity of redemption, a foreclosure decree when he has been misled by its duly accredited agent through the issue of a notice for a decree for sale. [p. 189, col. 1.]

There can be no estoppel against a litigant arising out of the wrongful acts of the Court, permitted or performed by its own officials. [p. 189, col. 2.]

The object of Courts is to decide the rights of parties, and not to punish them for mistakes they may make in the conduct of their case, by deciding otherwise than in accordance with their rights. [p. 190, col. 1.]

Cropper v. Smith, (1894) 28 Oh. D. 700; 53 L. J. Ch. 891; 51 L. T. 733; 33 W. R. 60, followed.

The High Court has inherent power under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code to correct a mistake for the purpose of preventing a miscarriage of justice appearing on the face of the proceedings and to make such orders in the nature of consequential orders, as may be necessary for the ends of justice and to prevent an abuse of the process of the Court, which includes the idle multiplicity of proceedings [ibid.]

Under section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code, the High Court can extend the time fixed by the decree of a Subordinate Court for the doing of any particular act. [ibid.]

In a case where proceedings have been protracted through the fault of both parties, interest for the period of suit partakes of the nature of damages and the Court may mould it according to its will. [p. 190, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the Second Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 7th September 1922.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala and Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Appellant.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Dr. S. N. Sen, Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and Ajodhya Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are three appeals by certain second mortgagees, and a lessee of the mortgagor, against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, dated the 7th of September 1922, rejecting an application to set aside under O. IX, r. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a decree absolute for foreclosure. The parties are persons of position, but the history of the case illustrates the astounding complications and delays which arise in this country, in effecting service, in fixing dates for hearing, in determining the real controversy between the parties, and in enforcing decrees, and also the difficulties with which this Court is frequently confronted, owing to the gross negligence of the officials in the Subordinate Courts, instances of which generally come to our notice when it is too late to investigate the matter with any hope of saddling the responsibility on the right shoulders. This case, in which the only substantial issue, namely, how much is due under two ordinary mortgages, might have been settled in less than three hours, has taken three years in the lower Court, and owing to the transfers of judicial officers, which have taken place, has passed through the hands of four Judges. It is now nearly eighteen months since the appeal was admitted in this Court.

The plaintiffs are the minor children of the deceased mortgagee Ram Charan Shukul, suing under the guardianship of their mother. The defendants were one Gauri Shanker, the original mortgagor, who died pending the appeal, Musammât Gyan Devi, widow of a deceased District and Sessions Judge of this Province, Jwala Devi, her daughter, who are second mortgagees, and Bal Gobind, an Honorary Magistrate, husband of Jwala Devi, and lessee of the mortgaged property.

The difficulties which have occurred in effecting service from time to time, partly owing to the fact that Gyan Devi is a pardanashin lady living at Agra, and partly to the desire of the defendants to gain time, are fully set out in the elaborate judgment of the Subordinate Judge. For the purpose of reference, the following schedule of dates, which was prepared by the parties may be useful:—

[The Schedule is omitted as immaterial—Ed.]

The original decree in the suit was passed ex parte in January 1920. It was, however, set aside by Babu Lachmi Narain Sahib, Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, in January 1921. The suit was one for foreclosure, and claimed that relief. It was heard on the merits, and decided by the learned Judge on the 5th of February 1921. The defendant Gauri Shankar put in no defence. The issues were settled as follows:—

What sum, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled to on the basis of the mortgage bonds dated the 4th of January 1912 and the 25th of May 1912?

Whether the interest at 9 per cent. per annum with six monthly rests is penal?

Presumably the defendants, who were interested in the equity of redemption, were desirous of saving the property from foreclosure, and of obtaining from the Court a decision as to the actual amount due under the mortgages. The learned Judge gives no reason, but in his judgment he ascertains and decrees the amount due, less a sum for proportionate costs; and awards to the plaintiffs interest at the contractual rate till the period of grace, namely, six months, and thereafter future interest at the Court rate, in terms of O. XXXIV, r. 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure allowing six months for payment before sale. It is quite clear that this provisional decree was a provisional decree for sale. In recital of the plaintiffs' claim, the learned Judge describes the suit as one for recovery of the amount due by sale of the hypothecated property. The plaintiffs throughout have relied upon the fact that they were asking for foreclosure. But it is evident from the judgment, that either they modified their claim and asked for a sale, or the learned Judge, in the exercise of his discretion under O. XXXIV, r. 4, sub-section (2), Civil Procedure Code, intended to pass a decree for sale in lieu of a decree for foreclosure. This is made evident by the operative part of the judgment citing O. XXXVI, r. 4. Rules 2 and 3 relate to the preliminary and final decrees in a foreclosure suit, but r. 4, sub-section (2) provides, that in a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds and the mortgage is not a mortgage by conditional sale, the Court may, at the instance of any person interested in the right of redemption, pass a decree for sale in lieu of a decree for foreclosure on such terms as it thinks fit.

The decree drawn up in the office of the Subordinate Judge and signed by the Munsarim, as the ministerial officer of the Court, was a preliminary decree for foreclosure. We have come to the conclusion that the Court of the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction, in view of the judgment, to draw up such a decree. The Code is clear in insisting that the decree, which is drawn up by the Court, shall be in accordance with the judgment. It will be necessary for this Court to direct an enquiry in Cawnpur circumstances, under which came to be drawn up in our opinion this decree is vitiates the whole of the proceedings which have subsequent thereto in the Judge's Court. The object in the 6th ground of the appeal of Devi in the following terms:

"The preliminary decree and not according to the judgment dated 5th February, hence the whole proceedings are null and void."

With this view we agree. It ought merely to declare it void. It is aside ourselves, is a procedure, which in view taken by the Bar in this case is discussed hereafter. It is clear that Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, the plaintiffs, that the defect of the form of the decree certainly no evidence on that they did, but it is said that they must have known. It is a fact that they knew. The reason why they should have known is that the litigation is not conducted in this province by Solicitors, who, of routine, concern themselves with looking at the minutes or the decree as actually drawn up in Court. In India the Court is responsible for the drawing up of the final decree, and of time elapses between the preliminary decree and the final decree, and the Court is charged with the duty of giving notice to the parties of the decree and of preparing the final decree, although the defendants concerned to save the equity of the case, if they could, they were not to pass a decree for sale had been drawn up. We have examined the formal document of the preliminary decree and the final decree was drawn up. If the Court did their duty, it would follow the judgment, the sum being a mere matter worked out on the direction of the judgment. It could not be for the defendants than which the Subordinate Judge and was not likely to be better. There is a rule in this High Court that the proposed decree, before being finally passed, should be submitted to and initialled by the Vakils on both sides. It is a valuable rule and it is a practice which has been much followed in the Subordinate Courts, but there appears to be no rule in the Subordinate Courts, a matter which this Court may well consider that it would be desirable to rectify.

The difference between a decree for foreclosure and a decree for sale is, of course, considerable. In either case the mortgagor gets six months time to pay the money, but after the expiration of that six months period of grace, in the case of a foreclosure, the property passes to the mortgagee, and no locus penitentie remains to the mortgagor, whereas in the case of a decree for sale, there is the further delay caused by the preparation of the proclamation of sale, and the fixing of the date, a matter, which we understand, frequently covers two months or so. Then if the sale is successful, it has to be confirmed by the Court and the debtor or mortgagor has still a month within which he may deposit the money with interest, and save the property. This is material as indicating that it is by no means surprising to find parties, who are interested in preserving the equity of redemption, treating the period which must elapse once a sale has been ordered before the time is reached, when they must make up their minds once for all to pay or lose the property with considerable indifference. It is a matter ingrained in the habits of the people of this Province, and the majority of mortgagors appears to prefer to put off the evil day as long as possible, even though interest at a high rate is running against them.

The lower Court seems in its judgment to have been not unnaturally influenced by the indications of procrastination on the part of the defendants in this matter and to have come to the conclusion that they were well aware of the foreclosure decree against them before the 15th of June 1922—when they say they learnt it through their agent—from a triumphant remark of the muntab of the decree-holders, who told them that the decree-holders would obtain possession of the mortgaged property. The learned Judge does not say how and when the knowledge came to them earlier than the 15th of June, and the only evidence of its coming to them is the application upon which the order under appeal was made which was dated 21st June 1922, and it was not until a special and supplementary petition was put in by the defendant Balgobind on the 29th of July 1922, that they formally took objection that the judgment and notice of hearing for the making of the decree absolute was for sale, whereas the actual decree absolute was for foreclosure.

Not the least extraordinary feature of this remarkable case is that the learned Judge himself, from whom this appeal has been brought, in the judgment which is before us, should have missed this point. He says: "The case was then heard on the merits, and the Court passed a foreclosure decree under O. XXXIV, r 4 of the Civil Procedure Code, (which it could not do by law) on the 5th of February 1921, allowing the defendants six months within which to redeem. I find from a perusal of the judgment of Babu Lachmi Narain Sahib, that the contesting defendants went to issues only on the amount due under the mortgage deeds and the penal nature of interest." We are unable to understand how the learned Judge could have failed to notice the fundamental error which had occurred in these proceedings, if he had read the judgment of the 5th of February 1921, and appreciated that he was dealing with a decree for foreclosure.

On the 30th of August 1921, the plaintiffs presented in the Court of the Subordinate Judge an application for a decree absolute for foreclosure. This application, although ignoring the judgment, was consistent with the original claim for relief in the plaint and with the decree which they had either dishonestly obtained from an innocent and careless official, or which they had procured from him by chicanery and corruption. Whatever anybody else connected with the case knew on the 30th August 1921, they knew quite well that they were not entitled to a final decree for foreclosure and that the preliminary decree was a dishonest proceeding.

The next step is perhaps more remarkable than anything which has gone before. On the plaintiffs' application for a decree absolute for foreclosure the Court issued a notice, on the ordinary printed form of notices, to the respondents to show cause why an order for preparation of a decree absolute should not be passed, that they the plaintiffs were applying for an order absolute for the sale of the property, and informing the defendants that if they had any objection to an order absolute for sale, they should attend the Court on the 25th of March 1922 at 10 o'clock. This notice, we are told, was issued under the signature of the same Munsarim who had drawn up the preliminary decree for foreclosure, and the matter of the issue of this notice for sale based upon an application for foreclosure, is a further matter upon which this Court will have to direct an enquiry. The greater part of the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge deals with the difficulties in effecting service, and the shifts adopted by the various parties to evade service, no doubt with the object of putting off the sale as long as possible with the intention of finding the money when they could not longer stave off the sale. They probably had no intention of appearing to resist a decree absolute for sale. There was no reason why they should. They could not hope to resist it successfully, and after the judgment of the 5th of February 1921, they could not escape the obligation ultimately of providing the money, if they were to save the property. But if the decision of the Subordinate Judge is accepted, namely, that they did in fact receive this notice and in some way or another constructively or directly knew all about it, then the result is that, having received notice of an application for sale, and having deliberately kept away, because they could not resist the order, a decree absolute for foreclosure was passed ex parte against them for default in appearing to resist a decree for sale. It is clear that an order so passed cannot stand. It matters little on what ground it is put. It seems to be vitiated by almost every objection to which an order can be exposed. One of the contentions before us by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru on behalf of the respondents was that the case did not come within O. IX, r. 13, of the Civil Procedure Code, because the appellants had failed to satisfy the Court that the summons was not duly served, or that they were prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing. Assuming that they knew that they were summoned to appear to show cause against legal proceedings which were being taken against them, and that they were not prevented from appearing, and probably never had any intention of doing so, the question still arises whether the summons was duly served within the meaning of r 13. The words "duly served" would appear to relate to the method of service, but in our view a summons cannot be said to be "duly served" which is a misleading document having no relevance to the real proceeding which is contemplated, and having no reference to the order ultimately passed. Under such circumstances, service, even if effected, is a mere sham, and this is not by mere ex post facto reasoning, because the train had already been laid by the application of the 30th of August for an order for foreclosure.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents, argued that no notice is really necessary to show cause against the making of a decree absolute. The learned Subordinate Judge disagreed with this view, and held that the practice in this Province, approved by the High Court, was to give such notice. We do not propose to follow the respondents' Counsel into these high flights of procedure. It is only a rule of practice at the best, and no rule can apply so as to render the issue of a false notice, equivalent to the absence of any notice at all.

It is difficult to acquit the plaintiffs of complicity in the scheming by which this notice was issued. It is difficult to suppose that it was done by the Munsarim as the result of sheer ignorance and incompetence. He must be credited with having had some object to fulfil, or some obligation to re-pay in adopting such an astounding departure from the ordinary routine of his office. But in considering the rights of the defendants, these alternative contingencies have no importance. The Court issues these notices through its responsible ministers, and as their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out in the case of Kala Mea v. Harperink (1) (in dealing with a litigant who had been tricked as the result of clumsy misrepresentation by one of the Court's sale officers) "It is incumbent on the Court to be scrupulous in the extreme and very careful to see that no taint or touch of fraud or deceit or misrepresentation is found in the conduct of its ministers. The Court, it is said, must at any rate not fall below the standard of honesty which it exacts from those on whom it has to pass judgment. The slightest suspicion of trickery or unfairness must affect the honour of the Court and impair its usefulness." To paraphrase their Lordships' final sentence in this connection "it would be disastrous, it would be absolutely shocking, if this Court were to enforce against a mortgagor, or any one interested in the equity of redemption, a foreclosure decree, when he had been misled by its duly accredited agent through the issue of a notice for a decree for sale."

The mortgage-debt is under Rs. 18,000. The property is said to be worth at least Rs. 45,000. Some one is obviously concerned to save the equity of redemption. We are of opinion that no summons for making a decree absolute for foreclosure was ever served at all, and that the decree obtained was irregular and must be set aside.

We now come to the question of procedure which has been much argued before us. It was suggested on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents when they began to realize that the ex parte decree absolute was doomed, that we ought to send the case back, and allow the parties to renew the conflict as from April 1922, when the decree, which we now set aside was obtained, and renew it, probably before a fifth Judge, at such time as the Court, already overwhelmed with work, is able to fix, after fresh devastating efforts to serve such of the defendants as may then be still surviving, or their legal representatives. We are unable to take this view. We are seized of the whole matter. The record is here. The rights of the parties are clear. The preliminary decree, even after the expiration of three years and four months, ought to follow the judgment. In our opinion, as we have said, the preliminary decree of the 5th of February 1921 is waste paper, and no decree absolute based upon it would be binding on the defendants.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, on behalf of the plaintiffs, contended that he was entitled to stand on that decree and to enforce foreclosure, although he had never obtained an order for it from any judicial Tribunal. He suggested further, that if we left the defendants to take such steps as the Code and rules provide, either by way of appeal or review, to set aside that preliminary decree, he had a complete technical and equitable answer. It is open to his clients, if the case should go further, to raise any objection they may be advised. So far as we were able to follow his argument, he relied upon a kind of equitable estoppel by conduct. But there can be no estoppel against a litigant arising out of the wrongful acts of the Court, permitted or performed by its own officials and we can see no ground of equity, justice or good conscience, which would justify us in upholding this preliminary decree.

The learned Judge says that the defendants were well aware of all that was going on, but the learned Judge himself appears to be unaware that no notice for a decree absolute for foreclosure was even issued from his Court. Apart from any provision of the Code, we are of opinion that we have inherent power to correct such a mistake by any means consistent with the ends of justice. Even if the de-defendants have not taken every step open to them or have not shown a prompt sense of their obligation, or a right appreciation of the appropriate procedure, it is none-the-less [as Lord Justice Bowen said in the case of H. Cropper v. Smith (2)] the object of Courts to decide the rights of parties, and not to punish them for mistakes they may make in the conduct of their case, by deciding otherwise than in accordance with their rights. But it seems to us further that section 151 could not be invoked more appropriately, than in a case like this, for the purpose of correcting such a miscarriage of justice appearing on the face of the proceedings, and there is abundant authority, which it would be wearisome to cite, there being no case quite analogous to this one, where the Courts in India have held themselves justified, under this salutary provision, in making such orders in the nature of consequential orders, as may be necessary for the ends of justice, and to prevent an abuse of the process of the Court, which we take to include the idle multiplicity of proceedings.

We, therefore, exercise the inherent powers reserved to us by this section, and set aside not only the decree absolute, but the preliminary decree of the 5th of February 1921, and restore the parties to their rights and obligations respectively under the judgment of Babu Lachmi Narain of that date. We are satisfied—although every sort of argument was addressed to us designed to show that we had no such powers—that we have power in the light of what has happened, and what must now be done, to extend the time for payment. The six months' time allowed in 1921 has been affected chiefly by the plaintiffs' own acts. But the Code seems to us to be clear on the subject, as, apart from the provisions of O. XXXIV, section 148 enables a Court to extend any time fixed by the Court for the doing of any act allowed by the Code. The time fixed by Babu Lachmi Narain was clearly a time which he was allowed by the Code to fix, and we have power to extend it, and we differ from the decisions and dicta which have been cited to us from judgments in this Court, which seem to hold that the Court has only power to extend the time fixed by its own decree. We are further satisfied that under section 151, we have power, not merely to set aside this abortive proceeding, but to pass such order as the Court ought to have passed itself, and can, if we refer the matter back, still pass. The sole difficulty that has troubled us has been in determining how the interest should run during this litigious interval. The matter seems to us to be due to faults on both sides, and also to faults on the part of the ministerial officers of the Court. In such a matter, interest partakes of the nature of damages, which their Lordships of the Privy Council have said, the Court may mould according to its will. We think that the plaintiffs ought to have the contractual rate for the period granted by the Subordinate Judge, namely, from the 5th of February 1921 to the 5th of August 1921, and after that date, the Court rate down to the date of sale or payment, a result which seems to do rough justice to both parties.

We, therefore, direct a preliminary decree for sale to be drawn up, and we give the plaintiffs six months from the date of this judgment for payment. In other respects the decree is to follow the usual provisions applicable to a decree for sale under O. XXXIV, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code. The appellants must have the costs of this appeal on the higher scale and of the proceedings in the Court below.

redeeming prior mortgage, whether bound by such tenancy—Tenancy free of rent—Subsequent mortgage, rights of—Equity

Where a prior mortgagee creates a rent free tenancy, over a part of the mortgaged property, in favour of the mortgagor, the subsequent mortgagee is not entitled to obtain cultivating possession of the tenancy land by ousting the mortgagor but he is not bound by the contract exempting the mortgagor from paying rent for the land [p 193, col 1].

The rule that, "where upon a sale by a first mortgagee the property is bought in by the mortgagor himself, he can only acquire the estate subject to the second mortgage", has no application to a case, where the subsequent mortgagee takes his mortgage with full knowledge of the liabilities and risk created under the first mortgage, and actually undertakes to free the property from that mortgage, and still fails to carry out the obligations incurred by him. [p 193, col 2, p 194, col 2.]

A subsequent mortgagee redeeming the prior mortgage stands in the shoes of the prior mortgagee and is, therefore, bound by a grant or disposition, as also by the covenants and equities, made by or existing against him and in favour of the mortgagor. [p 195, col 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 9th September 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 21 of 1922.

Messrs. M. Gupta and J. Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The predecessors in interest of the present respondents owned Mauza Mathni in proprietary rights. They mortgaged the village with possession to Ohhotmal and his brother Deekisan and one Gouridas of Khaperkheda in consideration of Rs. 6,500 found due on a previous mortgage; the possessory mortgage (Exhibit P-17) was executed on 19th September 1876. While the mortgagees were in possession the mortgagors executed a second mortgage (Exhibit P-18) in favour of Thapak Biharilal on 16th March 1885 for Rs. 8,000 out of which Rs. 6,500 were to be paid in redemption of the first mortgage. The prior mortgagees instituted Suit No. 83 of 1893 on the basis of their mortgage against the mortgagors and obtained a decree absolute for foreclosure on 9th May 1894 and entered into possession on 5th December 1894. The subsequent mortgagees were not joined as parties to that foreclosure suit, the result was that they instituted a suit on their own mortgage (Suit No. 19 of 1910) for foreclosure, as against the mortgagors, they claimed the relief of redemption as against the prior mortgagees also. They accordingly obtained a preliminary decree dated 28th November 1911 (Exhibits P-12 and P-14). There is nothing on record to show whether this preliminary decree was at all made final. Plaintiffs have not filed any certified copy of the final decree. It, however, appears that they were put in possession of the mortgaged malguzari village by the Executing Court as per Exhibits P-20, P-21, P-22 and P-16. None of these documents mention that actual physical possession of the lands in suit was handed over to the subsequent mortgagees. Exhibit P-16 which is a copy of the receipt for possession dated 20th December 1913 does not show that in giving possession of everything pertaining to the proprietary rights the mortgagees were put in possession of the fields in dispute in this second appeal.

The fields in dispute in this second appeal appear to have been brought under cultivation some years after 1885 and before the foreclosure decree, dated 9th May 1894. While the Settlement operations were going on in the village, the prior mortgagees' suit was filed. The decree absolute for foreclosure did not apparently mention these fields as specifically foreclosed in favour of the mortgagees. There was consequently a claim or a semblance of a claim on the part of the mortgagors to retain them to themselves and this led to some dispute about their possession between the mortgagees and the mortgagors. Some time after the decree absolute for foreclosure was passed, the prior mortgagees at the intervention of the Settlement Officer settled the dispute and permitted the mortgagors to hold the lands under them without any liability for payment of rent as a grant for their maintenance. In the papers of the then Settlement of which Exhibit P-1 is a copy the land was recorded as the khudkasht of the mortgagor Ohhatarsing; he is described as hissedar there; and this has created all the trouble and furnished a handle for further dispute which has given rise to the present suit. How he happened to be described as hissedar is nowhere explained. In the papers of the current Settlement Exhibits P-1 to P-5, D-9, D-10, D-11, D-16, D-17 and D-18 the lands have been described by the Settlement authorities as held on maufi khairati occupancy tenure. Exhibit D-2 is a copy of the wajib-ul-arz of that previous Settlement of 1892-95 and Exhibit D-10 is a Bader jamabandi prepared at that Settlement; while Exhibits D-9, D-11, D-13 and D-14 are jamabandis of the current Settlement of 1913-14. Exhibits D-15, D-16, D-17 and D-18 are the Settlement parchas granted to mortgagors' sons in respect of the several portions of these lands held by each of them separately by virtue of a partition made between themselves. It will thus be seen that just about the time the subsequent mortgagees entered into possession of the village in 1913 the present respondents were being shown in the Settlement records that were being then prepared, as maufi khairati maurusi tenants of the lands. It is an admitted fact that the present appellants who were the landlords of the village were fully aware of the fact that the respondents were so recorded in the papers of the recent Settlement. The plaintiffs have to my mind falsely alleged that they or their predecessors had taken actual possession of the land on 20th December 1913, but were dispossessed the very next day. There is no proof to this effect.

The main question to be considered in this second appeal is about the status of the respondents in regard to the lands mentioned as class (a) in the judgments of the Courts below. The mortgagees contend that if the interest of the mortgagors was proprietary, the same had become their property by virtue of the final decree for foreclosure obtained by them in their own mortgage Suit No. 19 of 1910, and that the defendants cannot resist their claim for khas possession. If their interest was that of tenants merely, they (mortgagees) contend that even that interest must enure for their benefit, as their mortgage security has either increased in value or would otherwise be diminished to that extent. It is also urged that the defendants ought to have pleaded, but did not expressly plead in the former suit that they were tenants of the land and, further that there is no evidence to prove the alleged tenancy and that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the defendants were occupancy tenants of the same was not correct.

If the pleadings recorded by Mr. Prem Narayan on 23rd and 24th August 1920 were minutely scrutinized, it would be found that the plaintiffs' effort was not so much to deny the factum of the lease as it was to deny its binding nature, as against themselves. There is, therefore, no force in the contention that the factum of the lease is not established. It was affirmed in emphatic terms in the pleadings and recorded in the Settlement papers of which they had full knowledge; they never cared to challenge the fact. The interest carved out by the prior mortgagees in favour of the mortgagors was not that of proprietors or assignees of khudkasht lands but only of a subordinate nature, namely, that of mere occupancy tenants coupled with a special contract exempting them from payment of rent. The recent Settlement entries have recorded the lands as the maufi khairati maurusi lands of the mortgagors' personal representatives. These Settlement entries must ordinarily be presumed to be correct until the contrary is proved. The definition of a tenant as given in the O. P. Tenancy Act is clearly applicable to the defendants-respondents because they hold the land of the proprietors or landlords and are but for special contract liable to pay rent to the appellants who claim to be the landlords. The mere fact that they have been permitted to hold the land rent free by the favour of the then landlord does not make any difference in their status as tenants. The mere recording of the name of Chhatarsingh as hissedar in 1891-95 does not make the defendants owners, or proprietors or assignees of proprietary rights. That description was partly correct so far as the years 1891-92-93-94.

AMAROHAND V. SARDAR SINGH.

were concerned because the mortgagors were proprietors in those years, but it was improper after the foreclosure. That entry does not, in my opinion, conflict with or rebut the correctness of the new Settlement entries describing the defendants as occupancy tenants of the lands. The plaintiffs have not adduced any evidence to show that the intention of the prior mortgagees was to make the defendants transferees or assignees of proprietary rights; moreover such proprietary interest could not be transferred except by a registered instrument. The whole of the proprietary interest had become foreclosed, and vested in the former mortgagees and unless they executed a registered instrument, such interest could not be parted with by them in favour of the mortgagors by an oral transaction. The burden was, therefore, on the plaintiffs to show that the tenant-right was really a proprietary right. This I hold they have failed to prove. The oral evidence of defendant's witnesses Nos. 7 and 8 gives clear indications that what the prior mortgagees proposed to do was to create a subordinate tenure in favour of the mortgagors. The relationship of landlord and tenant could be created by a mere grant or contract of tenancy. The exemption from liability for payment of rent which they granted as an incident attached to this contract of tenancy was a special concession made by them, but I do not think it must necessarily bind the subsequent mortgagees so as to compel them to continue it. As the tenancy is already created and, as I say, validly created, they cannot oust the tenants from possession and claim cultivating possession of the lands from them as if the tenant-right had become non-existent. All that they can claim in a properly constituted suit would be a declaration that they are not bound by the special contract exempting the tenants from liability to pay rent or claim a proportionate share of land revenue. I, therefore, hold that the defendants' interest in the lands class (a) was that of occupancy tenants pure and simple, and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to obtain cultivating possession thereof.

The appellants contend on the authority of Otter v. Lord Vaux (1) quoted in Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edition, page 324, that where upon a sale by a first mortgagee the property is bought in by the mortgagor himself he can only acquire the estate subject to the second mortgage, for it is his duty to discharge the estate for the benefit of the second mortgagee. This is a principle of equity closely allied to the principle underlying the law of estoppel. In Otter v. Lord Vaux (1) the mortgagor was not allowed by reason of the purchase from the first mortgagee under a power of sale to defeat the title of the second mortgagee. This principle was affirmed by the Privy Council in an Indian case also, Lutf Ali Khan v. Futeh Bahadur (2) and by the Allahabad High Court in Ganga Sahai v. Tulshi Ram (3) and Badan v. Murari Lal (4) and by the Calcutta High Court in Raghunath Sahay Singh v. Lalji Singh (5) and Bhaju Chowdhury v. Chuni Lal Marwari (6). Such an equity is enforceable upon the principle that acquisitions by mortgagor enure as a rule for the benefit of his mortgagee thereby increasing the value of his security: Raja Kishendatt Ram v. Raja Mumtaz Ali Khan (7) and Ajudhia Prasad v. Man Singh (8). This is also a question of intention to benefit the mortgagee or oneself. I have, therefore, to see whether there is proof of such intention and whether there are any equities in favour of the mortgagees and whether their operation is curtailed by any cross-equities or law in favour of the mortgagors.

the mortgagors had arranged with the subsequent mortgagees for payment of Rs 6,500 in full redemption of the prior mortgage of 1876. It was, therefore, the duty of the subsequent mortgagees to offer payment to the prior mortgagee and redeem the mortgage. Exhibit P-12 which is a copy of judgment in Suit No. 19 of 1910, throws great sidelight on the question raised before me. It clearly shows that the present plaintiffs had raised a false plea that they had offered the money to the prior mortgagees but that they improperly refused to accept it, and that thereupon they handed over the aforesaid amount of Rs 6,500 to the mortgagors. This plea was the subject of Issue No. 1 (a) and has been elaborately examined by the learned District Judge in paragraphs 8 to 20 of his judgment. The finding on that issue was that the money remained in deposit with the subsequent mortgagees for payment to the prior mortgagees. It was also held in connection with the question of costs of the redemption suit awardable to the prior mortgagees, that they (prior mortgagees) were not guilty of any misconduct, that there was nothing to show that they (defendants Nos. 6 to 9 in that suit) were aware at the date of their Suit No. 83 of 1893, of the plaintiffs' second mortgage, and that the latter's omission from the said suit was wilful. These findings clearly establish that the subsequent mortgagees took their mortgage with full knowledge of the first mortgage and it was due to their own failure to redeem that mortgage either before or at due date that the prior mortgagees sued on their mortgage and obtained the foreclosure decree against the mortgagors only. The second mortgagees, therefore, must be treated as having failed in the duty which they had undertaken to perform, and made it possible for the first mortgagees to foreclose the property as if there was no subsequent encumbrancer. The subsequent mortgage could, therefore, at the most operate only on what may be said to have remained after satisfaction of the first mortgage. Here, the prior mortgagees had become the absolute owners of the whole of the property in satisfaction of the debt due under the first mortgage, by the foreclosure decree and had taken possession as such owners (see Exhibit P-12). The whole of the property therefore may be said to be withdrawn, as it were, from the operation of the second mortgage by title paramount. Raghunath Prasad v. Jamna Prasad (9) and nothing was left for the second mortgagee to enforce his mortgage against.

In Sir Rashbehary Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edition, page 324, where the case of Otter v. Lord Vaux (1) is discussed, we find there is a passage at page 325 in which the authority of Hakim Ali Khan v. Dalip Singh (10) is cited in support of the proposition which is expressed as under:—

"But it seems, if a second mortgage is made with a covenant against the claims of all persons except those under a prior mortgage, and the property is sold under such mortgage, the mortgagor will not be estopped from claiming the property as unencumbered as against the second mortgage, as he derives his title under the first mortgage which was expressly excluded from his covenant; in other words if a mortgage is made expressly of what remains after satisfaction of the first mortgage the rule under discussion will not apply."

The rule enunciated in Otter v. Lord Vaux (1) which is really a rule of equity based on the law of estoppel; therefore, seems to be inapplicable to a case where the subsequent mortgagee takes his mortgage with full knowledge of the liabilities and risks created under the first mortgage, and actually undertakes to free the property from that mortgage and still fails to carry out the obligations incurred by him. If the property has gone out of his second mortgage it is because of his own failure and not because of the act of the mortgagor. It would be very inequitable to hold that the mortgagor should make over whatever little property he could get released or granted to himself by the favour of the prior mortgagee (sic) should be held by him for the benefit of the subsequent mortgagee, who has failed to perform his obligation and brought about the catastrophe of the wholesale extinction of the mortgagor's equity of redemption in enforcement of the prior mortgage. To allow the subsequent mortgagees to enforce his mortgage security against the trifle saved to the mortgagors would be to allow him to profit by his own negligence and laches and to put premium on default. There are clearly no equities in favour of such a defaulting subsequent mortgagee, nor could the mortgagors be charged with the intention to benefit the security of such mortgagee.

The prior mortgagees at the time of their foreclosure or shortly thereafter at the intervention of the Settlement Officer had agreed to carve out the lesser interest of a tenant in favour of the mortgagors in respect of the lands in dispute; this they could, in their capacity of landlords for the time being, legitimately do, whether the grantee was the mortgagor or a stranger. Even if they be treated as mortgagees in possession they were under the terms of the mortgage-deed (Exhibit P-17) empowered to create tenancies. They were, both under law and contract, under no obligation to cultivate the land themselves and to maintain its character as proprietary land for the ultimate benefit of the subsequent mortgagees, who might redeem. It was open to them to implant new tenancy on the khudkasht lands, and to accept anybody as tenant on payment of a reasonable rent, in consideration of their agreeing to carve out the subordinate tenure of a tenant in his favour in the course of their ordinary management of the village for the beneficial enjoyment of their interest as landlords of the same. The present plaintiffs as landlords and successors-in-interest of the prior mortgagees could not repudiate or set at naught tenancy already created validly by their predecessors. The only prejudice of which they might, on redemption, have complained was the loss of rent, and not of the right to cultivate the land. I have already held above that the special exemption from payment of rent was a concession which bound only the prior mortgagees or their personal representatives personally, but that the subsequent mortgagees were not and could not be bound by it. By the foreclosure which the plaintiffs say they obtained on foot of their own mortgage, of which however there is no proof on record, all that they got or were put in possession of were all rights mutalik malguzari ke (pertaining to the malguzari) as recited in the receipt for possession (Exhibit P-16).

If the plaintiffs meant to treat the tenancy right acquired by the mortgagor as appurtenant to the malguzari rights or as an occasion ensuring for their benefit or increasing the value of their security it was their duty to include that claim specifically in the former suit which they had brought to enforce that mortgage, and to get a decree expressly declaring that such interest was liable to be foreclosed in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt due on the basis of their second mortgage. They, however, did not do so then. They are not, therefore, entitled to agitate that point in a subsequent suit on the principle of res judicata. I cannot assume that their title on the basis of the subsequent mortgage is perfected by a decree final, as they have adduced no evidence, and have failed to prove the said title by production of a certified copy of the final decree for foreclosure, they are technically not entitled to a decree for possession in the present suit. Their suit must fail for the simple reason that they have not proved their title to sue. Even assuming that they have a title they are precluded from asserting it by reason of their failure to obtain a decree in the mortgage suit giving them a specific right to khas possession of the lands in suit.

As persons who have redeemed the prior mortgage in pursuance of the directions contained in the decree Exhibit P-14, they would at the most stand in the shoes of the prior mortgagees whom they have redeemed; they must in that capacity necessarily be bound by the grant or disposition as also by the covenants and equities made by or existing against them, and in favour of the mortgagors, because they as representatives of the prior mortgagees landlords, could not repudiate the same, but must carry them out so long as the tenancy validly created by them lasts. I hold that the subsequent mortgagees are not, on the whole, and in the special circumstances of this case, entitled to avail themselves of the benefit of the rule in Otter v. Lord Vaux (1) which is in effect a rule of equity or of estoppel based on equitable considerations, nor are they entitled to seek relief under the rule that accessions must go to enhance the value of the security, or for the benefit of the subsequent mortgagee. In fact there is no estoppel against the mortgagors in this, because if there be any, it is against the mortgagee, much less are there any equities specially favouring the second mortgagees which could be said to be enforceable against the new tenant-right in the hands of the mortgagors. Their only right at the most is to demand reasonable rent or proportion of land revenue in a properly constituted suit and not possession of the lands from the defendants who are the tenants thereof.

The appeal stands dismissed with costs. Costs in the Courts below will be paid as already ordered.

Custom—Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz—Presumption—Non-existence of custom in neighbouring mahal, effect of—Evidence—"Co-sharer", meaning of—Proprietor not having specified share, whether co-sharer—Right to pre-empt

Where there is an entry in favour of a custom of pre-emption in the wajib-ul-arz of a village prepared at the last Settlement, the presumption raised by the entry cannot be rebutted by the circumstance that there is an express entry as to freedom of transfer in the wajib-ul-arz of one of the other mahals, which was carved out of the original village prior to the Settlement, for it may well be that the co-sharers of the other mahal had agreed to abrogate the custom which might have been in existence from before [p 197, col 1]

A person who, although a proprietor does not own a specified fractional share in a mahal, cannot be called a co-sharer and is, therefore, not entitled to pre-empt [p 198, col 1].

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 18th July, 1922.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiff alleged that there was a custom of pre-emption in the village under which he was entitled to pre-empt the sale by the vendor in favour of the defendant vendee who was said to be a stranger. The vendee defendant No. 1 denied the existence of the custom and also pleaded that he himself was a co-sharer in the mahal and, therefore, on the same footing as the plaintiff pre-emptor.

The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that no custom had been established at all and that the entry in the wajib-ul-arz relied upon by the plaintiff was a record of contract and not of custom. It, however, held that the defendant No. 1 was not a co-sharer in the same mahal, and that even if there had been a custom he would not have been on the same footing as the pre-emptor.

The lower Appellate Court has upheld the decree of the Court of first instance but differed from it on both its findings. It has found that the custom is established but that the defendant vendee is also a co-sharer in the mahal and that, therefore, the plaintiff has no preference.

As to the question of the existence or non-existence of a custom it may be noted that the evidence consists of an entry in the wajib-ul-arz prepared at the Settlement of 1881. The district, however, is a permanently settled district and that Settlement is still in force. There is nothing to rebut the presumption raised from this entry except the circumstance that there is an express entry in the wajib-ul-arz of one of the other mahals, which was carved out of the original village prior to the year 1881, that the co-sharers had a perfect right of transfer. This in our opinion does not necessarily negative the presumption of a custom in the mahal in suit; for it may well be that the co-sharers of the other mahal had agreed to abrogate the custom which might have been in existence from before. We are, therefore, not entitled to take into consideration the non-existence of such a right in the neighbouring mahal. We see no reason to differ from the view taken by the learned District Judge that the plaintiff has established by prima facie evidence that the custom of pre-emption prevails in the mahal.

The main question in controversy is whether the defendant vendee is or is not a co-sharer in the same mahal so as to defeat the right of the plaintiff. Under the terms of the custom as recorded in the wajib-ul-arz the first right of pre-emption is given to a co-sharer who is a member of the family of the vendor, (sharik khanda) and then to the co-sharers of the village. The plaintiff claimed to be a distant relation of the vendor, but that point has not been gone into by the Court below and in the view which we take of the case, it is not necessary for us to decide that point. The defendant vendee, however, claimed to be a co-sharer in the mahal. A "hissedar" means a co-sharer, that is to say, a person who owns a share in the mahal. A 'mahal' is ordinarily divided into 'annas' and 'pies' share or into 'bighas' and 'biswas' share. It comprises a certain specified area. A person who owns a fractional share in the 16 annas or a fractional share in the 20 biswas necessarily owns a share in the joint khalsa land as a co-sharer. But there may be proprietors, who have proprietary interests in the mahal and yet do not own a fractional share of the 16 annas or of the 20 biswas, as the case may be.

That this is so is shown by a number of cases decided by this Court: [vide Mawasi v. Moolchand (1), Mahadeo Prasad v. Jagat Deogir (2) and Izzat Husain Khan v. Ram Chander (3)].

The main question to consider, therefore, is whether the defendant vendee owns a fractional share of the 16 annas in this mahal.

A reference to the khevat shows that the constitution of the village is as follows.—Against serial No. 1 the extent of the share is recorded as 16 annas and the area is 56 24 acres and the Government revenue is Rs. 191-15-1. Under this serial number follows a list of three groups of co-sharers against whose names separate shares to the extent of 6 annas 4 pies and 16 krants, 6 annas 4 pies and 16 krants, and 3 annas 2 pies and 8 krants, are respectively recorded. The total of these three fractional shares is 16 annas. It is obvious that the group of proprietors mentioned under serial No. 1 own among themselves the entire 16 annas comprised in this mahal. After serial No. 1 there are other serial numbers, namely, Nos. 2 to 9, against each of which in the share column there is no entry whatsoever, but in the area column specified areas are recorded. Two of the proprietors mentioned therein are the Municipal Board and the Government. There is the Government revenue of Rs. 14 recorded at the end of serial No. 9. The learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that this represents the Government revenue payable on account of serial numbers 2 to 9. Whether that is so or not and whether the revenue of Rs. 14 is confined to serial No. 9 alone, it is not necessary for us to decide. But it is not disputed that this sum of Rs. 14 is no part of Rs. 191-15-1 which are assessed on serial No. 1. Below all these figures we have the grand totals in areas and in the Government revenue, but the 16 annas share is not repeated. On a consideration of the entries in the khawat it is clear to us that it is only the proprietors mentioned under serial No. 1 who own the entire 16 annas among themselves. It follows, therefore, that no proprietor in serial Nos. 2 to 9 can be said to own any part of the 16 annas of the khalsa land which are exhausted in serial No. 1. The owners of the areas in serial Nos. 2 to 9, although proprietors, cannot, therefore, be called co-sharers, that is, persons who own specified shares in the 16 annas. They are liable to pay Government revenues which are assessed against their shares, but they cannot be deemed to have engaged for the payment of any part of Rs. 191-15-1 which is the Government revenue assessed on the 16 annas share described under serial No. 1. The defendant vendee cannot, therefore, claim to be a hissedar on the same footing as the plaintiff pre-emptor. In this view, we are supported by the ruling of Radha Kishen v. Abbasi Begam (4) where the distinction between a mere proprietor and a co-sharer was very clearly drawn.

It is also to be noted that both the Courts below described the properties entered under serial Nos. 2 to 9 as 'haqiat-i-mutafarriqa', that is to say, miscellaneous properties. They did not describe these as a part or a fractional share of the 16 annas of the mahal.

In our opinion, therefore, the finding of the learned District Judge that there is a custom of pre-emption should be upheld and so also the finding of the First Court that the defendant vendee is not a co-sharer in the 16 annas of the mahal, and is, therefore, not a hissedar within the meaning of the wa-ib-ul-arz.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed and the decrees of both the Courts below are set aside and the plaintiff's claim for pre-emption is decreed on payment of a sum of Rs. 2,000 on or before the 2nd of July 1924. In case of such payment the plaintiff will be entitled to his costs in all the Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale, from the ce-defendant vendee. In case of default of payment the suit shall stand dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Where the property of a Malabar tavashi is invested in partnership trade with a stranger, the karnavan of the tavashi is the trading partner and represents the interests of the joint family. In such a case each member of the tavashi does not himself become a partner and would have no right to interfere with the management of the affairs of the partnership so long as it is a joint concern [p. 199, col 1].

But the karnavan has no right without the consent of the adult members to surrender the interests of the tavashi without any consideration, as such an act amounts to an alienation of tavashi property, and as he is in a fiduciary position, the junior members thereof are entitled to follow the tavashi property into the hands of those in whose favour it has been alienated [p. 199, col 2].

Where the partnership of the tavashi, with the stranger has been dissolved by the death of the latter, a suit by the junior members for an account of the partnership and recovery of the property wrongly alienated is not unsustainable merely because plaintiffs were not members of the partnership [p. 200, col 1].

JUDGMENT.—The parties are Moplahs governed by the Marumakkathayam Law. The second defendant appeals.—The 2nd defendant and one Alipi Haji, now dead, were carrying on a timber trade. In 1896, the 2nd defendant took his son, the 1st defendant, as a partner, and a partnership agreement was drawn up which is Exhibit A, dated the 9th February 1896. Under this, each of the partners had a 1/3 share in the profits of the timber trade. The assets contributed by the 1st defendant, were the putravakasa property of the tavazhi consisting of himself and the plaintiff, the 5th defendant and her children (plaintiffs Nos. 5 to 9) and the wife of the 2nd defendant. The tavazhi property was thus invested in the partnership trade, the 1st defendant being the Karnavan of the tavazhi. In such a case, each member of the tavazhi does not himself become a partner, but as held in Ramanathan Chetty v. Yegappa Chetty (1) and Grandhe Gangayya v. Grandhe Venkataramiah (2) the manager of the family is the trading partner and represents the interests of the joint family. That being the case, the members of the tavazhi would have no right to interfere with the management of the affairs of the partnership so long as it was a joint concern. But in 1913 the partners entered into an agreement (Exhibit C) to dissolve the partnership and to have a partition deed drawn up. They also made a temporary arrangement for the allotment of the elephants which were used in the working of the timber trade. The dissolution of partnership agreed to at that time was finally embodied in Exhibit I, dated the 22nd November 1914, under which the 2nd defendant was given a half share instead of 1/3 on account of his extra exertion and his supply of funds. Alipi Haji agreed to take one quarter and the 1st defendant also took one quarter. This suit was instituted to declare that that arrangement is not binding on the members of the tavazhi and to recover their rightful share.

It is obvious that the 1st defendant as Karnavan had no right to surrender the interests of the tavazhi without any consideration, as this amounts to an alienation of tavazhi property, and as he was in a fiduciary position, the plaintiffs representing the tavazhi are entitled to follow the tavazhi property into the hands of those in whose favour it has been alienated. The objection that this suit will not lie on the ground that the plaintiffs are not members of the partnership and have no voice in the direction of the partnership affairs is answered by showing that at the time when the suit was instituted there had been a dissolution of partnership. In Watts v. Driscoll (3) it was held by the Court of Appeal that the assignee of a share in partnership is not bound by any agreement made by the partners themselves on a dissolution of partnership by which the amount or value of the share is altered. In the English Partnership Act of 1890, section 31 makes it clear that an assignee cannot interfere in the management of the affairs of the partnership, but upon dissolution he is entitled to take his assignor's share of the assets and to have an account from the date of the dissolution. The same principle was followed in Chidambaram Chetty v. Karuthan Chetty (4). That was a case of sub-partners and the learned Chief Justice observed that in the absence of any settlement between the partners before dissolution which of course would be binding on the sub-partner, the sub-partner after the dissolution is entitled to have an account taken to ascertain the share of the partners under whom he claims, as without such an account it would be impossible to say what he was entitled to. The objection to the maintainability of the suit thus fails.

On the merits it is argued for the respondents that the lower Court should have found on the evidence that there was a settlement by arbitrators by which the 1st defendant's and Alipi Haji's shares were reduced after looking into the accounts and the 2nd defendant's share was increased. The Subordinate Judge has held that the alleged mediation was a fiction. We have been referred to the evidence of the defence witnesses. They do not say that in consideration of the extra contribution made by some persons, definite sums were allocated to those partners who had contributed most, but they say that before the net assets of the partnership were ascertained there was an agreement that 2nd defendant should take half of the whole assets and that the other partners should take each a moiety of the remainder, as the arbitrators thought it was proper to do so. Unless the adult members of the tavazhi consented to such an arrangement, they would not be bound by the 1st defendant's action against their interests. The witnesses do not speak of any such consent being given by the other members of the tavazhi. D. W. No. 1 and D. W. No. 3 say that the 1st plaintiff was present at the mediation. Nanu Menon, the 5th witness, who is supposed to have settled it, says that the first plaintiff was present but he was not consulted and he did not raise any objection. The 1st plaintiff has stated that he did not know about any mediation by Nanu Menon, and he was not cross-examined as to whether he was present on that occasion D. W. No. 2 and D. W. No. 3 say that they did not see Nanu Menon that day.

It has not been shown that there was any occasion for arbitration on account of any disputes between the partners. The 2nd defendant has not gone into the witness box and given his account of what happened.

On the whole, we see no reason to differ from the Subordinate Judge's conclusion that there was no regular arbitration in the matter. The lower Court's judgment awarding plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 3 to 10 on behalf of themselves and defendants Nos. 1 and 5, one-sixth of the properties given to the second defendant is, therefore, correct. The decree provides that the 2nd defendant do deliver up 1/6th of the properties given to him as shown in Schedules A and E, and if it is not available to pay their value Rs. 27,502. There is no question of the immoveable properties being available or not available.

The memorandum of objections raises the question whether 1/6th of the properties should not have been partitioned and delivered. The decree will be amended by directing that the 2nd defendant do deliver up 1/6th of the immoveable properties and 1/6th of the moveables and providing that if any moveables are not available to be delivered, 1/6th of their value as found by the Commissioner shall be paid by the 2nd defendant, or as ascertained in execution if the Commissioner has not already valued any particular item. With this modification, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

The division of both immoveable and moveable properties may be made in execution.

Upon the memorandum of objections the respondents will recover Rs. 265, the difference between the amount of Court-fee which the appellants actually paid and the amount they ought to have paid. Vakils' fee to be calculated on the correct amount at which the suit ought to have been valued, namely, Rs. 55,000.

If a suit is brought in a representative character the plaintiff must contain a statement to that effect, under O. VII, r 4. Civil Procedure Code [p. 201, col. 2].

The provisions of O. VII, r 1, clause (f), Civil Procedure Code, are imperative [ibid].

Jurisdiction does not depend on the result of a suit or on the defence set up but on the nature of the claim as brought, that is to say, what decides the venue in a case is the nature of the claim as brought [ibid].

A mortgagee in possession of a fractional interest in a village is not a "landlord" within the meaning of the C. P. Tenancy Act, and, therefore, cannot maintain a suit for rent against the tenants. The position assignable to him by virtue of the mortgage is that of a mere transferee of a money claim to a portion of the arrears of rent when they accrue due to the landlord of the holdings held by the tenants of the village [p. 202, col. 2].

An assignee of only a fraction of proprietary rights in a village does not become a landlord and the assignor continues to be the landlord of the holdings, so long as he retains the remaining fraction to himself [ibid].

Mr. J. Sen, for the Applicants.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—This judgment will dispose of the above appeal as also Second Appeal No. 419 of 1923 between the same plaintiff and another set of tenants, namely, Tulsiram and Rama. These second appeals arise out of what are styled rent suits for recovery of arrears of half rents due from the respective defendants, who are respondents before me, in respect of their holdings situate in Mouza Awasel, Tahsil Harda, District Nimar, for the Sambat years 1977 (2nd kist), and 1978 (both kists). In the plaint it is stated that the plaintiffs have been realising half the rents and the original malguzar realises the remaining half of the rents payable by the tenants to the proprietary body. It is not, however, clearly stated in what capacity the plaintiffs made those recoveries. In the pleadings also, this capacity is not disclosed although there is the admission that the plaintiffs are not the lambardars of the village. There is thus neither in the plaint nor in the pleadings an assertion even that the plaintiffs are the landlords or at least fractional co-sharer landlords of the holdings in respect of which they sought recovery of rent from the tenants. If they were suing in a representative character, their plaint was, under O. VII, r 4 of the Civil Procedure Code, bound to contain a statement to that effect, because under the rules framed under section 79 of the new C. P. Land Revenue Act, it was necessary to do so. Similarly, O. VII, r 1, clause (f) directs that the plaint shall contain "the facts showing that the Court has jurisdiction." Non-compliance with these imperative provisions of law had, in my opinion, the effect of making the plaintiffs represent a claim for money and not for rent as such, and the suits could not, therefore, be treated as suits between landlords and tenants as such within the meaning of section 103 of the new C. P. Tenancy Act, so as to invoke the exercise of the exclusive jurisdiction vested in the Revenue Officer under the Tenancy Law. Jurisdiction does not depend on the result of a suit or on the defence set up but on the nature of the claim as brought. It has been held in Bapuji Raghunath v. Kuvarji Edulji Umrigar (1) and Durbasa v. Khalaksingh (2) and Prosonno Coomrao Paul v. Koylash Chunder Paul (3) that what decides the venue in a case is the nature of the claim as brought: Ganpat v. Trimak (4). In the absence, therefore, of any facts stated in the plaint or in the pleadings showing that the claims as brought called for the exercise of the special jurisdiction vested by law in the Revenue Officer to try suits between landlords and tenants as such, the Additional Judge to the Court of Munsif, Harda, should have seen that the suits were not on the face of them cognizable or triable by him. He was bound to call upon the plaintiffs to disclose, at the very outset, facts on which they rested their right to sue the defendants for half the rents. If pleadings had been recorded with care the plaintiffs would have stated, as they state before me, that they were transferees or assignees of the proprietary rights of the predecessor-in-title of the present lambardar, to the extent of half of his interest in the mouza under the registered usufructuary mortgage deed, dated the 1st October 1887, and that they claimed to recover half the rents in their capacity of such assignees or mortgagees in possession of half the mouza. The Additional Judge would then have been in a position to decide the question whether the nature of the claim as brought by the mortgagees in possession of 8 annas interest in the village, could be treated as being within his special jurisdiction. Without caring to decide this initial question of jurisdiction, that Judge assumed that he had jurisdiction to decide the suits, and proceeded to hold a trial regarding the defence set up by the defendants to the effect that they were not liable to the plaintiffs because they had satisfied their liabilities by payments to the lambardar who was the "landlord" of the holdings within the meaning of the Tenancy Act.

It is argued before me that the assignee of proprietary rights is a landlord within the meaning of the definition of that word as given in the Tenancy Act, and reliance is placed on the case of Gopal v. Bhojraj (5) where it is held that a lambardar who assigns all his proprietary rights and interests ceases to be a landlord within the meaning of the O. P. Tenancy Act. That case is easily distinguishable from the present one as here the transfer or assignment is not of all the proprietary rights and interests but only of a fraction. The position of the plaintiffs cannot, therefore, be that of a landlord although as held in Thakur Maharaj Singh v. Jagannath (6) they could, in their capacity of mortgagees in possession style themselves as "proprietors" within the meaning of that expression as defined in the Land Revenue Act. The position assignable to the appellants by virtue of the mortgage is that of mere transferees of a money claim to half the arrears of rent when they accrued or accrue due to the landlord of the holdings held by the tenants of the said mouza. Such a transferee would doubtless not be entitled to eject the defaulting tenant. The lambardar continues in spite of the assignments to be the landlord of the holdings, so long as he retains the remaining 8 annas share to himself. The Courts below have, in my opinion, exercised a jurisdiction not vested in them under the Tenancy Law and their judgments are, therefore, bound to be vacated as being without jurisdiction. The Additional Munsif, or at any rate the District Judge, ought to have returned the plaint for presentation to the ordinary Civil Court. Before me the matter has come up in the form of second appeals. The claims in both these appeals being below Rs 500 and the suits being of the nature cognizable by the Court of Small Causes no second appeal can lie under section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code. But under law there is ample authority for treating a memo of second appeal as a petition for revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. *Merali Visram v. Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 75—Waiver

If a creditor simply sleeps on his right and does nothing for three years, it cannot be implied from this that he had agreed to waive his right to recover the whole amount of the bond, which accrued to him when the default occurred.

Application for the reversal of the decree of the First Class Sub-Judge, Nasik, in S. O. S. No. 1730 of 1921.

Mr. L. G. Pradhan for Mr. R. G. Pradhan, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. V. Bhat, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—Article 75 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act clearly applies to this case, and time began to run from the moment the whole amount of the bond became due owing to the default, unless the plaintiff could prove waiver. That apparently has not been attempted in this case; and if a creditor simply sleeps on his rights and does nothing for three years then we cannot imply from that that he had agreed to waive the right which accrued to him when the default occurred. Rule discharged with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1354 OF 1923.

January 24, 1924.

KARAM SINGH, VENDOR AND SUBA—VENDOR—DEFENDANTS—

RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 30 (1)—Physical possession, meaning of—Report to patwari, whether enough—Physical possession, why necessary—Symbolical possession—Property in possession of tenant of mortgagee incapable of physical possession by vendee.

The mere reporting to the patwari that the vendor has relinquished possession and that the vendee has assumed possession is no proof that there was a giving and taking of physical possession within the meaning of section 30 of the Pre-emption Act. [p. 204, col. 2.]

The law of pre-emption insists on physical possession, because physical possession is visible to all concerned. It is a notice to all would-be preemptors that a change has occurred in the enjoyment and possession of the land in question and puts them to inquiry. [ibid].

In the case of cultivated land physical possession may be taken even symbolically, but there must be some evidence of symbols employed. [p. 204, cols. 1 & 2.]

Property in the possession of a mortgagee and in the cultivating possession of a tenant under him at the time of sale, is not capable of being taken into physical possession by the vendee. [p. 204, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 5th March 1923, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 21st November 1922.

Mr. H. D. Bhalla, for the Appellant.
Lala Harbhajan Das, for the Vendee-Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal and Appeal No. 1355 of 1923 arise out of two transactions of sale of land. The area in each case was 10 marlas and the price Rs. 99-12-0.

GOPAL OJHA v. RAMADHAR SINGH.

The vendor in each case was the same person while the vendees are different persons, in fact, two brothers who are joint. There was in reality one sale which was split up into two to avoid the necessity for registering the sale deeds. The date of the sale was the 15th May 1919 and on the 10th February 1921 the plaintiff instituted two cases to pre-empt on both the sales. Both suits have been dismissed on the ground that they were too late inasmuch as, although the mutation of the sales was attested on the 27th April 1920 physical possession of the areas sold had been taken by the vendees in November 1919.

These appeals were admitted on the ground that there was no clear finding on the point when and how physical possession was taken by the vendees. The learned District Judge writes: "In the case of uncultivated land physical possession may be taken even symbolically. I think the possession of the vendees before December 1920 may safely be taken to be proved by the report on the mutation entered in November 1920 and the entry as to their possession in khassra girdawari of Rabi 1920-21."

Now the areas sold at the time of the sale were admittedly in the possession of a mortgagee and were in the cultivating possession of one Amian, a tenant under the mortgagee. Consequently at the time of the sale the property sold was incapable of being taken into physical possession by the vendees. The mortgage on the areas sold was redeemed by the vendees on the 13th July 1919 but the physical possession of the land remained with the tenant Amian who gathered the Khari crop some time in October or November of that year. In the following harvest, i.e. Rabi 1920, the land is entered as in the possession of the vendees but inasmuch as it remained uncultivated in that year it is not clear that the vendees were even at that date in physical possession. If the vendees had even prepared the land for a crop the entry in the record would have been traddadi and not khali. The learned District Judge says that in the case of uncultivated land physical possession may be taken even symbolically.

This is no doubt correct but he has not stated, nor is there any evidence on the record, what symbols were employed in this case. The vendees might have taken possession by driving a plough through the land or by fencing it round but there is no evidence that they adopted any such method. The law insists on physical possession because physical possession is visible to all concerned. It is a notice to all would-be pre-emptors that a change has occurred in the enjoyment and possession of the land in question and puts them to inquiry whether there has been a sale. The mere reporting to the patwari that the vendor has relinquished possession and that the vendee has assumed possession is no proof that there was a giving and taking of physical possession within the meaning of section 30 of the Pre-emption Act.

For these reasons I hold it unproved that physical possession of the land in suit under the sale was taken by the vendees before Rabi 1920. That being so the terminus a quo for the calculation of limitation is the date of the attestation of the mutation, namely, the 27th April 1920 and, therefore, the suits were brought within time.

For these reasons I accept the appeals and decree possession to the plaintiff on payment into Court, within one month, of Rs 90-12 0 in each case less his costs throughout. If payment is not so made, the suit shall stand dismissed with all costs.

Appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Palamau, dated the 28th January 1920.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and S. Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—This appeal arises out of a claim for resumption. The plaintiffs are the appellants. The following genealogy culled from the evidence of Ramadhar Singh, defendant No. 1, which is not challenged, may be useful and is accordingly set out in the beginning.

(11) that the grant was not resumable [ibid.]

Peikash Lal v Rameshwar Nath Singh, 31 C 561, Ram Narain Singh v Chota Nagpur Banking Association, 36 Ind Cns 321; 43 C 332 at p 409, and Lal Gayendra Nath Sahi Deo v Lal Mathurelal Nath Sahi Deo, 35 Ind Cns 383; 1 P. L. J 100; 20 C W. N 876, distinguished.

The novation of a contract implies a fresh contract, directly or by implication, in place of the original contract. Therefore, if the holders of a perpetual and heritable grant, subsequent to the grant, divide the subject-matter of the grant without reference to the grantor, so that their respective heirs might succeed to the specific portions, the principle of novation does not apply. [p 213, col. 1.]

The incidents of a joint tenancy may be changed and a member of the joint tenancy may sever his connection by effecting partition of his interest and, after this is done, the rule of survivorship of succession will not apply, but the heirs of the separated tenant would succeed to his interest in the tenancy [p.213, cols 1 & 2].

Upon the death of one of two joint grantees, the lessor does not become entitled to enter as to one half of the property demised, as the lease does not terminate till the death of the survivor of the two lessees, and, therefore, the landlord's right to re-enter does not arise till both the lessees are dead. [p. 213, col. 2]

Ram Narain Singh v. Chota Nagpur Banking Association, 38 Ind Cas 321, 43 C 332 at p -08, referred to

To a suit for a declaration that an entry in the Survey Record of Rights of a village is incorrect and for recovery of possession, if the plaintiff is deemed to be out of possession, all persons, recorded as in possession of the village and as claiming title adverse to the plaintiff, are necessary parties [p. 209, cols 1 & 2]

Per Macpherson, J. — Where, the terms of a grant are unambiguous, evidence is not admissible of conduct of the parties leading to another inference. [p. 216, col. 1.]

GOPAL OJHA v. RAMADHAR SINGH.

Thus defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3 have been recorded in the Record of Rights prepared at the last Survey in 1917 as being in possession of the properties as mukarraridars, 8 annas in the name of defendant No. 1 and 8 annas in the names of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The tenure has been recorded as muzarri istamrari not resumable. The aforesaid entry is the result of a decision arrived at by the Assistant Settlement Officer dated the 6th March 1917 (Exhibit 5) in a hotly contested dispute between the parties. The decision was upheld on objection under section 33 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by the Assistant Settlement Officer in charge by his decision (Exhibit 6) dated the 17th of June 1917.

The defendant No. 4 Babu Chain Singh, is alleged in the plaint to be the son of Babu Sheosagar Singh by a daughter of Rampadarath Singh. Both the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos 1 to 3 disputed the relationship of defendant No. 4 with Rampadarath Singh and the Court below has held that the relationship has not been established; that this defendant, who was made respondent in this appeal, entered appearance and filed a cross objection challenging the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge so far as it affected him. He is, however, dead and in his place one Sahdeo Singh has been substituted at the instance of the appellants. Notice was served upon him, but he has not entered appearance nor has he contested this appeal.

Respondent No. 1 Babu Ramadhar Singh and respondent No. 3 Babu Nandkeshwar Singh are also dead and in their place their respective heirs and legal representatives have been brought on the record. Therefore, this appeal is contested principally by the legal representatives of respondents Nos. 1 and 3, and respondent No. 2. They have lodged a cross-objection with respect to the issues that have been decided by the Subordinate Judge against them.

Shortly speaking, the plaintiffs dispute the correctness of the entries in the Record of Rights referred to above and in fact they base their cause of action upon the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer in charge dated the 17th June 1917. They say that they have been all along in sir possession of both the mauzas in dispute Manhu and Saharewa and that their possession has not at all been disturbed on account of their wrong entry in the Survey Record of Rights. They also assert that the tenure is resumable and was, as a matter of fact, resumed. Their case is that the villages in question, Manhu Saharewa and Majhigawan in Pargana Palamau, were held by their ancestors on the mother's side in khairat. The two mauzas Manhu and Majhigawan were granted in mukarrari to two brothers Janki Singh and Pryag Singh shown in the above pedigree, by a deed, dated the 19th Chaitra, 1234 Fasli (corresponding to 1st April 1827) at an annual jama of Rs. 71 and Rs. 21 respectively. Under the terms of that deed (a correct translation of which has now been made by the Superintendent of the Translation Department under our direction) the rent was to be paid in three instalments with a stipulation that in the event of default of payment of three kists the deed would become inoperative. The defendants did make default in payment of the three kists after the death of Janki Singh and Pryag Singh. The plaintiffs further assert that according to the custom prevalent in the District of Palamau the grant is liable to resumption after the direct male line of the last male-holder of village Manhu has become extinct. After the death of Janki Singh, his son Rampadarath Singh came into possession of that village, and after the death of Rampadarath Singh the ancestors of the plaintiffs wanted to enter upon and take sir possession of the village, but at the request of the widows of Rampadarath Singh, namely, Musammat Haridasi Kuer and Musammat Radhika Kuer, the plaintiffs' ancestors allowed those ladies to remain in possession of the village during their lifetime as a sort of maintenance. During the survey operations Musammat Radhika Kuer in 1323 Fasli (corresponding to 1916) and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 Ramadhar Singh,

GOPAL OJHA v. RAMADHAR SINGH.

Issue No. 12 has also been decided in favour of the plaintiffs, the Court below having held that the absence of Amarnath from the record does not affect the maintainability of the suit. The defendants do not accept this view of the Court below and have, therefore, filed a cross-objection.

The second parts of Issues Nos. 6 and 9 and Issue No. 10 have been decided against the plaintiffs, the Court below having held that the mukarrari of Mauza Manhu cannot be resumed so long as the heirs male of Pryag Singh are in existence and that the plaintiffs have never been in sir possession of Manhu or of Tola Sahorswa.

The result of the decision of the Subordinate Judge upon these issues against the plaintiffs have been that the plaintiffs' suit has been dismissed in toto.

The main questions, therefore, for consideration in this appeal are those involved in the aforesaid Issues Nos. 6, 7, 9, 10 and 12. To put it clearly, the points are (1) whether the mukarrari of Mauza Manhu is resumable firstly under the terms of the grant (Exhibit 1), dated the 1st April 1827, and secondly, upon the custom of resumption pleaded by the plaintiffs, (2) if the tenure is resumable upon the happening of certain events so as to entitle the plaintiffs to resume the mukarrari in question, (3) is Sahorswa a part or tola of Mauza Manhu, or is it a separate village unaffected by the grant in question (4) is Amarnath, the great-grandson of Pryag Singh, a necessary party in the case and in the suit, therefore bad on account of his absence from the record.

The last point may be disposed of at once. The plaintiffs' action is virtually levelled against the entry in the Survey Record of Rights and they seek a declaration that the entry is incorrect. They expressly state that the persons entered in Record of Rights set up a false claim with respect to the mauzas in question against the plaintiffs' right. The Survey has recorded amongst others Amarnath as being in possession of the villages in question and as claiming istimrari mukarrari interest adverse to the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs further claim in the alternative recovery of possession in case they be deemed to have been out of possession. Now, the persons recorded as in possession of the villages in question and as claiming title adverse to the plaintiffs are necessary parties to the plaintiffs' action for a declaration of their title and for recovery of possession in the alternative. The Court below has held that the defendant No. 1 is the only person entitled to this mukarrari but as the Survey Records have entered the names of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 also they are necessary parties to the suit. This reason stated by the learned Subordinate Judge applies with equal force to the case of Amarnath and, therefore, the Subordinate Judge is wrong in his view for which he has given no reason, that "the absence of Amarnath from the records of this suit does not affect its tenability." Therefore, the objection of the defendants must prevail and the finding of the Court below on Issue No. 12 is set aside.

The next question is as to whether the tenure is resumable either under the terms of the grant or under the custom set up by the plaintiffs. The deed in question is said to be a patta granted by Nut Nath Jha, the predecessor in interest of the plaintiffs, to Raj Kumar, Sri Pryag Singh and Babu Janki Singh, the ancestors of the defendants respondents. It runs as follows:

"Swasti Sri Maharaj Pujit Sri Sri Min-Raidar Mauza Kishampur wogdrah Paragana Palamau Zillah Ramgarh age Tappe Deogan maha Mauza Naudihawo mahuar ke bari maha Mauza Manhu wo Mauza Majhigawan yek dono gaon hamara khairati hai se ham Raj Kumar Babu Sri Pryag Singh wo Babu Sri Janki Singh ko mukarrari likh del mawani mahua jalkar, bankar, tar, bagh, keth, doa, par-jakur, chakur sajan mai jahat istimrari likh del take jama malguzari jut wo rupia sikha kaldar mukarrari bryamw rupia wo Babu mazkur ke ali aulad pusht dar pusht likhla maufig malguzari del karat sal basal jagali blog karat Ham wo hamar ali aulad likhla maufig malguzari pusht dur pusht del kari sal basal."

The English translation of the above is as follows:—

Respected and worshipped by the Maharaj, (I am) the mainkaldar of Mauza Kishunpur, etc., Pargana Palamau, District Ramgarh I hold in khairati (charity) Mauza Manhu and Mauza Majhigawan in the Barhi of (appertaining to?) Mauzas Naurliha and Mahuari in Tappa Deogan I have granted it (in writing) (in) mukarrari to Rajkumar Babu Shri Pryag Singh and Babu Shri Janki Singh, including mango and mahua (trees), jalkar, bankar, palm trees, orchards, catechu, cocoons, houses of tenants, the four boundaries; (I have) granted (it) in writing as a perpetual (istimrari) grant by all means. The amount of rent in respect thereof is ninety two rupees in kalladar coin. — fixed (amount) Rs. 92. The Babus, aforesaid, and their descendants (alaulad) generation after generation, should pay the rent written (above) year after year, (and) enjoy the lands. I and my descendants (alaulad) generation after generation, shall realise the rent written (above), year after year. Details of the rent:—For Mauza Manhu seventy one rupees for Mauza Majhigawan Rs. 21. In the event of default (in the payment of) rent for three kuts the mukarrari shall be void." Dated, Sari, the 18th Chait 1234 Fasli Sambat, 1884

In the translation the words "heirs and representatives" have been put down for the vernacular words "alaulad" and the words "generation after generation" for the words "pusht dar pusht."

The grant of the two villages, Manhu and Majhigawan, has been made to the two brothers, Pryag Singh and Janki Singh. The grant is to be enjoyed by the grantees and their heirs and representatives (alaulad) generation after generation (pusht dar pusht). The grantor and his heirs and representatives (alaulad) have to receive the rent generation after generation (pusht dar pusht).

According to Fellon's Dictionary the word "al" in Arabic signifies the issue born to the daughters and "aulad" the issue of the son. The two words

"alaulad" put together would mean the offspring or children or descendants both in the male and in the female line "pusht dar pusht" means, through successive generations; generation after generation, parampara.

The word "istimrari" is derived from "istimrar" which means permanence, perpetuity, uninterrupted possession. In law it means a fixed rent not liable to alteration. "Istimrardar" is the holder of a lease in perpetuity. "Istimrari" is an adjective and means perpetual, continuative, never ceasing. "Istimrari patta" is a lease or form granted at a fixed rent and in perpetuity. In this view the Permanent Settlement of Lord Cornwallis is said to be istimrari and a piece of land is said to be settled istimrari when it is settled permanently.

Mukarrari, a fixed lease, quit rent, a fixed stipend. It connotes fixity of rent and also permanency.

The aforesaid words in the Kabuliyat (alaulad) pusht dar pusht, mukarrari and istimrari indicate etymologically that the grant was perpetual, permanent in its duration and fixed in the rental descendible to heirs both in the male and female lines and was to be held generation after generation. Not the terms of the document but the entire context thereof shows that the grant conferred, upon the grantees in unambiguous and clear terms, a permanent, perpetual and heritable grant. It was a grant unlimited in the way of succession or in duration. Therefore, so far as the terms of the grant are concerned the plaintiffs cannot ask us to put any limitation upon its enjoyment by the heirs of the grantees either in the male or female line or by their representatives. It was an absolute grant heritable and transferable. The plaintiff's right to resumption has not at all been reserved in the deed. Therefore, the contention of the plaintiff that the grant was resumable on failure of the male heirs in direct line of the grantees must fail upon the construction of the document.

The plaintiffs wanted to fortify their position by making the grant resumable.

upon custom said to have been in vogue in the part of the country where the lands in question are situate. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that no reliable evidence of any custom has been given in this case. Now, the clear and unambiguous terms of the documents conferring an absolute and irrevocable right on the grantees can be abandoned or controlled only by clear evidence of custom ancient, invariable and unambiguous and so having acquired the force of law. The learned Counsel on behalf of the appellants has not attempted to support the custom set up by the plaintiffs by reference to any evidence on the record. Therefore, the view of the Court below that there is no evidence offered or produced by the plaintiffs to show that there was a custom prevalent by which the words "al aulad" were understood to mean lineal male descendants. The learned Subordinate Judge has based his decision on the fact that "al aulad" and "pusht dar pusht" in the present case must have restricted meanings application to male descendants only upon certain authorities relied upon by him. The first case referred to by him is Perkash Lal v. Rameshwar Nath Singh (1). That case related to a khairat bishanprti grant made to a Brahman by the Rajah of Kunda in Hazaribagh and special custom was pleaded whereby the words "al aulad" related only to male descendants, and the evidence in proof of the custom was accepted. The contention of the Advocate-General was that "although the words al aulad, etymologically considered, include both male and female descendants, yet according to the custom prevailing in the Kunda Raj at the time of the grant such khairat grants were resumable on the failure of lineal male descendants, and admittedly no such descendants exist. The evidence on custom is overwhelming." This argument was accepted by the Court. Therefore, in order to apply the principle of that decision it must be established by evidence that by custom the words must not be understood in their etymological sense but in a restricted sense, as meaning male descendants in the direct line only. Another distinguishing feature of that ruling is that the terms of the grant quoted in the judgment show that the words of inheritance employed were only "al aulad", and not "pusht dar pusht". Here, these additional words go to confirm that the grant was meant to be descendible both in the male and the female lines. Therefore, upon the findings of the Court that ruling has no application to the present case.

Mr. Das then relied upon the case of Ram Narain Singh v. Chota Nagpur Banking Association, (2) in order to show that the view taken in the case of Perkash Lal v. Rameshwar Nath Singh, (1) was approved of by the Privy Council. This is so but the view was confirmed with respect to the meaning of "al aulad" having been restricted by custom. The Privy Council decision refers to the case of a putra putradik grant by the Maharajah of Chota Nagpur and it was held upon evidence that the words "putra putradik jagir" as employed in the grants made by the Maharajah meant only an estate for life descendible to male heirs only, and resumable on the extinction of the male heir of the grantee in the direct line. This decision also, therefore, does not apply to the present case. The same remark applies to the decision in the case of Lal Gajendra Nath Sahi Deo v. Lal Mathura Lal Nath Sahi Deo, (3) which refers to the estate of the same Maharajah in the Ranchi District.

The aforesaid cases, referred to by Mr. Das do not at all relate to Pargana Palamau and will not apply to a custom set up in the present case. Therefore, the first part of Issues Nos. 6 and 9 must be decided in favour of the defendants and the view taken by the Court below must be set aside.

The plaintiffs' case was that, after the death of Rampadaruth, son of Janki Singh, the mukarrari of Mauza Manhu, came to an end and was resumable; but his widows, Hardasi and Radhika, were allowed to remain in possession with the leave and license of the plaintiffs and consequently they obtained life grants which terminated after the death of the survivor of them Musammat Radhika in 1916. This story of their permissive possession of the widows of Rampadarath seems to be a myth and has not been substantiated by reliable evidence on the record. It is impossible to conceive that the widows would have been allowed to remain in possession merely for the asking and without any deed having been executed in their favour. Receipts used to be granted to them. Wild Exhibits A-8, A-9, A-24 to A-46, a large number of receipts in the A series. These receipts described the ladies as heirs and successors of Babu Rampadarath Singh, the deceased mukarrar for instance vide Exhibit A-8, dated the 6th January 1881, and Exhibit A-9, dated the 18th January, 1881. The Subordinate Judge rejects the story and we have no hesitation in accepting his finding. But the finding leads to an important inference and that is that the two females succeeded to the mukarram as heirs of their husband which conclusively established that the grant from the inception was heritable in the female line. The ladies remained in possession for 30 years. This instance of succession of females to the mukarram successfully repudiates the suggestion that abaulad and pust dar pust in the document, in question should have a restricted meaning.

The learned Subordinate Judge says that assuming that the grants were resumable on failure of heirs male of the grantor, either under the deed or under the custom set up by the plaintiffs, there has, as a matter of fact, been no failure of heirs male so long as the male heirs of Pryag Singh, the joint grantee with Janki Singh, is alive. The learned Subordinate Judge holds that the grant created a joint tenure in favour of the two brothers Pryag Singh and Janki Singh, and the subsequent division of the mauzas between the two brothers, namely, Janki Singh, getting village Manhu and Pryag Singh getting village Majhigawan, does not affect the original terms of the grant and does not create a separate grant of Mauza Manhu to Janki Singh, and Majhigawan to Pryag Singh, so that on the failure of male heirs of Janki Singh, Manhu should revert to the grantor. Mr. Das impugns this view of the Subordinate Judge and contends that there was no joint tenure created by the deed and Janki Singh and Pryag Singh were not joint tenants but were merely tenants in common. A plain reading of the deed (Exhibit 1), dated the 1st April 1827, does not support the contention of Mr. Das. He says that Manhu was granted to Janki Singh, and Majhigawan to Pryag Singh. The words in the deed are, "Mauza Manhu and Mauza Majhigawan," the two mauzas are granted to "Rajkumar Pryag Singh, and Babu Sri Janki Singh". The two mauzas were jointly granted to the two brothers jointly. The rent payable to the landlord is mentioned in the aggregate for the two villages, namely, Rs. 92, in the document. How this rent has been arrived at is stated at the foot of the document as Rs. 71 for Mauza Manhu and Rs. 21 for Mauza Majhigawan. Mr. Das contends that the specification of the two mauzas with respect to the rent separately at the foot of the document shows that the two villages were separately granted. I confess I have not been able to follow this argument. The question is not as to the apportionment of the rent over two villages, but the liability of the grantees for payment of the rent. What is there in the document to show that one of the brothers is liable to pay anything less than Rs. 92, or the separate rent of Rs. 71 for Mauza Manhu and Rs. 21 for Mauza Majhigawan? Both of them, according to the terms of the document are liable for the rent whether it be a consolidated rent for the two villages taken together, or separate rent for each of the villages. No inference for separate grants can be made from the specification of rent in the document with respect to each mauza separately. Had there been any separate grant, then Manhu having been mentioned first would have gone to Pryag Singh who is mentioned first in order of the grantees and Majhigawan having been mentioned second would have gone to

GOPAL OJHA V. RAMADHAR SINGH.

Janki Singh who is mentioned second in order of the grantees, but this not so. Therefore, the original grant cannot possibly be held, upon the construction of the deed, to be a separate grant of Manhu to Janki Singh and Majhigawan to Pryag Singh. Mr. Das then says that had the grant been joint, then after the death of Janki Singh, the two brothers would have been joint tenants and after death of Janki Singh, the survivor of them Pryag Singh would have succeeded to the grant, and not the son of Janki Singh with respect to Mauza Manhu. This was an arrangement between Pryag Singh and Janki Singh and there is evidence that subsequent to the grant they divided the properties so that their respective heirs might succeed to the specific properties. It is conceded that the grantor is not bound by such an arrangement. Therefore the grantor cannot take advantage of the separate arrangement. It is not possible to treat the grant as a lapsed one so long as any male member in the direct line of any of the grantees is alive.

Mr. Das says that the separate holding of the properties subsequent to the grant by Janki and Pryag shows that there was a novation. Now, novation of a contract implies a fresh contract, directly or by implication in place of the original contract, so the parties to the original grant must also be parties to the novation of the new contract. In the present case it has not been shown that the landlord was ever a party to the arrangement so as effectively to create a new contract in place of the old one set forth in the solemn document (Exhibit 1). The principle of novation, therefore, does not apply to the present case.

Mr. Das has referred us to Williams on Real Property 23rd Edition, pages 144 to 147, in order to show the distinction between "joint tenancy" and "tenancy-in-common" and their incidents. There is no dispute as to the meaning and incidents of the two kinds of tenancies. It would, however, appear by reference to page 147 that the incidents of a joint tenancy may be changed and a member of the joint tenancy may sever his connection by effecting partition of his interest and after this is done the rule of survivorship of succession will not apply but that the heirs of the separated tenant would succeed to his interest in the tenancy.

Mr. S. M. Mullick has referred us to the case of Ram Nagrai Singh v. Chota Nagpur Banking Association (3). While discussing the objection as to limitation, upon the ground that the cause of action with respect to a moiety of the tenure accrued after the death of one of the mukarraridars, Mr. Justice Mookerjee observed:

"The objections as to limitation and recognition are equally fallacious. They are based on the assumption that upon the death of one of the two original grantees, the lessor became entitled to re-enter as to one half of the property demised. This argument overlooks the elementary proposition that the lease would not terminate till the death of the survivor of the two lessees. There is a fundamental distinction between the question of the duration of the lease as a whole and the question of the devolution of the interest thereunder on the death of the first lessee. We are not now concerned with the question, whether upon the death of the first lessee, his heirs or his co-lessee would be entitled to occupy the demised premises. It is sufficient for our present purpose that the landlord was not entitled to re-enter till both the lessees were dead. In this view, no question of limitation or recognition arises."

The learned Subordinate Judge has very ably clearly discussed this point and we entirely agree with his view that even if the grant was limited to the male heirs in the direct line of the grantees, the right of re-entry or reumption in favour of the landlord has not in this case accrued so long as the male descendant of one of the grantees, Pryag Singh is alive.

The result is that Issues Nos. 6, 7 and 9 are decided in all their parts in favour of the defendants and against the plaintiffs. We also agree with the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs failed to prove that they were ever in se possession.

GOPAL OJHA V. RAMADHAR SINGH.

son of the lands in dispute, and in deciding Issue No. 10 against the plaintiffs. The investigation during the survey operations clearly shows that the plaintiffs were not found in possession of the villages in question. The widows of Pryag Singh, were admittedly in possession up to 1916 until the death of Musammal Radhika Kuari. The orders of the Survey Department upholding the possession of the defendants are dated the 6th March 1917 and 17th March 1917 (Exhibits 5 and 6 already referred to). The dispute must have commenced much earlier, and it is impossible to conceive that the defendants soon after the death of Musammal Radhika Kuari would have allowed the plaintiffs to take possession of the properties in dispute when they were claiming to hold the properties as permanent lessees under the mukarrari istimrari deed.

Now to prove that the tenure in question was a limited grant descendible only to the male heirs in the direct line of the grantees and to prove the right of resumption as well as the possession and disposition, the onus is heavily upon the plaintiffs, not only because they are the plaintiffs and want reliefs in the present case but the statutory provision raises a presumption of the correctness of the survey entries in favour of the defendants. The defendants have given evidence in the case and the presumption of the Survey Record of Rights has not been rebutted by the plaintiffs.

The same remark applies to the claim of the plaintiffs with respect to Tola Sahorswa. Certain maps have been produced in this Court. Exhibits 9A and 9B are separate maps of the two villages filed by the plaintiffs. The defendants have filed a map (Exhibit Q) showing the two villages to be one. The Assistant Settlement Officer in his judgment (Exhibit 5) says:—

"The mukarrari having been granted in 1827 Sahorswa evidently then was a Tola of Manhu and since the Revenue Survey of 1864 has been treated as a separate village and this clearly accounts for the omission of Sahorswa from the mukarrari deed besides this the actual rent-receipts granted to the Musammal by the Ojhas, Hiranand Gunanand and others, show that they too have all along treated Sahorswa as a Tola of Manhu and have mentioned it to be so in the numerous rent-receipts that have been filed before me. No serious attempt has been made by the Ojhas to throw doubt on the genuineness of these receipts and they all appear to be genuine. Such being the case, I am of opinion that this claim too that Sahorswa was not included in the grant fails miserably."

Here also the onus is upon the plaintiffs to rebut the presumption of the finding of the Survey Officer and the entry made in the Record of Rights in accordance with that finding. The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the same conclusion as the Assistant Settlement Officer.

We have carefully considered the evidence in the case and the arguments of Mr. Das, and we do not think Mr. Das has been able to show that the view taken by the Survey Officers and the learned Subordinate Judge is in any way wrong.

I would in this case commend the judgments of the Survey Officers (Exhibits 5 and 6) who have gone in detail into the matter and have clearly met all the points raised by the plaintiffs in order to found their claim and those urged by Mr. Das in support of his contention.

I have already decided Issue No. 9. There was no dispute between defendant No. 1 and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as regards their own right in the tenure in question, and the learned Subordinate Judge should not have raised this question and decided it. The finding of the Subordinate Judge on Issue No. 9 that "the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have no right in this village and that it is the defendant No. 1 alone who is entitled to the entire village after Radhika's death" must be set aside. We are not at all concerned with the claims of the defendants inter se. We are concerned only with the claim of the plaintiffs, and it is already held that they have failed to substantiate their claim, and, therefore, the finding of the Subordinate Judge on issue No. 9 must be set aside.

The result is that the plaintiffs have failed to prove their case. The appeal must fail, and the cross-objection must succeed. The decree passed by the Subordinate Judge is, therefore, confirmed. The respondents will be allowed their costs in the appeal. There will be no separate costs with respect to the cross-objection.

Macpherson, J.—I agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

The averments and issues upon which the parties went to trial have been fully set out in the judgment just delivered by learned brother, but I may state succinctly the main conclusions of the Trial Court in so far as they are in contest in appeal or in the cross appeals. It is to be observed that the plaintiffs' prayer for ejectment on the ground that the mukarrari has become void because three kists or more of the rent of the tenancy were in arrears has been definitely given up in appeal by Counsel for the appellants. The learned Subordinate Judge has held:

(i) that the mukarrari al-aulad pusht dar pusht of villages Manhu and Majhigawan created and made istimrari by the patta, Exhibit 1, in favour of Rajkumar Babus Pryag Singh and Janki Singh is not non-resumable as is shown in the Record of Rights, but is, in accordance with what he finds to be the custom of pargana Palamau, resumable on the failure of the male line of descent of the original grantees;

(ii) that the mukarrari is not resumable in part on the failure of heirs male of one only of the grantees so long as there are heirs of the other grantees; and in particular that Manhu is not resumable on failure of the line of Babu Janki Singh so long as heirs male of the line of Babu Pryag Singh exist, and that in fact such heirs male do exist;

(iii) that Musammat Radhika Kuer, widow of Babu Rampadarath Singh, son of the grantees, Babu Janki Singh, was in possession as heir of her husband, and not merely, as plaintiffs aver, with their permission after they became entitled to resume on the death of her husband;

(iv) that plaintiffs were not and never had been in sur possession of Manhu or of Sahoreswa and that Sahoreswa is a Tola of village Manhu;

(v) that defendant No. 4 was not the son of the daughter of Rampadarath Singh; and

(vi) that the suit was not bad for defect of parties by reason of the fact that Amarnath Singh great-grandson of Babu Pryag Singh is not a party.

On behalf of the appellants the second, third and fourth of these findings has been assailed before us. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 might under O. XLI, r. 22 (1), Civil Procedure Code, have supported the decree in their favour on the grounds decided against them in the Court below, but they have also filed a cross objection to the decree contesting the first and last of the above findings. A cross-objection was also filed on behalf of Babu Chain Singh, defendant No. 4, against the fifth finding, but the representative in interest substituted in his place, after his death in the appeal has not entered appearance and the appellants have not attacked the fifth of the above findings.

In support of the appeal Mr. C. C. Das contends first, that the second finding of the Trial Court cannot be maintained inasmuch as the patta (Exhibit 1) granted by the khairatdar in 1827 created not a joint tenancy but a tenancy-in-common. This contention has manifestly no force. These two villages together constituted the khairat tenancy of the grantor. The document cannot be interpreted otherwise than as conveying the two villages Manhu and Majhigawan jointly in a single tenancy to two persons jointly as the tenant and on a consolidated rental for the whole tenancy. The mere fact that the mukarrari patta contains a specification of the rent of each village does not detract from this view of the document as a whole the specification only shows how the consolidated rental stipulated for was arrived at. It is impossible to find in the document itself anything to support the contention of the appellants that Manhu, which is mentioned first, was the tenancy of Babu Janki Singh who is mentioned second, and Majhigawan which is mentioned second, was the tenancy of Babu Pryag Singh who is mentioned first. On the contrary, it is explicitly provided that the said Babus and their al-aulad shall musht' dar musht' pay the mukarrari rent of rent of Rs 92 sikka, so that both grantees and their descendants are made responsible for the whole tenancy. To my mind Exhibit 1 is altogether unambiguous and this contention of Mr. C. C. Das fails completely.

Mr. Das then urges that the conduct of the parties, and in particular the payment of rent from the outset, by Babu Janki Singh for Manhu and by Babu Pryag Singh for Majhigawan shows that Manhu was a separate tenancy of the former. But as the grant is unambiguous evidence is not admissible of conduct of the parties leading to another inference.

The third plea advanced by learned Counsel is akin to the second. It is that the grantor having allowed the two grantees from the outset to pay rents separately, that is one grantee to pay the rent of one village and the other grantee to pay the rent of the other village, there was a novation. Now all the reliable evidence available in support of this view is merely (1) that from the outset Babu Janki Singh paid the quota of the consolidated rent of Rs 92 which represents Manhu and Babu Pryag Singh the quota which represents Majhigawan, and (2) that much later the descendants of Babu Janki Singh paid the quota in respect of Manhu to the co-sharer descendants of the original grantor separately in proportion to the shares of these co-sharers in the khairat grant and that the position was apparently the same in respect of Majhigawan. In the absence of other circumstances these facts are not sufficient to establish a novation. The fact that the grantees for convenience of enjoyment divided the area demised has no significance, and the fact that the grantor then received the rent of each of the two divisions (even though they were the old natural divisions) from the grantee in enjoyment and even sued him separately, is not sufficient to show that the parties desired to depart from the original contract. On the other hand it is abundantly clear from the litigation of the early years of the present century that though the khairatdars sued separately for rent in accordance with their shares, and sued the successor-in-interest of Babu Janki Singh in respect of Manhu and the descendants of Babu Pryag Singh in respect of Majhigawan, yet when they sued for ejectment on the ground that the lease had become void, they sued as 16-annas khairatdars and impleaded as defendants the descendants or successors-in-interest of both the original grantees and claimed recovery of possession of the mukarrari tenancy consisting of both Manhu and Majhigawan as originally created. This is clear from the plaint, Exhibit L. in the ejectment suit No. 121 of 1901-02 the judgment in which is Exhibit R, (Exhibit 3 is the judgment in two rent suits Nos. 120 and 121 of 1900). Moreover it was held in that suit that the division by the grantees of their mukarrari istimari grant of Manhu and Majhigawan which was a joint grant, into two portions was not binding on the grantor even though the grantor realised the rents of the two portions separately, and that the latter was not prevented from evicting from the whole tenancy either by reason of the sub-division or by reason of the separate realisation of rent. Again in Suit No. 1 of 1904 which was brought by the whole body of representatives of the grantor of Exhibit 1 for cancellation of Exhibit 1 and possession of both Manhu and Majhigawan, all the descendants in the male line of Babu Pryag Singh with Musammat Radhika Kuer as representing the line of Babu Janki Singh, were impleaded as defendants. In the face of these documents it is impossible to uphold the suggestion of novation. If there had been novation such as is suggested, a separate suit would have been brought in respect of each of the two sub divisions of the original grant.

Mr. Das has mentioned the fact that English Law struggles against a joint tenancy and prefers a tenancy-in-common. He is, however, vague as to the time when the latter tenancy came into existence in this case, and in any case no analogy ought, if it can possibly be avoided, to be drawn between the law of England, highly developed in accordance with his own local conditions, and the grant made a century ago in a backward area in even for India the backward pargana of Palamau. More possible is the analogy with istimrar mukarrar tenancies in the Ramgarh Estate in the neighbouring District of Hazaribagh. Most of these grants whether life grants or al aulad pusht dar pusht are made out in the names of two persons and it is well-known [see also Ram Narain Singh v Chota Nagpur Banking Association (2)] that even in the life grant class the tenancy does not become resumable, even in part, until both grantees are dead. There is certainly no reason why a different rule should apply where, as here, the grant is to two grantees and their offspring, generation after generation.

It is admitted that offspring and even heirs male of Babu Pryag Singh, one of the grantees, exist at present.

Accordingly the second finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct. The circumstances in which resumption may take place, if it can at all take place, have not arisen.

The third finding also is correct beyond any possibility of doubt. The claim that on the death of Rampadarath Singh, the khairatdars resumed Manhu and arranged with Musammât Radhika Kuer that she should remain in possession during her lifetime is altogether contrary to all the probabilities and is unsupported by a tittle of credible evidence, and indeed many of the rent-receipts granted by the different sets of co-sharer khairatdars give the life to the present claim, since they refer to her and the other bahurias as heiresses or heiresses and successors of Babu Rampadarath Singh deceased. It has not even been suggested before us that the finding that the appellants were never in sir possession of Manhu proper at any time, or the grounds on which it is based are not correct.

Thus appellants are not entitled to possession of Manhu either by way of recovery of last possession which they never had or by right of resumption, and the appeal in respect thereto fails completely.

A word may now be said as to the remainder of the fourth finding which relates to Sahorswa. Appellants assert that it is a separate village from Manhu, is not a part of the grant of 1827 and is in their sir possession. The Record of Rights favours the contention of the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 that Sahorswa is covered by the grant. The defendants further contended that it was always so held. The Trial Court held that it is a Tola of Manhu in possession of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 as such and that it has never been held sir by appellants. This finding is unquestionably correct. The only evidence placed before us in support of the case of appellants that Sahorswa was not a part of the grant is the two maps Exhibit 9(a) and Exhibit 9 (b). These entirely fail to rebut the presumption arising from the Record of Rights. Though erroneously called thakbast maps they appear to be copies of something better—a Revenue Survey Map. Each is in fact a copy of the part of the original map of which the third map which is filed by defendants, is a full copy. Clearly the only inference which can be drawn is that Sahorswa was a new village formed at the Revenue Survey out of the area till then considered to be the village of Manhu, otherwise the two would not be depicted on the same map. Then the plaintiffs could have produced the details papers of the Revenue Survey or even of the thak demarcation, and in their absence, no inference in their favour can be drawn from the maps on record. But apart from that the evidence on the other side is overwhelming that Sahorswa is a part of Manhu and that plaintiffs have never been in sir possession. The riyats of Sahorswa have testified in favour of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 whereas neither the evidence of tenants nor counterfoil receipts are forthcoming on behalf of the appellants. Furthermore the rent-receipts granted to Musammât Radhika Kuar by the various co-sharer khairatdars show that the tenancy was Manhu-Sahorswa, Manhu and Sahorswa or Manhu-asli-ma-dakhili. The Trial Judge could not possibly have arrive at any conclusion except that Sahorswa is a Tola of Manhu and is held as part of Manhu under Exhibit I, that appellants were never in possession of Tola Sahorswa and are not entitled to possession thereof on the ground that it is outwith Manhu. It has already been held that they cannot resume Manhu.

This really disposes of the appeal. The fact is, as pointed out more than once by the Courts "that the plaintiffs are dissatisfied with the arrangements made by their ancestors and have resolved in getting rid of them and of the defendants at all costs." But a few words may be said as to the questions raised in the cross-appeal, if such it can be termed of defendants Nos. 1 to 3.

I agree with my learned brother that Amarnath Singh, a descendant of Babu Pryag Singh who has a share in Manhu, was both a proper and a necessary party to the suit.

As to the first finding of the learned Subordinate Judge, which is in favour of the appellants, all that Mr. S. M. Mullick on behalf of the respondents asked during argument was that if the suit failed on other grounds, this issue should remain open. The learned Subordinate Judge also considered that the question had lost much of its importance in view of the second finding. Again in the "reliefs" set out in paragraph 15 of the plaint no definite prayer is made for a declaration that the entry "Not resumable" in the Record of Rights is incorrect or of the circumstances in which the tenancy is resumable. It was admitted that no part of the tenancy was resumable until at least the heirs male of one of the grantees became extinct and it has now been decided that no part is resumable so long at least as an heir male of either of the grantees survives. What remains is the question whether the appellants have by evidence rebutted the entry in the Record of Rights so far as to show that the khairatdars may resume the tenancy.

(1) When there are heirs other than heirs male of one of the original grantees, or failing that (2) when there are no heirs, either male or female.

I am loath to enter upon this difficult question where it is not absolutely necessary to do so. But I may mention that at first sight the considerations advanced by the learned Court below for his finding in favour of the appellants appear insufficient to rebut the entry in the Record of Rights. The Kunda case is admittedly not in point as appellants have not given evidence of a custom by which al aulad in 1827 was restricted in pargana Palamu to lineal male descendants. It may well be the case that the general custom in pargana Palamu is that al aulad pusht dar pusht grants are resumable on failure of heirs male, but I cannot hold that the judgment, Exhibit VII, is sufficient to prove the custom that the tenure in the present instance, in regard to which the entry in the Record of Rights, is not resumable expires on failure of heirs male. The previous rulings refer to cases in which there was no adverse entry confronting the plaintiffs. The grantor too, in this instance was a Tirhutia Brahman newly arrived from Darbhangâ, and the grant is not definitely a jagir or an ijara (even of the ijaras in Palamu which often are doami in tenure, though the rent is subject to enhancement). In my experience, also, ordinarily it is not possible to predicate a custom of the Division of Chota Nagpur as a whole. It generally goes by estates, e. g., Chota Nagpur (equivalent broadly to Ranchi District, and called 'Nagpur' in the vernacular) or Ramgarh or Pachete, or by great Pargana, often corresponding to estates, such as Porahat, Dhalbhum, Barababhum, Tori or Plamu, and though analogy of neighbouring parganas or estates may help, it does not always do so and is rarely conclusive. I feel insecure, therefore, in disposing of the general question of resumability in this appeal, and I would accordingly leave the question open between the parties as requested by cross-appellants and not objected to by plaintiffs, except, of course, to this extent that the mukarrari istimnari grant is not resumable so long as there survives any heir male of either of the original grantees.

I would associate myself with the warning addressed by my learned brother at the instance of their Vakil, to defendants Nos. 1 to 3 that incidental remarks or even decisions in the judgments in this litigation must not be taken as determining the rights of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and Amarnath Sing inter se. These, may well be governed by considerations outwith the matters appearing in or relevant to this litigation, and in particular it does not appear to follow from the fact that because the tenancy cannot be resumed while defendant No. 1 or Amarnath survive, that the other defendants or even outsiders may not have interest therein. If controversy arises settlement by private arbitration would appear to be indicated.

FIRST APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 162 OF 1923.

June 17, 1924.

Present.—Sir Cecil Henry Walsh,
Kt., Actg. Chief Justice, and Mr Justice Ryves.

Rai Sahib Lala KHUB LAL AND OTHERS

—OPPOSITE PARTIES—APPELLANTS

versus

Lala BISHAMBHAR SAHAI AND OTHERS

—APPLICANTS—RESPONDENTS

Arbitration and award—Arbitrator—Jurisdiction exceeded or not exercised—Consent of parties—Arbitrator as witness—Duty of Court—Examination on commission—Limit of examination—Award—Minor parties.

The consent of the parties to an arbitration that the arbitrator should leave certain items undetermined may take various forms, an expressed withdrawal, a mutual understanding not to submit the necessary materials, a mutual recognition by the parties that a condition of things exists which makes a decision impossible, or a diplomatic silence with regard to a mutual understanding. [p 222, col 1.]

If an Arbitrator chooses to undertake the decision of a variety of matters with the consent of parties and he deliberately, or by an oversight, without the consent of the parties, omits from his decision anything really material, it is sufficient to destroy the award, because, he derives his authority only from the consent of parties and from the moment he goes outside that consent, either by omitting to decide what they have submitted to him, or by deciding something which they have not submitted to him, he ceases to be clothed with the legal authority from which alone he derives his jurisdiction. [p 221, col 1.]

If in the course of events, which have happened since he took upon him his office, it has become impossible, or no longer desirable, either in the view of the Arbitrator or in the view of the parties themselves, to decide any one or another of the points originally submitted, and the parties themselves realise that the Arbitrator should disregard that point, the defect which would otherwise invalidate the award, ceases to be a defect. [p 222, col 1.]

An Arbitrator is not in the position of an ordinary witness. Therefore, a Judge ought never to issue a Commission for the examination of an arbitrator or submit him to a roving Commission by way of examination by the parties uncontrolled by the Judge himself, and when an arbitrator appears before him, he ought to exercise the severest possible control and circumspection over the examination. [p 221, col 1.]

O'Rourke v Commissioner for Railways, (1890)
15 A C 371, 59 L J P C 72, 63 L T 66, referred to.

The practice of calling Arbitrators indiscriminately, as though they were witnesses to the issue of fact, is not only an unreasonable burden upon the Arbitrators and certain to lead to a great deal of irrelevant evidence, but it also tends to lead the Judge unconsciously into a kind of re-hearing of the Arbitration. Nothing can be worse than that, because there is no appeal from an Arbitrator, and a Judge ought, from the first, severely to discountenance any proceeding which attempts to take that form. But more than that he ought to exercise a severe control over the interrogatories or examination of the Arbitrator when summoned [ibid].

An Arbitrator is a judicial person in respect of the matter of which he has been appointed. He is entitled to the respect and consideration due to a person occupying that position, and his evidence ought to be confined strictly to the points which are in the eyes of the law material as coming from him. That is to say, any question of fact, upon some evidence or allegation tending to establish or disprove his own misconduct, may be put to him if he is charged with misconduct. [p 224, col 2.]

Where an Arbitrator finds as a fact, that a party did withdraw or did agree to certain things, that is a finding of fact which a Court of law cannot go behind. [p 224, col 2]

An Arbitrator may be examined upon the course of procedure which he has adopted, the material which he has utilised in arriving at his decision and all matters affecting the award itself, that is to say, the drawing up of the award, the piece of paper and so forth. The slightest attempt to get to the materials of his decision, to get to the back of his mind, and to examine him as to why and how he arrived at a particular decision, should be immediately and ruthlessly excluded as undesirable. [Ibid]

O'Rourke v Commissioner for Railways, (1890) 15-A C 371, 50-L J P C 72, 63-L T 66, relied upon.

Obiter.—When the guardian of a minor has been properly appointed and the minor is properly represented in arbitration proceedings and his guardian is a party to the award both in his own capacity and as guardian of the minor, the award is binding on the minor for the time being through his guardian, and he cannot be heard to raise any objection which might be open to him as minor on the ground that his interest as an infant has not been properly looked after, until he reaches majority and raises it in the ordinary way. [p 225, col 2.]

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Aligarh.

Messrs Iqbal Ahmad and Baleswari Prasad, for the Appellants.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru (with him Messrs Gulzari Lal and Uma Shankar Bajpai), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is in many ways a lamentable specimen of the abuse of a valuable and simple piece of machinery which has been provided by the Legislature, to enable people, if they wish to avoid Law Courts, to settle their disputes in a friendly way with the assistance of friends and members of their own brotherhood. That is not to say that the legal aspect of the questions which have been argued before us have not been admirably handled, but nobody acquainted with this litigation, or listening to such parts of the case as have been relevant to the argument before us, can have the slightest doubt that the two main parties to this arbitration proceeding, namely, Khub Lal and Bishambhar Sahai, were well advised to seek the assistance of three Arbitrators to adjudicate upon their controversy, that they succeeded in obtaining apparently gratuitously able, conscientious and honest Arbitrators and that in the main, it would be difficult in the whole history of arbitration to find work which had been better done. It is heart-breaking (except to those who regard quarrelling with members of their own family and litigating in the Law Courts as an existence in itself) to find that one of these parties, after all this labour and expenditure of time, and usefulness and hard honest work, should be so lost to any sense of decency, as to try and upset the whole arrangement. It does not follow that he is not entitled to succeed. Unfortunately it has been only too truly said of the law that from time to time under its protection knavery flourishes, but we are glad to say that the attack upon the Arbitrators in this case, and the childish objections which have been raised to this admirable award, have entirely broken down. But the matters in dispute were substantial, and the variety of items, which had to be dealt with was considerable. How long the arbitration proceedings actually lasted, it is impossible to say. But it would be equally impossible to conduct such an arbitration from beginning to end without exposing the proceedings to attacks, which at any rate in the hands of an able Advocate can be made to look formidable, until they have been pulverized by the respondents on the other side, and there were, when this appeal was opened before us, a certain number of formidable points which were worthy of consideration in the way they were presented by Mr. Iqbal Ahmad. The appeal comes before us in a way which is not unfamiliar. The Judge, or the Arbitrator, has not yet been invented who is able to satisfy both parties in a difficult and complicated controversy. He will probably never be found in our day, and, therefore, when this award was published it was almost certain that one or other of the parties would be dissatisfied. It would not perhaps be a violent presumption to assume that the party, Khub Lal, who is dissatisfied in this case, has not done quite so well as he hoped. Possibly he hoped that the other party to the award would be the one to be dissatisfied. But being apparently dissatisfied, and not willing to accept the decision of the Arbitrators, he indirectly forced his opponent to take the necessary proceedings under paragraphs 20 and 21 of the Second Schedule of the Code to have the award filed as a decree and made finally binding upon the two branches of the family. Then of course the batteries opened fire and the usual string of objections were filed in the Court below—too numerous, and some of them, too trifling to be set out in detail here—and a very thorough enquiry was held in the Court below into the proceedings of the Arbitrators, who, as a matter of course, were charged with misconduct—apparently they would not be real Arbitrators if they did not lay themselves open to suspicion—and various other technical points were raised. A great deal of evidence was taken, including the evidence of a well-known and highly respected Vakil of this Court who happened to be the Umpire, and the evidence of one of his colleagues. To this matter we will refer again in a moment. But the learned Judge before whom this matter came, after apparently a most painstaking hearing, wrote an admirably clear and comprehensive judgment dismissing the objections, and ordering the award to be filed. Thereupon the usual appeal was filed in this Court. The memorandum of appeal shows that the proceedings in the Court below had been in substance an appeal from the Arbitrators' decision, and that an attempt was being made also in this Court by way of appeal from the Court below, to continue the appeal from the Arbitrators. As an example of the kind of attack which was being made upon the proceedings, it is interesting to note that the 6th ground asks this Court to set aside the award upon the ground that Mr. Panna Lal Vakil, High Court, was suffering from defective memory with regard to something which he had decided about somebody or another's house, a matter which he must have desired to forget as soon as possible and now had nothing to do with for several months. If a defective memory is to be a ground for setting aside legal proceedings there would be very few decrees which would ever achieve absolute finality. This attack upon an Arbitrator for defective memory has a bearing upon something which we will have to say hereafter. But out of these numerically heavy attacks which have been made upon the proceedings of the Arbitrators and of their conduct, one or two points have emerged in the skilful handling by Mr. Tqbal Ahmad in this Court which deserve to be dealt with by us and which necessitated our calling upon Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru to put his client's view of the matter, more out of respect for the points that were raised, than for any legal difficulty which they created. A detailed and to some extent microscopic examination of the property which was dealt with by the Arbitrators, and of the proceedings of the Arbitrators, and of the award does disclose that certain matters, which were originally intended to be disposed of by the Arbitrators, have been ignored or omitted from the award, or as it is sometimes said, left undetermined. Now in this case the agreement between the lawyers on either side about the principles is so complete, that it is hardly necessary to refer to authorities. It is agreed, on the one hand, that if an Arbitrator chooses to undertake the decision of a variety of matters with the consent of parties, and he deliberately, or by an oversight, without the consent of the parties, omits from his decision anything really material, it is sufficient to destroy the award. The reason for that is obvious. We are discussing, as it observed, an arbitration without the intervention of the Court. The Tribunal derives its authority only from the consent of the parties and from the moment when it goes outside that consent, either by omitting to decide what they have submitted to him, or by deciding something which they have not submitted to him, he ceases to be clothed with the legal authority from which alone he derives his jurisdiction. About that there has been no controversy before us. Similarly there has been no controversy with regard to a corollary which follows,

KHUB LAL V. BISHAMBHAR SAHAI.

If in the course of events, which have happened since he took upon him his office, it has become impossible, or no longer desirable, either in the view of the Arbitrator or in the view of the parties themselves, to decide any one or another of the points originally submitted, and the parties themselves realise that the Arbitrator should disregard that point, the defect which would otherwise invalidate the award, ceases to be a defect. To take a simple illustration, if the matter in dispute were an elephant which had died (a thing which really happens I think to elephants) in the course of a dispute, it would be absurd to suppose that an award could be upset merely because an Arbitrator failed to divide among the parties the elephant which was dead and buried before the award was issued. It is not necessary, as we have said, to go through the authorities which Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru rightly cited from the English and Indian reports establishing this proposition. There are several items in this case which the Arbitrators have left undetermined. The learned Judge has regard to those of any importance, has found that that was done with the consent of the parties. There was abundant evidence upon which he could come to that conclusion, and we see no reason to interfere with it. The consent for such a purpose may take various forms: an expressed withdrawal, a mutual understanding not to submit the necessary materials, a mutual recognition by the parties that a condition of things exists which make a decision impossible, or a diplomatic silence with regard to a mutual understanding. Almost every one of these illustrations exists here. Two admirable illustrations occur in this particular case, one which was pressed upon us by Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, and one which was not. It so happened that in this wealthy family there were implements or accessories connected with indigo factories, which were scattered, difficult to value, impossible to divide, and altogether a troublesome item to handle. Whether the objection came from the Arbitrators themselves, all of whom were lawyers, and who, as they were giving their services freely at great sacrifice to themselves, could hardly be expected to make the necessary journeys and to undertake the burdensome task of collecting, assessing, dividing and apportioning these factory implements, or whether the parties themselves anticipated the objection which was certain to come sooner or later from the arbitrators, by a kind of tacit understanding, which is only to be expected of reasonable business men, the Arbitrators were given to understand that the factory implements were in themselves so trivial, or at any rate the dispute with regard to them so minute, that they need not trouble their heads about them. Nobody we imagine was better pleased by this decision than the Arbitrators themselves, except possibly the Subordinate Judge who might be asked to hear an appeal on the question as to whether these implements had been fairly divided. Another illustration is what we have described as the diplomatic tacit understanding. There was an unfortunate skeleton in the family cupboard. Skeletons in cupboards may be perfectly innocuous, but sometimes, when they are galvanized in to activity, they may become extremely troublesome, and this skeleton appeared to belong to the latter class. There was a house which has been left severely alone by the Arbitrators. The evidence is clear that the Arbitrators were given to understand that no decision could be arrived at with regard to this house without opening the door of the cupboard, and letting the skeleton out, and it was agreed by one of those tacit diplomatic understandings which are so much more frequent in real life than in legal agreements, that the cupboard should be kept closed, and that nothing should be said about the house, and nothing was said about the house. That point is clearly covered by the principle relied upon by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, namely, a point left undetermined by the consent of parties, and if there is one thing about which Khub Lal is to be congratulated in this case, it is that he preferred it should be left undetermined. Another formidable point raised by Mr. Iqbal Ahmad was the question of the two villages, which certainly gave us a great deal of trouble. In substance what has been done about these two villages is this. Strictly speaking it was the duty of the Arbitrators to divide these villages as they were in the semindari held in common and recorded in the revenue papers of a Tahsil which remained undivided, and although with regard to the property relating thereto the parties approved of the agreement which the Arbitrators adopted, and although the Arbitrators were prepared, and indeed carried out declaration of right as to the rateable shares of both parties corresponding to the type of declaration contemplated by O. XX, r. 18, the view of Mr. Panna Lal, Umpire, as expressed in the box, was that it was practically impossible if not absolutely impossible and there is no difference between practical and absolute impossibility so far as an Arbitrator in a matter of this kind is concerned to go over the ground and to make the necessary partition by metes and bounds. Therefore, they did what they could, and did not attempt to do what they realised they could not, and by way of explanation or possible justification of the excellence of their decision, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru has produced in Court for our inspection the result of the partition which has actually been carried out by the Revenue Authorities with all their experience and knowledge, leaving us to draw a lurid picture of what would have happened if Mr. Panna Lal and his colleagues had even endeavoured to do the same thing their failure to do which, Mr. Iqbal Ahmad suggests, has invalidated these proceedings. It is difficult to see how anybody would have profited by that proceeding. We think that Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru has put the proper construction on these proceedings. Mr. Iqbal Ahmad's contention naturally made was that there was no clear evidence of consent by the parties to the omission. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru's answer is that he does not suggest that this was a point left undetermined by the consent of the parties. Rather was it a point which has been decided in the only way in which it was humanely possible for the Arbitrator to decide. One or two other points which would have been of great interest were raised by Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, but we have come to the conclusion that his client is prevented from raising them in this Court as they were not properly raised in the Court below. This much suffices for the disposal of this appeal, but it leaves two matters untouched which we feel we cannot entirely ignore: (1) a simple and pleasant task, (2) the other not so pleasant and somewhat difficult. The first task is this, that we think we ought to express our admiration for the way in which this arbitration proceeding has been carried out as well as for the way in which it has been handled by the Judge in the Court below, and by the gentlemen who have discussed it before us during the last two days. I have some experience of agreements, of reference, and I am bound to say that I have seldom seen one, which seemed to me more admirable, than that which Mr. Panna Lal prepared for the parties in this arbitration. I have no experience of large arbitration proceedings, but we both of us feel that in this matter all the Arbitrators must have devoted themselves with extraordinary industry, and on the whole with unparalleled success to the preparation of a clear document which should successfully record the right of the parties for all time, and in spite of Khub Lal's dissatisfaction, we think both parties ought to be grateful to the Arbitrators for the way in which they have done their work. In our view the learned Judge has handled the matter in the Court below with one exception admirably. The exception is this, and after what has been said before us in argument we think we ought not to pass the matter over without some observation. As a matter of policy it is obvious that if arbitration is for the general benefit of the community in India, it can only become so by being put in the hands of men of position and ability, and if it is to become, as we are afraid it has to a large extent, a recognised practice the moment an award is completed to start an unjustifiable attack upon the personal character and conduct of those who have only been doing their best to please the parties, and to drag them, before a Court of Law, to cross-examine them, as witnesses, and have offensive suggestions flung at them, the thing will become so unpopular as to be almost impracticable. But it is not merely as a matter of policy that we would mention it. As a matter of law it should be clearly understood by the Courts below that an Arbitrator is not in the position of an ordinary witness. All those concerned in this case recognise that a great deal of the examination to which Mr. Panna Lal was submitted as Umpire was quite unjustifiable. The Judge could not stop it because Mr. Panna Lal's evidence was taken on Commission. But if the principles governing the competence of Arbitrators are clearly understood it is obvious that a Judge ought never to issue a Commission to an Arbitrator. We are not prepared to go the length of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru's suggestion that a Judge ought not to summon an arbitrator without an affidavit as to what he is required to say, but he certainly ought not to submit an Arbitrator to a roving Commission by way of examination by the parties uncontrolled by the Judge himself. Assuming without deciding that a Judge cannot refuse the issue of a summons to an Arbitrator, when the Arbitrator appears before him, the Judge ought to exercise the severest possible control and circumspection over the examination. The practice of calling Arbitrators indiscriminately as though they were witnesses to the issues of fact is not only an unreasonable burden upon the Arbitrators and certain to lead to a great deal of irrelevant evidence, but it also tends unfortunately to lead the Judge unconsciously into a kind of re-hearing of the Arbitration. Nothing can be worse than that, because there is no appeal from an arbitrator, and a Judge ought, from the first severely to discountenance any proceeding which attempts to take that form. But more than that he ought to exercise a severe control over the interrogatories or examination of the Arbitrator when summoned. An Arbitrator is a judicial person in respect of the matter of which he has been appointed. He is entitled to the respect and consideration due to a person occupying that position, and his evidence ought to be confined strictly to the points which are in the eyes of the law material as coming from him. That is to say, any question of fact upon some evidence, or allegation tending to establish or disprove his own misconduct may, no doubt, be put to him if he is charged with misconduct. So with regard to Mr. Iqbal Ahmad's contention in this case, his failure to decide the points submitted to him. So too with regard to the withdrawal by the parties of points originally submitted, bearing this in mind that Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru was right when he argued that where an Arbitrator finds as a fact that a party did withdraw or did agree to certain things, that is a finding of fact which a Court of Law cannot go behind. In short an Arbitrator may be examined upon the course of procedure which he has adopted, the material which he has utilised in arriving at this decision and all matters affecting the award itself, that is to say the drawing up of the award, the piece of paper and so forth. The slightest attempt to get to the materials of his decision, to get to the back of his mind, and to examine him as to why and how he arrived at a particular decision, should be immediately and ruthlessly excluded as undesirable. We think this view is fully supported by a dictum to be found quoted in the judgment of Lord Watson in the case of O'Rourke v. Commissioner for Railways (1) quoted from a judgment of Earl Cairns in a previous authority in the House of Lords: "He (i.e., the Arbitrator or Umpire) was properly asked what had been the course which the argument before him had taken—what claims were made and what claims were admitted; so that we might be put in possession of the history of the litigation before the Umpire up to the time when he proceeded to make his award. But there it appears to me the right of asking questions of the Umpire ceased." In our view that is a short and comprehensive statement of the liability of an Arbitrator to be questioned in the presence of or by the Court with regard to matters affecting the award, and we trust that Judge before whom this direction of ours may come on a future occasion, will adhere to that principle. Strangely enough the learned Judge for whom one has great sympathy had clearly in his mind, supported by authority, the rule that a Judge has no business in an application of this kind to sit in judgment on the decision of the Arbitrators. But nonetheless in a long passage a portion of which precedes his correct declaration of the law and a portion of which follows closely upon it the learned Judge was engaged in an analysis of the accounts and the decision of the Arbitrators upon the accounts which we are satisfied must have caused him hours of work.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Inasmuch as Mr. Iqbal Ahmad has pressed upon us with great earnestness his objection to the way in which the Arbitrators dealt with a specific piece of property which had originally been in this family and indeed still belonged to the family in one sense though undoubtedly impressed with a trust, either expressly or impliedly, created by the deceased head of the family we will add a word or two about it although we are bound to say that it was not open to Mr. Iqbal Ahmad to argue it here. We agree with Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru's construction of the decision of the Arbitrators that it was not a new disposition of the property, but merely a temporary and no doubt admirable arrangement for the provisional treatment of the property. One way of putting it is that it was not, as suggested by Mr. Iqbal Ahmad's client, an alienation at all. Nor is there the slightest foundation for the suggestion of any impropriety on the part of the Arbitrators, with the consent of the parties, to take part in the general administration and the provisional working of this property through a committee to which they belonged. Mr. Iqbal Ahmad pressed upon us that as representing the minors, the grand-children of Khub Lal who could not speak for themselves, he was entitled to object to this part of the decision, although Khub Lal himself could not, being sui juris. We recognise that it is somewhat unusual, and perhaps hard on Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, that we should rule him estopped from raising the point because he had not raised it adequately in the Court below and at the same time that we should decide against the point in the course of observation in our judgment. But we would merely add this, in regard to the interest of the minors, that in our opinion, though it is not necessary for us to arrive at any decision on the point, the guardian having been properly appointed and the minor properly represented in this proceeding, and the guardian having been a party to the award both in his own capacity and as guardian, the award must be binding upon the minors for the time being through their guardian, and they cannot be heard to raise any objection which might be open to them as minors on the ground that their interests as infants have not been properly looked after until they reach majority, and raise it in the ordinary way, and when if ever they do so they will doubtless be reminded if they are not at that age already keenly conscious of the fact themselves that the arrangement which was arrived at was one which received the unanimous and almost enthusiastic approval of all those who were sui juris and who were best able to judge what was not in the general interest of the family and of the minors themselves, and also the approval of the Judge before whom the matter came originally, and of the Court of Appeal.

When in defence of an ejectment suit a tenant

A permanent right of occupancy in land is a right, subject to certain conditions, of a tenant to hold the land, which he occupies, permanently. It is a heritable and in some places may be a transferable right. This permanent right of occupancy may only be obtained by a tenant by custom, or by a grant from an owner of the land who happens to have power to grant such a right, or under an Act of the Legislature. [p. 227, col. 2, p. 228, col. 1.]

The presumption in favour of a permanent tenancy implies that there is ground for inferring that the tenure was always intended to be and always was hereditary, or that it acquired that character by subsequent grant. But a presumption in favour of a transaction assumes its regularity, it cannot be made in favour of that which offends legal principles. [p. 232, cols. 1 & 2.]

A public temple is a religious institution, and is recognised in law as a juridical person, but it can act only through persons who have authority to act for it, and they can act for the temple only within the scope of their authority. The position of the shebait, the manager or the trustees of a temple, is, so far as their power to deal with the endowed lands of the temple is concerned, analogous to the position of a Mahant of a mutt to deal with the endowed lands of a mutt. They can sell or mortgage the endowed lands of the temple if there is an actual, special, and unavoidable necessity of the temple to do so, but the necessity would have to be proved by those who alleged that it existed. Except in a case of such unavoidable necessity the shebait, the managers or the trustees of a temple, or the Mahant of a mutt, have no power to sell or mortgage the endowed property in their custody, and obviously they have no right to impair the endowed property by creating or granting in favour of any one rights of permanent occupancy in the endowed lands. JUDGMENT.

Sir John Edgè.—These are two consolidated appeals by defendants or their representatives from decrees, dated the 22nd December, 1916, of the High Court at Madras, which dismissed two appeals from decrees, dated the 24th April, 1914, which a Subordinate Judge of Tanjore had made in Original Suits Nos. 40 and 42 of 1913 in favour of the plaintiffs for the ejectment of the defendants from lands, including groves, in Tanjore and for mesne profits.

The plaintiffs in each of the suits were five of the six trustees of the Mantrapureeswarasami Temple in Kovilur, in Tanjore. That temple will hereafter be referred to as "the Temple." The sixth trustee, who was made a defendant in each suit, did not interfere in the conduct of the suits. It will be understood that when, later in this judgment, the defendants are referred to, the reference is to the defendants other than the sixth trustee.

The lands in respect of which a decree of ejectment has been made in each suit are part of the village of Mangal in Tanjore, and are part of the endowed property of the Temple. It is not disputed that the defendants were tenants of the Temple of lands to which the suits relate, nor is it now disputed that they received notices to quit. The defendants admit that the melvaram rights in the property in question are vested in the Temple, but their case is that the kudivaram rights in that property are vested in them and never were vested in the Temple, and they claim that they have permanent rights of occupancy in the lands under section 6 of Madras Act I of 1908, and also independently of that Act.

It cannot now be doubted that when a tenant of lands in India in a suit by his landlord to eject him from them, sets up a defence that he has a right of permanent tenancy in the lands, the onus of proving that he has such right is upon the tenant. In Secretary of State for India v. Luchmeswar Singh (1), it was held that the onus of proving that they had a permanent right of occupancy in lands was upon the defendants, who alleged it as a defence to a suit by their landlord to eject them, and that proof of long occupation at a fixed rent did not satisfy that onus; and in Seturathan Iyer v. Venkatachala Goundan (2) in a suit by their landlords for the ejectment of the defendants from lands in a ryotwari District in Madras, the giving of notice to quit not being disputed, it was held that the onus of proving that the defendants had rights of permanent occupancy was upon them.

A permanent right of occupancy in land in India is a right, subject to certain conditions, of a tenant to hold the land permanently which he occupies. It is a heritable right, and in some places it possibly may be transferable by the tenant to a stranger. That permanent right of occupancy can only be obtained by a tenant by custom, or by a grant from an owner of the land who happens to have power to grant such a right, or under an Act of the Legislature. No custom by which the defendants could have obtained a right of permanent occupancy is alleged or proved in these suits.

Their Lordships will first consider whether the defendants have proved that they have rights of permanent occupancy under Madras Act I of 1908 in the lands in suit, and then whether they have proved that they have, otherwise than under that Act, rights of permanent occupancy in the lands.

Unless the endowed lands of the Temple in the village of Mangal constitute an "estate" within the meaning of that term in Madras Act I of 1908 that Act does not apply to them, and the defendants are not tenants with a right of permanent occupancy under section 6 of the Act. An "estate" is defined by section 3 of the Act, which so far as it is material in this case is as follows:—

"3. In this Act, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context:—

(2) "Estate" means

(d) any village of which the land revenue alone has been granted in inam to a person not owning the kudivaram thereof, provided that the grant has been made, confirmed, or recognised by the British Government, or any separated part of such village."

The term "kudivaram" is not defined in the Act, but, as was explained by the Board in Suryanarayana v. Patanna (3) "kudivaram" is a Tamil word which signifies a cultivator's share in the produce of land as distinguished from the landlord's share in the produce of the land received by him as rent, which is sometimes designated as "melvaram." See also Upadrashta Venkata Sastrulu v. Divi Setharomudu (4) where it was mentioned by the Board that the "kudivaram" or "kudivaram interest," as it is called in section 8 of the Act, is in fact a species of tenant right or right of permanent occupancy.

It is the plaintiffs' case that the village of Mangal including the melvaram and kudivaram rights in it, was at some time before 1723 granted as an endowment to the Temple by the then Raja of Tanjore, subject to a yearly payment in cash to the Raja, part of which he remitted to the Temple as an allowance for the maintaining of pooja at the Temple. The grant, or sanad, has been lost. The Raja of 1723 had recalled the grant, but had continued the cash allowance to the Temple. In 1723 the managers of the Temple complained to the then Raja of Tanjore that the allowance in cash was insufficient to maintain the pooja at the Temple, and thereupon the Raja granted to the Temple a sanad which as translated is as follows:—

"Rokha Dafter Karkoon. Ta: (Talug) Kovil Kottay. (illegible) Kadooram. To this effect he made a petition: Thereupon, His Highness being pleased by way of favour has ordered the Nakshi Gootaga (village) to be carried on and has approved of the perij (assessment). This permission is dated (torn), Ramjan. From the year aforesaid the Nakshi Gootaga (Rokkaguthakai) of the Manje Mangal village including the nanja and punja lands has been given (to) Sri Buddhi-pradeswar Swami (of) Kovil Kottay on the annual (payment) of Chakras 125—the previous Gootaga (lease amount) being 100, one hundred Chakras and the present increase being Chakras 25—in all, Chakras one hundred and twenty-five. "Commenced."

The grantee of the sanad is the Temple, and the village which in the sanad of 1723 is described as the Naksh-Gootga (Rokkaguthakai) village is, beyond doubt, the village of Mangal Rokkaguttagei, another spelling of the vernacular word Rokkaguthakai, means according to the Manual of the District of Tanjore, an "assessment, also fixed at favourable rates, either from favour or as an inducement to reclaim waste" (See p. 487 of A Manual of the District of Tanjore, compiled under the orders of Government, printed at Madras in 1883).

In 1724 an official memorandum was sent to the State Officer of Kadaramban which mentioned the petition upon which the sanad of 1723 was granted, and continued thus—

"An arzi was therefore submitted praying that Sahab Avargal would be pleased to pass orders for continuing the Rokkaguthakai village as before and thereupon an order was passed accordingly for treating Mangalam village inclusive of nanja and punja as Rokkaguthakai village, for Sri Buddhipradeswaraswami of Kovil Kottay, for 125 Pons per annum. Beriz fixed therefor is as follows:—Previous guthakar, 100 Pons; increase now made, 25 Pons; total, 125 Pons. It was granted for this sum. Out of this sum, 72 Pons being the annual allotment made for the Sirkar pooja mohini shall be remitted, and the balance of beriz credited to the Sirkar. This shall be followed every year. The original sanad shall be returned to the Stanikar after taking a copy thereof.

"Seal of M. R. Ry. Hazarath Siva Rao Nurasinga Rao Peishwa"

There can be no doubt that the sanad of 1723 was granted, the only question as to it is; what does it mean?

That sanad of 1723, in their Lordships' opinion, purports to re-grant to the Temple all the lands of the village of Mangal as a religious endowment of the Temple subject to the assessment mentioned in it, and the effect of that re-grant was to pass to the Temple all the melvaram and the kudivaram rights in the village. The Temple had, obviously, been deriving from the village under the original sanad an income sufficient for the maintenance of the pooja worship at the Temple, and it must have obtained that income from the cultivation of the village lands either by its servants or by its tenants, but there is nothing in the sanad of 1723 to suggest that there was in 1723 any tenant of lands in the village who had any right of permanent occupancy in them. There is no proof that in 1723 there was any tenant of lands in the village who had any right of permanent occupancy in them. The village was in 1723 of that class of village which in Tanjore was known as Ekabhogam villages, or villages of which the sole occupancy right was vested in one individual—in Mangal the Temple—to distinguish them from Arudikarie villages, which were held by a number of individuals in separate shares, and from Samudayam or Parsunkarie villages, which were held in common. (As to the three classes of villages, see page 405 of the Manual of the District of Tanjore.)

At some time between 1719 and 1799 the Tanjore territory in which the village of Mangal is situate came by cession from the Raja of Tanjore or by conquest under the control of the East India Company, and in 1809 a Register of lands, in the village of Mangal was made by Mr. Cotton as the Collector of the District. The following is an extract from his Register of Rokkaguthakai lands.—

"Collector."

The entry in column 4 shows that the village had been originally granted to the Temple, and the entries in columns 5 and 6 show that, according to the Collector's information, the village had been enjoyed by the Temple from the time of the original grant down to the time when he made the Register in 1809. The entries in columns 2 and 8 show that, according to the Collector's information and belief, all the lands of the village had been granted to the Temple. Their Lordships regard the entries in the Register of 1809 relating to the village of Mangal as valuable as showing what, on the information which he had obtained, the Collector believed to be the title to the village of Mangal and to all the lands in that village.

In the Paimash, or Survey Account, for Fash 1226 (1816 or 1817), the person then in the enjoyment of the total nunja (dry land), punja (wet land), tope and manai garden, of the village of Mangal was stated to be the Temple, and the enjoyment was stated to be Rukkaguthakai Ekabhogam. In the Paimash for Fasli 1238 (1829), the village of Mangal was described as a Rukkaguthakai Miras Ekabhogam village, which meant that it was a Rukkaguthakai village and that all the lands in the village were the property of one proprietor.

It is stated in the judgment of the High Court—and it must be assumed correctly—that 21 velis of the wet land of the village of Mangal were cultivated by the Temple, by its servants and with its own ploughs, before 1820, and that in those 21 velis of the endowed lands the Temple then owned both the melvaram interest and the kudivaram interest, and the defendants were unable to explain how it happened that the Temple could have owned the kudivaram interest in 21 velis only of the endowed lands.

It was proved that in 1883 a small area of the waste lands of the village of Mangal was acquired by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act, and that no part of the compensation paid for those waste lands was claimed by any person except the Temple, and that to the Temple was paid all the compensation awarded under that Act. From that fact it may be concluded that the grant of the lands in the village in 1723 included the waste lands of the village, if there could be any doubt that all the lands of the village of Mangal were granted by the sanad of 1723 to the Temple as an endowment.

Their Lordships find that the melvaram and the kudivaram interests in the lands of the village of Mangal were at some time before 1723 granted by a Raja of Tanjore, and re-granted in 1723 by the then Raja of Tanjore, to the Temple, and consequently, that the lands in suit are not an "estate" within the meaning of Act 1 of 1908, and that the defendants did not obtain any rights of permanent occupancy under that Act.

It remains to be considered whether the defendants have proved that they, or those through whom they claim title as occupiers of the lands in suit, obtained at any time a right of permanent occupancy in the lands. No grant of a right of permanent occupancy has been produced. But the defendants asked the Courts below, and now ask their Lordships, to presume that they or those through whom they claim, were tenants of those lands in suit with a right of permanent occupancy in them. It does not appear that in 1723, or in 1809 or in 1816 or in 1829, there were any tenants of lands in the village who had a right of permanent occupancy in the endowed lands of the Temple. As Act 1 of 1908 does not apply in this case; and as there is no proof of any custom conferring on tenants of lands of the village any right of permanent occupancy and as no grant of a right of permanent occupancy has been produced or even alleged, it is not apparent how a right of permanent occupancy could have been obtained by the defendants or by any predecessors-in-title of theirs, except by a lost grant or grants, and that is not even suggested.

A public temple, such as is the Temple in this case, is a religious institution, and is recognised in law as a juridical person, but it can act only through persons who have authority to act for it, and they can act for the temple only within the scope of their authority. The position of the shebait, the manager or the trustees of a temple, is, so far as their power to deal with the endowed lands of the temple is concerned, analogous to the position of a Mahant of a mutt to deal with the endowed lands of a mutt. They can doubtless sell or mortgage the endowed lands of the Temple if there is an actual, special, and unavoidable necessity of the temple to do so, but that necessity would have to be proved by those who alleged that it existed. Except in a case of such unavoidable necessity the shebait, the managers or the trustees of a Temple or the Mahant of a mutt, have no power to sell or mortgage the endowed property in their custody, and obviously they have no right to impair the endowed property by creating or granting in favour of any one rights of permanent occupancy in the endowed lands. The law on this subject is well established: see Maharane Shabbessource Lebia v. Mothooranath Acharjee (5), Ashiram Goswami Mohant v. Shyama Charan Nande (6), Palaniappa Chetty v. Deivasikamony Pandara (7), Vidya Varuthe Thiruha Swamigal v. Ba-usami Ayyar (8). In the case of a shebait a grant by him in violation of his duty of an interest in endowed lands which he has not authority as shebait to make may, possibly under some circumstances be good as against himself by way of estoppel, but is not binding upon his successors.

In Satya Sri Ghoshal v. Kartik Thandara Dass (9) which came before the High Court at Calcutta in second appeal in a suit to eject the defendants from debutter lands, which the lower Appellate Court had dismissed on a presumption that the defendants had a permanent tenancy in the lands, Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and Chatterjee, J. said that the decree appealed from rested not on direct proof but on presumption, and that it would seem that the property there in question was debutter and remanded the suit so that it might be ascertained if that property was debutter when the tenancy commenced, holding, rightly, that—was hereditary, or that it acquired that character by subsequent grant. But a presumption in favour of a transaction assumes its regularity, it cannot be made in favour of that which offends legal principles."

They further rightly said:—

"If it was debutter at the time the tenancy originated, then this would affect the applicability of the presumption, for, to create a new and fixed rent for all time, though adequate at the time, in lieu of giving the endowment the benefit of an augmentation of a variable rent from time to time, would be a breach of duty in a shebait, and is not therefore presumable."

In the present case there was nothing proved, or even attempted to be proved, from which it could be inferred that the tenure of tenants of the lands in suit, or of any lands in the endowed property of the Temple, had originally been a tenure of permanent occupancy or any higher tenure than that of a tenancy-at-will. Between 1820 and 1830 some of the endowed lands in the village of Mangal were let by the Temple for cultivation on short leases of from one to five years, such leases were granted to the highest bidders. In 1831 some of the tenants of the Temple's endowed lands, apparently all of them, agreed amongst themselves to cultivate jointly the endowed lands of which they were tenants, and they executed and delivered to the Collector, who was then the manager of the Temple and its endowments, a muchalka by which they took the endowed lands for a term from Fasli 1241. That muchalka is absolutely inconsistent with any of the tenants having then any right of permanent occupancy in any of the endowed lands of the Temple and with their believing that they had any right of permanent occupancy in any of the Temple's lands. In 1870 Sir C. H. Scotland, C. J., held that when a tenancy in the Presidency of Madras commenced under a terminable contract there was nothing to prevent the landlord from ejecting the tenant at the end of the term from the lands which had been let to him. NAINAPILLAI V. RAMANATHAN.

Pena Reena Seena Mayandi Chettiyar v. Chokkalingam Pillay (10).

One of the reasons for these consolidated appeals as stated in the case for the appellants is "4. Because the appellants have acquired permanent occupancy right by prescription." No tenant of lands in India can obtain any right to a permanent tenancy by prescription in them against his landlord from whom he holds the lands. See Madhav Rao Waman Saundalgekar v. Raghunath Venkatesh Deshpande (11) decided by the Judicial Committee on the 10th July, 1923.

Another reason for these consolidated appeals as stated in the case for the appellants is "5. Because the respondents having allowed and recognised the alienations made by the predecessors of the appellants, are now estopped from denying that they have permanent rights of occupancy." The appellants' case that they have permanent rights of occupancy, was not argued on the ground of an estoppel, for there is no estoppel on the evidence in the case, but on the ground that it must be presumed from matters which will be presently referred to, that the defendants, or those through whom they claim titles as tenants, had at some time acquired rights of permanent occupancy in the land in suit.

In the very able argument which was addressed to their Lordships in support of these consolidated appeals it was contended that their Lordships ought to presume that the defendants or those through whom they claim had acquired at some time rights of permanent occupancy in the lands in suit from the fact that in some receipts given by servants of the Temple tenants of endowed lands in the village were described as "kudimiras." Their Lordships are not certain what in Tanjore, "kudimiras" means. No doubt by itself "miras" generally means a proprietor of some kind, and

"kudi" by itself appears to mean a house, a village, a town, an inhabitant, or a tribe. "Kudimiras" in those receipts may have been a description of the tenant as the proprietor of a house in the abadi of the village, or it may have been a misdescription. It appears from one pavmash that there were men who were described as "kudimiras" in respect of their interests in houses in the abadi of the village. In the case already cited from Seena Pena Reena Seena Mayandi Chettiyar v. Chokkalingam Pillay (10) the Board declined to act on a vernacular descriptive term of parties in that case, which the Board considered as being of uncertain meaning. The particular descriptive term was "ulavadai mirasidar." The appeal in that case related to lands in Tanjore. Also, in support of the argument that their Lordships ought to presume that the defendants had a right of permanent occupancy in the endowed lands, many other documents and papers were relied upon as showing that tenants of the endowed lands had to the knowledge of officials of the Temple sold or mortgaged such interests as they had in endowed lands of the village of Mangal. Their Lordships are unable to make any such presumption. Such a presumption would mean that some managers or trustees of the Temple had violated their duty to the Temple. It has not been proved that there ever were any lands in the village in which, by grant or custom, there was any right of a tenant to a permanent occupancy, and the only presumption which their Lordships can make in the cases of such sales and mortgages is that it was to the interests of the Temple that the ordinary cultivators of the Temple lands should be solvent persons, and not persons who were compelled to sell or mortgage such interest as they had in Temple lands in order to raise money.

All the documents and papers from which their Lordships have been asked by the Counsel for the defendants to presume that the defendants had rights of permanent occupancy in the lands in suit were before Mr. G. Kothanda Ramanjulu, the Subordinate Judge who tried the suits, and on the appeals, before Sadasiva Aiyar, J., who wrote the judgment of the High Court with which Napier, J., concurred. All those learned Judges were from their local knowledge in a better position than their Lordships are to correctly appreciate the meaning of the vernacular terms in use in the Tamil country of Tanjore in reference to interests in lands, and all those learned Judges, in carefully considered and exhaustive judgments, found, to state briefly their findings, that the endowed property of the Temple, of which the lands in question formed part, was not an "estate" within the meaning of Madras Act I of 1908, and that the defendants were not, under that Act or otherwise, tenants with a right of permanent occupancy.

The appellants having failed to prove that they or any of them had any right of permanent occupancy in any of the lands in suit, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these consolidated appeals should be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 10, 115—Order refusing to stay suit—Revision—High Court, whether can interfere

Under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code the High Court can set aside an order refusing to stay a suit under section 10 of the Code pending the final decision of a previously instituted suit between the parties, the matter in issue in both being identical. [p. 235, col. 1.]

Petition under Order XLI, rule 5 and section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code for stay of proceedings pending the decision of the appeal case noted above by the High Court.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—The petitioner in this case seeks revision of an order of the Court below refusing to stay, as required by section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, the trial of a suit instituted therein against him before the final decision of a previously instituted suit, the matter in issue in both being identical.

The facts briefly are that the plaintiffs-respondents brought a suit for a declaration that the gift of a specified immoveable property made by a female proprietor would be inoperative against them on her death or re-marriage. That suit was decided on appeal by the District Judge in favour of the plaintiffs, but the defendant's second appeal to this Court has been admitted to a hearing by a Division Bench and has not yet been decided. As the donor has now died, the plaintiffs have brought the said second suit, to obtain possession of the gifted property. That suit must stand or fall in accordance with the result of the defendant's appeal to this Court in the previous case, and, therefore, according to section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code its trial must be stayed pending the decision of the appeal. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents objects:

(1) that this Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the order of the Court below; and

(2) that no order can be made because the petitioner did not file a copy of the order complained against.

As regards the latter objection it is not denied that the order complained against was made and, therefore, it is not essential to have a copy of that order placed on this record. With regard to (1) Counsel for the petitioner cites section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code and states that this Court can in exercise of its inherent power revise the order which violates an express provision of law I am of opinion that section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be resorted to because it relates to matters in respect of which no express provision exists in the Code. The present case is governed by section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code and as the Court below did not carry out the rule laid down therein the question is: Can the Court interfere and make the order which must have been made by that Court. I consider that the order is subject to revision under section 115 because if not revised the defendant-petitioner shall have no other remedy against the evil that it will entail in the way of subjecting him to the cost and trouble of a useless litigation. An interlocutory order which can ultimately be corrected on appeal from the final decision may not be liable to interference under section 115, but there must be a remedy for an illegal order of this description where a Subordinate Court refused to exercise a jurisdiction which it is its imperative duty to do. I may note here that the view taken by the Calcutta High Court as to the scope of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code commands itself to me.

I accordingly accept this petition, set aside the order of the Court below and direct that the trial of the suit be stayed pending the decision of the appeal referred to above. The plaintiffs-respondents to pay the petitioner's costs in this Court.

If there be two or more tenants-in-common and one of them A be in actual occupation of part of the estate and engaged in cultivating that part in a proper course of cultivation as if it were his separate property, and another tenant-in-common B attempts to come upon the said part for the purpose of carrying on operations there inconsistent with the course of cultivation in which A is engaged and the profitable use by him of the said part, and A resists and prevents such entry, not in denial of B's title, but simply with the object of protecting himself in the profitable enjoyment of the land, such conduct on the part of A would not entitle B to a decree for joint possession [p 237, col 1]

Prima facie, co-owners are entitled to hold joint possession of joint property and consequently if one co-sharer seeks to defeat the claim of another co-sharer to joint possession to joint property, special circumstances must be alleged and established so as to justify exclusive occupation of the joint property by one of the co-sharers. Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Rajshahye, dated the 4th of March 1921, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 31st of May 1919.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover joint possession of certain lands on establishment of the plaintiff's Zemindari right thereto to the extent of 3 annas 9 gundas, 1 kag share. The allegations upon which the suit was based shortly stated were that the defendants Nos. 13 and 14 were co-sharers of the plaintiff to the extent of RAJENDRA NARAYAN RAI v. BHAIRABENDRA NARAYAN ROY.

5 annas 3 karas 3 kaga and that the remaining 7 annas 10 gundas share belonged to certain persons called the Parsha Zemindars who, however, are no parties to this litigation. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants Nos 13 and 14 had settled the lands in dispute with the defendants Nos. 1 to 12, that the said settlement was unauthorised and that those persons were cultivating the lands and were in possession thereof. He, therefore, prayed for recovery of joint possession to the extent of his share as stated above.

The contesting defendants, namely, defendants Nos 13 and 14, alleged that, out of the lands in suit, 129 bighas were debuttar of Madan Mohan Thakur, that of the remaining lands, a portion was the debuttar land of Kali Thakurani and another portion was the kamat land of the Parsha zemindars and, furthermore, that the said Thakur and Thakurani were in possession of the said lands which belonged to them respectively for over twelve years and that, therefore, the plaintiff had no right whatsoever therein.

The learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the right in which the defendants Nos. 13 and 14 proposed to hold the lands in suit was a right which they were relying upon in utter denial of the plaintiff's right, and, in that view of the matter, he held that, although the said defendants were co-sharers of the plaintiff, they were not entitled to the protection of the well known principle of equity laid down in the case of Watson & Co v. Ramchund Dutt (1). He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's suit with costs declaring the plaintiff's right to a 3 annas 4 gundas 1 kag share in the disputed land and awarding him joint possession of the same with the defendants. He also passed an order directing that the plaintiff would get mesne profits to be determined later on on the plaintiff's application.

The defendants Nos 13 and 14 preferred an appeal against the aforesaid decision. At the appellate stage there was a change of point on the part of these contesting defendants and, to use the words of the learned District Judge, whereas in the whole of their pleadings the appellants, namely, the defendants Nos. 13 and 14, "took up a position in denial of the plaintiff's title, their learned Vakil in the course of the appeal threw over-board the whole of the pleading and took stand on the position that the plaintiff disclosed no cause of action." The learned District Judge, however, came to the conclusion that there was no evidence that prior to the filing of the written statement any circumstance existed to justify the assumption that the plaintiff had been excluded from the enjoyment of the joint property in consequence of the assertion of hostile title on the part of the defendants Nos. 13 and 14 and, having taken that view, he set aside the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and, in lieu thereof, made a decree to the effect that the plaintiff would only be entitled to compensation from the defendants Nos 13 and 14 in the shape of a proportionate share of the rent to which they were entitled. The learned District Judge also upheld the decree of the Court of first instance as regards mesne profits. Against this decision, the plaintiff has preferred this appeal.

Now, the principle laid down in the case of Watson & Co. v. Ramchund Dutt (1), is well known. It is an equitable principle which, however, has got to be applied very carefully, regard being had to the particular circumstances of the case which comes up before the Court. In that case, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held "If there be two or more tenants-in-common and one A be in actual occupation of part of the estate and is engaged in cultivating that part in a proper course of cultivation as if it were his separate property and another tenant-in-common B attempts to come upon the said part for the purpose of carrying on operations there inconsistent with the course of cultivation in which A, is engaged and the profitable use by him of the said part and A. resists and prevents such entry, not in denial of B's title, but simply with the object of protecting himself in the profitable enjoyment of the land, such conduct on the part of A would not entitle B. to decree for joint possession." Their Lordships went on to observe, in Bengal, the Courts of Justice, in cases where no specific rule exists, are to act according to justice, equity and good conscience and if in a case of shareholders holding lands in common, it should be found that one share-holder is in the act of cultivating a portion of the lands which is not being actually used by another, it would scarcely be consistent with the rule above indicated to restrain him from proceeding with his work or to allow any other share-holder to appropriate to himself the fruits of the other's labour or capital. Now applying these principles to the facts of the present case can it for a moment be suggested that the defendants Nos. 13 and 14 were resisting the plaintiff's right, not in denial of the plaintiff's title, but simply with the object of protecting themselves in the profitable enjoyment of the land, or can it be said that the plaintiff, in seeking to get a decree for joint possession was trying to appropriate to himself the fruits of the labour and capital of the defendants Nos. 13 and 14? In the view that I take of the facts of this case, the principle relied upon by the learned District Judge does not seem to be applicable at all. It is not necessary to refer to the cases of Madan Mohan Shaha v. Rajah Ali (2) and Surendra Narain Sinha v. Hari Mohan Misser (3), because in my judgment the facts of those cases are entirely distinguishable from those of the case now before us. The case which makes the nearest approach to the present one is that of Jatindra Nath Roy v. Sabidannessa Khatur (4), where it was held that "prima facie, co-owners are entitled to hold joint possession of joint property and consequently if one co-sharer seeks to defeat the claim of another co-sharer to joint possession of joint property, special circumstances must be alleged and established so as to justify exclusive occupation of the joint property by one of the co-sharers; and further that where the defendants who appeared to be co-sharers of the plaintiffs, as regards the land in dispute, had all along been denying the title of the plaintiffs and asserted that they had been in possession of the land under a third person in a suit for recovery of land, upon declaration of title the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for joint possession. The learned District Judge in the present case distinguished the decision in that case upon the ground that in his opinion there was no evidence that prior to the written statement there was any circumstance to show that the co-owner plaintiff had been excluded from the enjoyment of the joint property by the assertion of a hostile title. It is true that the mere setting up of a rival claim or a hostile title in the written statement would not entitle the plaintiff to allege that there was ouster and, on that footing, to seek for a decree for joint possession. But, in the present case, it is difficult to say why it should be held that there was no setting up of hostile title or ouster prior to the filing of the written statement. The fact that the lands in dispute were settled with the defendants Nos. 1 to 12 in *adh*i settlement upon the footing that they belonged exclusively to the defendants Nos. 13 and 14 the fact that they thus remained in occupation for about five years, the fact that when the right of the defendant Nos. 13 and 14 to settle the lands was challenged in the suit, they put forward a defence to the effect that the lands were not the joint property of the plaintiff and themselves but that they were the debuttar property of Madan Mohan Thakur and Kali Thakurani and also that a portion of the lands was khimat land of the Parsha zemindars, who, as I have said, are no parties to this litigation, all these taken together clearly show that the right under which the settlement was preferred to have been made by the defendants Nos. 13 and 14 was a right set up adversely to the plaintiff and in that view, I think the principle laid down in the case of Watson & Co. v. Ram Chund Dutt, (1) referred to above does not apply to the present case. I, therefore, think that the decree passed by the learned District Judge should be set aside and that passed by the learned Subordinate Judge should be restored with costs in this Court and also in the lower Appellate Court.

JUDGMENT.

Walsh, Actg. C. J.—This is one of those really difficult cases where this constant conflict between the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court and the jurisdiction of the Civil Court indirectly arises. I say indirectly arises, because no objection was taken to the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court, and until this case reached the High Court, and my brother Stuart allowed the learned Vakil to argue a point which was not open to him, the difficulty was never present in the case at all. It is hoped that the approaching legislation about the Tenancy Act, or the new Act, if we ever get one, will finally get rid of this perennial difficulty. The facts of the case are quite simple as appears from my brother Stuart's judgment. It is true that a perpetual lease having been granted by a Hindu widow with a Hindu widow's estate, such questions as legal necessity, and determining her right to grant it, so as to make it operative after her death, are involved. The plaintiff sued in ejectment under section 57 of the Tenancy Act, alleging or assuming—it matters not which—that the plots were agricultural land. No point was raised either of fact or law on this point, namely, as to the nature of the land and the character of the tenancy, either in the pleadings or in the issues framed by the Assistant Collector, and both the lower Courts decreed ejectment, the Second Court slightly modifying the First Court's judgment. When the matter came before this Court in second appeal, a new point of law was taken, which the learned Judge has accepted. It was said that the suit was premature, and that the plaintiff reversioner, if he wanted to recover on the revenue side in ejectment, must first get the lease, or alienation which the widow had made, formally set aside, or declared to be void in a Civil Court. The learned Judge accepted this view. He has not said on what authority he based himself. It is a view inconsistent with the weight of authority, at any rate of this Court. If there were only one Court possessed of jurisdiction, so that two such suits would have to be brought in that Court, there is no question that the view is erroneous. The Privy Council have made that perfectly clear in the case of Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (1) where they laid down generally that the institution of a suit for possession is sufficient to show the plaintiff's election to treat the alienation as a nullity, and that, therefore, a separate suit is unnecessary, and even a separate suit for a declaration is inoperative. Putting it into plain English, the mere bringing of a suit for ejectment challenges the right of the defendant to be in possession, and as Mr. Justice Piggott pointed out in the next case which is a clear authority for this case, and which really was binding on Mr. Justice Stuart, if his attention had been drawn to it "the defendant is forced to set up in justification of his possession the lease under which he sits, and then it is that the plaintiff can say that such lease was invalid and not binding upon him". The passage in the judgment which I have just quoted occurs at page 260 in the case of Sher Khan v. Debi Prasad (2) and is a sufficient authority for this case, and if it had been cited to the learned Judge, I have no doubt that he would have followed it.

Sulaiman, J.—I agree. The plaintiff instituted a suit in the Revenue Court for the ejectment of the defendants, treating them as non-occupancy tenants. It was alleged that they had planted trees on the land, and also made some constructions, and were, therefore, liable, to ejectment under section 57, sub-clause (b) of the Agra Tenancy Act. The plaintiff treated the land as agricultural land, and sought relief in the Revenue Court. Defendant No. 1 set up a perpetual lease executed by the deceased widow of the last male owner, to whom he said he had succeeded as a reversioner. Defendant No. 2 claimed to be a transferee from defendant No. 1. In neither of the written statements filed in the Court below was the point specifically raised that the land in question was not agricultural land at all. Nor was any plea raised that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Only four issues were framed by the Trial Court, and none of these issues referred to the two points above mentioned. The Court of first instance decreed the claim. The defendants went up in appeal to the lower Appellate Court, and in their grounds of appeal they did not raise either of the two points mentioned. The decree of the First Court was affirmed with a slight modification. A second appeal was filed in this Court, and although it was not suggested in the grounds of appeal that the land really was not agricultural land, or that the lease was not for agricultural purposes, a plea was at the time of the admission of the appeal added to the effect that the lease not having been set aside by a competent Court in a proper suit brought by a person entitled to question it, it was binding on the zamindar for the time being. The learned Judge of this Court has allowed the appeal, and has come to the conclusion, to quote his own words: "that it was necessary for the plaintiff-respondent to set aside the alienation which the lady had made in favour of Gopal as a precedent to instituting a suit for the ejectment of the defendants appellants through the Revenue Court". He has, however, assumed that the plots in question are agricultural land.

It was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (1) "that a Hindu widow is not a tenant for life, but is owner of her husband's property subject to certain restrictions on alienation, and subject to its devolving upon her husband's heirs upon her death. But she may alienate it subject to certain conditions being complied with. Her alienation is not, therefore, absolutely void, but it is prima facie voidable at the election of the reversionary heir. He may think fit to affirm it, or he may at his pleasure treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any Court, and he shows his election to do the latter by commencing an action to recover possession of the property". It is quite clear, therefore, that it is not incumbent on a reversioner to obtain a declaratory decree to set aside the lease executed by the deceased widow before seeking his substantial relief. If the land were either let or held for agricultural purposes, the Revenue Court alone could order the ejectment of the defendants. A Hindu widow can certainly grant a lease to tenants or lessees, and such tenants or lessees can be ejected through the Revenue Court alone. The plaintiff reversioner, therefore, could only go to the Revenue Court for ejectment, and the defendants were entitled to set up the lease as a lease binding upon her, if they set up its validity, it would be for the Revenue Court to decide whether it had or had not been executed for legal necessity. The question of legal necessity was never raised in the Courts below, and has not been decided in favour of the defendants.

The view of the learned Judge that the plaintiff ought to go to the Civil Court in the first instance to obtain a declaration and then sue in the Revenue Court for ejectment, is contrary to the opinion expressed by Chamier and Piggott, J.J., in the case of Sher Khan v. Debi Prasad (2) following an earlier case in the same volume at page 41.

I am, therefore, of opinion that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to obtain a declaratory decree from a Civil Court before instituting a suit for ejectment in the Revenue Court.

The learned Vakil for the respondents has tried to support the decree of the learned Judge of this Court, by urging that as a matter of fact the lease in question is not one for agricultural purposes. As I have already stated this point was never raised at the trial, and has been assumed in favour of the plaintiff all along. It may be that according to the terms of the lease, it is not a lease solely for agricultural purposes. All the same it may well be that the land has been held for agricultural purposes. This new point, therefore, cannot be allowed to be raised at this stage.

By the Court.—We, therefore, allow the appeal and restore the order of the District Judge, but, under the circumstances, having regard to the fact that the present appellant ought never to have allowed this point to be taken without objection, and that he failed to cite the authorities bearing upon the point, we deprive him of all costs in this Court. That is to say, he will only get the costs in the first Court and in the District Judge's Court.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This is an appeal by the decree-holder against an order of the Court below dismissing the execution case as against the judgment-debtor No. 2 Asutosh Dey. The facts are rather complicated but they may be briefly stated thus: The property which was a Colliery belonged originally to one Satish Chandra Mitra. Mr. J. G. Galstaun obtained a decree against him and attached this Colliery on the 20th April 1919. On the 11th September 1919 Satish mortgaged this property to the present appellant. The respondent to this appeal (the judgment-debtor No. 2 Asutosh Dey) took out several executions and attached this property. It was sold on the 4th July 1919 for Rs. 1,11,500 in

JITENDRA NATH V. ASUTOSH DEY.

Galstaun's execution case. On the 23rd July 1921, the appellant brought a money suit in the Asansole Court and caused attachment before judgment to be levied on the balance that might be left over after payment of Galstaun's dues. On the 30th July 1921 the appellant brought a suit (No. 172 of 1921) on the mortgage executed in his favour on the 14th September 1919 by Satish and caused the sale proceeds to be attached. The matter related to several attachments and came before the Court for consideration on 8th September 1921 which passed an order to the effect that after payment of the costs of execution and the amount due to Mr. Galstaun the balance would first be paid to the respondent who held five decrees against Satish in execution of which he had attached the sale proceeds. These items together totalled Rs. 90,876. As regards the balance of Rs. 20,623, the Court passed the following order: "After paying the above amounts the balance be kept under attachment as follows: namely, Rs. 8,000 as directed by the Asansole Sub-Judge's Court and the balance in favour of the plaintiff of Suit No. 172 of 1921 as attachment before judgment." As a result of this order Mr. Galstaun was paid off in full and all the five decrees held by the respondent were also satisfied in full. The appellant obtained a decree in the mortgage suit No. 172 of 1921 on the 12th December 1921 and on the 14th December he withdrew Rs. 12,623 out of Rs. 20,000 in deposit in Court, leaving a sum of Rs. 8,000 in deposit presumably for the satisfaction of his claim in the money suit which was decreed in February 1922. On realising Rs. 12,623 on the decree in the mortgage suit there was a small balance of Rs. 1,400 left unpaid. The present execution case relates to that amount of Rs. 1,400 which has been levied against the respondent under the following circumstances. The appellant brought the suit as aforesaid on the mortgage against the mortgagor Satish and in that suit he alleged that as the respondent was one of the attaching creditors of Satish and had attached the money in the hands of the Court over which the appellant had prior lien he was a necessary party to the mortgage suit and therefore, he also was made a defendant. At the hearing of this suit the respondent did not appear and the decree that was passed against him was in these words: "If the surplus sale proceeds in deposit in Court are not found sufficient to satisfy this decree, the defendant, No. 2 shall have to pay to plaintiff for the satisfaction of this decree so much of the surplus sale proceeds unlawfully appropriated by him." The appellant contends that he is entitled to recover Rs. 1,400 as balance of his mortgage decree from the respondent as he has unlawfully appropriated this money. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, who, by the way, is the officer who had passed all the orders in the case including the decree in the appellant's mortgage suit overruled the appellant's contention and dismissed the execution case.

It is argued by the appellant that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge of law and facts is wrong. It is said that the order passed by the Subordinate Judge on the 4th September 1921 was one passed under section 73, Civil Procedure Code. That order was wrongly passed in as much as the appellant was an encumbrancer and ought to have been given preference over the respondent who was merely money decree-holder. As that order was not appealable the appellant could not challenge it, but it may be revised and the rights of the parties determined in a separate proceeding as has been laid down by the Judicial Committee in the case of Shankar Sarup v. Lala Fyl. Chand (1). It is argued that the appellant is not bound by that order and that by virtue of his being an encumbrancer he ought to have preference over the respondent. In our judgment this contention is not sound. The order that was passed by the Court on the 8th September 1921 was not one on the face of it, under section 73, Civil Procedure Code. It is not a case where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor. In the present case, there were only two decree-holders, Mr. Gulstain and the respondent. The appellant had not obtained any decree at that time. He had two suits pending, one in respect of his claim for money pending in the Court at Asansole and the other was a mortgage suit. Besides the order that was passed by the Court was not distributing rateably the assets in its hands between the several decree-holders but direction was given how the assets which were at that time fully sufficient to satisfy the claims had to be applied. This order may be said to have been passed under O. XXI, r. 52. By that order the Court indicated how the money had to be paid between the different claimants, namely, fixed the question of priority between the decree-holders and any other person such as the appellant in this case, "claiming to be interested in such property by virtue of any assignment, attachment or otherwise." In my opinion the order passed under O. XXI, r. 52, is not an administrative order but a judicial order which is binding upon the parties concerned. The appellant, therefore, cannot now complain that the order that was passed by the Court was bad.

The next point which has been put forward by the learned Judge in support of his finding is that by the appellant's own conduct his decree was not fully satisfied and, therefore, he cannot claim any damage from the respondents. As I have observed the appellant obtained his decree on the 12th December 1921. On the 14th December he withdrew the sum of Rs. 12,000 leaving about Rs. 1,400 due on his decree. On the 6th January 1922 one Jangilal obtained a decree and attached Rs. 8,000 that was left in the hands of the Court to satisfy the appellant's decree and withdrew Rs. 1,482 out of that sum. On the 7th February, 1922, the appellant withdrew the balance Rs. 6517 after he had obtained a decree in the money suit. But he could have withdrawn the full amount of his decree in the mortgage suit out of Rs. 20,000 which was then in the hands of the Court. There was no justification for his not having withdrawn the entire amount of his decree. In my opinion, the view taken by the lower Court on this point is right.

Then again the decree that is passed against defendant No. 2 makes him liable for any amount that he may have unlawfully appropriated. It is difficult to hold that the respondent has unlawfully appropriated money which ought to have gone to the appellant. It is said that because the appellant as mortgagee had prior right over the sale proceeds, therefore the act of the respondent to pay himself out of the sale proceeds before the appellant's claim was fully satisfied was bad. As I have observed, what the respondent did was under the order of the Court and in exercise of his legal right and there is no reason to suppose that he acted in any way unlawfully or wrongfully so as to give a cause of action to the appellant against him. I may mention in conclusion that the learned Subordinate Judge who passed the order under appeal as well as the decree in the mortgage suit is of opinion that it was by misrepresentation that the decree was passed. On the merits I do not think that there is any case for the appellant.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at three gold mohurs.

Mr. B. D. Kureshi and Lala Sardha Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen in the following circumstances:—

One Musammât Bhagwani on the 1st December 1917 applied for partition of her husband's land, the application being made in the Court of the Revenue Assistant at Delhi who sanctioned a mode of partition in February, 1918. An appeal was filed by Musammât Bhagwani's opponents to the Chief Commissioner, Delhi, who directed the Revenue Assistant to proceed under section 117 of the Land Revenue Act. Musammât Bhagwani thereupon filed a regular plaint specifically mentioning that this had been made under section 117 of the Land Revenue Act, and the Revenue Officer proceeded to dispose of the point sitting as a Civil Court, the question involved being one as to title. The Revenue Officer's decision resulted in the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit who thereupon preferred an appeal to the District Court at Delhi. An objection was taken to the jurisdiction of that Court by the respondent, it being contended that having regard to the provisions of section 117 (2) of the Land Revenue Act the appeal in the suit lay to the High Court. This objection was given effect to by the learned District Judge and the memorandum of appeal returned for presentation to this Court on the 10th February 1920. The appeal was filed here on the 20th February 1920.

Mr. Shamair Chand for the respondents contends that the appeal was not presented in this Court within time. In our opinion the time taken by the appellant in filing this appeal in this Court, namely ten days, was reasonable and we, therefore, overrule the objection. As to the appeal itself the law is perfectly clear and Sadda Singh v. Kirpala (1) is in point. An appeal from an order passed by a Revenue Officer acting under section 117 (2) would lie to the District Judge or to the High Court according to the value of the subject-matter. In the present case the value is Rs. 1,500 and the appeal was, therefore, rightly presented in the Court of the District Judge. We, therefore, accept this appeal and setting aside the order of the learned District Judge returning the memorandum of appeal, direct that Court to receive the said memorandum of appeal and to dispose of the case in accordance with law. The memorandum of appeal will be returned to the appellant for presentation in the Court of the District Judge. Costs of this Court will follow the event.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 30th of August 1921.

Messrs. Jang Bahadur Lal and Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Sir, Tej Bahadur Sapru, Messrs. Haribans Sahai and S. S. Sastry, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this Court was the defendant No. 1 in the Court below. He purchased on the 17th of January 1903 a four annas share in each of the two villages Lachhmipur and Harnampur and one dhur area land out of plot No 95 in the village of Belaura for a consideration of Rs. 25,100. The vendor was one Ganga Dayal Naik. The pedigree of the family will be found at page 1 of the plaint and is as follows:—

The plaintiffs who are sons of Ganga Dayal's brother Dal Bahadur brought the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, to have the sale set aside. The suit was instituted on the 14th of January 1920, that is to say, just two days less than twelve years after the sale. Various grounds were taken to impeach the sale. The Court below set aside the sale on two grounds. It held that the registration of the deed was illegal and no title passed to the appellant. It also held that the property was worth at least Rs. 30,000 and the sale of it by the managing member of the family for Rs. 25,100 was not justified.

These are the two points which have been controverted in this appeal and we need not try any other question that was before the Court below.

The question of registration arises in this way. The property of Belaura was a very insignificant one. One dhur is equal to 1/400th part of a briga. The argument that found favour with the Court below on this question was that the property being so insignificant neither party intended that any transfer of title to it should take place. It was, owing to the inclusion of this property in the sale-deed that the deed became registerable by the Sub-Registrar of Gorakhpur. If this property had been excluded the Sub-Registrar of Maharajganj alone would have had the jurisdiction to register the document.

The fact that at the date of sale the property in plot No. 95 in Belaura belonged to Ganga Dayal has not been disputed. Indeed, the copies of the village records filed do go to show that the vendor had title to this property. It is, however, urged that the vendee never wanted this property and it is pointed out that he never asked the Revenue Court to enter his name with respect to it and further, that he never took possession of the property. The village records, the copies of which are to be found at pages 85 and 91 of the printed record go to show that in spite of the transfer, the name of the transferor Ganga Dayal continued to be recorded over the land in Belaura and it was actually held by a tenant. The evidence of the appellant's son Ganesh Prasad does indicate that the vendee never cared to take possession over the property, although Ganesh Prasad insists on stating that he is in possession of the property and gets one anna as the rent for it. The admitted fact, therefore, is that in spite of the transfer, the vendee never took possession of it. On the other hand, there are circumstances to show that the vendor believed that the property had been sold and that he had no longer any title left to it. No direct evidence has been adduced to show what was the exact amount of share held by Ganga Dayal and his family in Belaura at the date of the sale. But copies of the decrees that were passed against the family and which record the properties mortgaged show (see pages 42 and 43 of the printed record) that a 4 pies share was held by the family in Belaura. Five years after the sale on the 27th of August 1913 Ganga Dayal sold the property in this village to one Chandi Prasad Pande. The sale-deed is printed at page 81 of the record. He described the property possessed by him as "a 4-pies share less by a fraction." It is quite within the range of probabilities that the fraction which he deducted out of the property which he wanted to sell was the fraction represented by the one dhur land which he had already sold to the appellant. This conduct on the part of Ganga Dayal goes to show that at least, so far as he is concerned, he never regarded himself as the owner of one dhur land which he had sold. Further, it appears that Ganga Dayal as a certificated guardian of his nephews, the plaintiffs in the suit, made an application to the District Judge for permission to sell the property, now in suit, in order to pay off certain debts of the family. In the application that was presented to the Court (Exhibit K. printed at page 65) he expressly mentioned the one dhur land in plot No. 95 situate in Belaura as one of the items of property he intended to sell. In the draft sale-deed that was presented to the District Judge for his approval the plot No. 95 was again specifically mentioned. It is clear, therefore, that Ganga Dayal did mean to transfer this property and took the trouble of obtaining the sanction of the District Judge for the transfer. On the question of fact, therefore, our finding is that the plot No. 95, a portion of which was sold by the sale-deed in suit, was intended by Ganga Dayal to be sold and was meant to be purchased by the appellant although it is a fact that after the purchase the appellant did not care to take possession of the property.

It has been urged that as a matter of fact neither the vendor nor the vendee wanted to transfer and purchase this property of Belaura and it was included in the sale-deed for the sole purpose of getting the deed registered by the Sub-Registrar of Gorakhpur. In view of our finding on the question of fact, this question does not really arise. But the question has been very well threshed out before this Court and we owe it to the learned Counsel for the respondents and to the Court below to discuss it.

The learned Counsel for the respondent has taken his stand on two Privy Council judgments, viz.: Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Hari Das Debi (1) and the case of Muthra Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhury (2). As we understand him, he has argued that the Court has to look to the intention of the parties and where neither of the parties intended that the transfer of a certain property should take place the inclusion of that property in the deed would not give jurisdiction to the Sub-Registrar to register the document. The cases cited must be taken to have been decided only with reference to the particular facts dealt with by them.

DURGAPRASAD V. TAMRSHIVAR IRASAD.

We need hardly mention that a case is an authority only for what is decided and is no authority for what may seem to follow from the reasonings adopted in the case. In the case of Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Hari Kasi Deb (1) the property which was in question was a house No. 25 in Gurudas Street in Calcutta. It was found as a fact that there was no house in existence within the ambit of that street. It followed that it was never intended that any such property should pass to the transferee. Their Lordships of the Privy Council said that there were two ways of looking at the thing, first, the property was non-existent, and secondly the entry was a fictitious one. In either view the transaction was entered into only to commit a fraud on the Registration Law, that is to say to give jurisdiction to an officer who would not otherwise possess jurisdiction. There can be no doubt that their Lordships used the following language:—

"Their Lordships hold that this parcel is in fact a fictitious entry, and represents no property that the mortgagor possessed or intended to mortgage, or that the mortgagee intended to form part of his security."

We are of opinion that it is not open to contention that the words "the mortgagor intended to mortgage or that the mortgagee intended to form part of his security" can be taken out of the rest of the context and can be read as an independent dictum for guidance of the subordinate Courts. In our opinion the words are inseparable from the words "Their Lordships hold that this parcel is in fact a fictitious entry." In the latter case, the finding was that the property of one cowrie share in the village of Kolhua was the property owing to which the Sub-Registrar of Muzaffarpur had the jurisdiction to register the deed. It was found as a fact that the transferor did not possess any such property. Evidence was adduced to show that he did, and one witness was examined who said that he had sold it by an unregistered document. But it was found that there was no real delivery of the property. Their Lordships, therefore, laid down their law on the foundation of the fact that the mortgagor did not possess any such property and consequently it was never the intention of the parties that the mortgagor should offer it as security to the mortgagee and the latter should hold it as security for his money. The language that was used in connection with this case must be read with the facts involved in it.

In the case before us we have got the fact that the property entered in the deed and which gave jurisdiction to the Sub-Registrar of Gorakhpur to register did exist. We have the fact that it did belong to the vendor. Even if we concede for the sake of argument (we are really considering a case based not on the facts found by us but on the facts as put by the learned Counsel for the respondent) that this property of Belaua was entered into the deed simply for the sake of registration, we do not think that fact would not give the Sub-Registrar of Gorakhpur jurisdiction to register the deed. The appellant was purchasing two big items of property. If the parties found that by selling also a small bit of property, which it was not otherwise intended to be sold, they would have the convenience of avoiding the journey to Maharajganj, I do not see why the inclusion of that property should be treated as an act done only to commit fraud on the Law of Registration. Suppose the journey to Maharajganj costs the party a sum of Rs. 20. Suppose again the property sold is worth Rs. 10. By adding a property worth Rs. 10 and selling it, bona fide, the parties avoid a journey to Maharajganj at a cost of Rs. 20. Why should not the vendor be allowed to say that he has sold the property and why should not the vendee be allowed to say that he has purchased the property? The title to the property passes by the registration of the deed and the vendee becomes the owner of the property for the simple reason that the vendor was the owner of it and has chosen to sign a sale-deed with respect to it and to have it registered.

Coming to authority again, no case has been cited to us which can be taken as being on all fours with the case before us. In this Court two learned Judges held in the case of Pahladi Lal v. Larati, (3) that where a property included in a deed of mortgage did exist, the fact that the mortgagor had no title to the property did not vitiate the registration, if the mortgagee was not aware of the want of title in the mortgagor and was not colluding with him in the inclusion of the property to procure registration. This case too is not on all fours with the case before us. But it lays down at least this much that where a transaction is a bona fide one, the inclusion of a property for the sake of obtaining the registration of a document at a particular place will not oust the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar to register the document. We hold, therefore that the sale-deed was perfectly valid and did convey title to the appellant.

Coming to the second point. At the date of the sale the family consisted mainly of four persons, namely, the vendor, Ganga Dayal, his father Bhola Naik who was a lunatic and the plaintiffs respondents who were minors. There were two decrees for large sums of money passed against the family on foot of two mortgages executed by Ganga Dayal's grandfather Harnam Naik. The total amount due on the two decrees went up to Rs 35,000. Ganga Dayal, the only male adult, in the family who was in a position to enter into any transaction on behalf of it, has been found by the Court below to have acted to the best of his capabilities. He raised small sums of money from time to time out of the property and put off the evil day of sale by small payments. He got himself appointed guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act of 1890 of his minor nephews, the plaintiffs. He approached the learned District Judge of Gorakhpur from time to time and represented how the state of affairs was, and sought his permission as the guardian of his nephews and as a manager of his lunatic father's property to transfer family property, to avoid an auction sale of it and consequent loss. The copies of decrees which have been printed show that shares in no less than six villages had been mortgaged (see Exhibit C at pages 41-43). We find that he approached the learned District Judge first on the 16th of December, 1905 by his application, printed at page 47 of the record. By an order, he was appointed the manager of his father's property. Then on the 13th of July 1906 he approached the District Judge and obtained permission to raise money by sale or by mortgage with possession of a part of the family property. The order is at page 49 of the printed record. The applications, printed at pages 51, 53, 59 and 61 show how he succeeded in obtaining the good offices of the learned District Judge for staying the execution sale which was pending before the revenue authorities, (possibly the decree had been transferred to the Collector because the property was ancestral). We have already mentioned that the learned Subordinate Judge gives Ganga Dayal full credit for doing his best in the interests of the family. On the 30th of July 1907 Ganga Dayal approached the District Judge with a definite proposal for transfer. I may mention that the order of the learned District Judge dated the 13th of July 1906 was not very definite. On the 30th of July 1907 Ganga Dayal definitely proposed that he should be permitted to sell the shares now in suit in the villages of Lachhmipur and Harnampur to one Babu Bhagwati Prasad for Rs 21,245 and that he might be permitted to mortgage a portion of the remaining family property, namely, 4-annas share in the village Sarpataha to raise a sum of Rs 5,000 to pay off the decrees. It appears that at that date, the two sums of Rs 21,000 and Rs 5,000 would have sufficed to pay off the two decrees. The order dated the 31st of July 1907 of the learned District Judge shows how diligently Ganga Dayal had been acting. The learned Judge recites that the amount of the decrees was originally between Rs 35 and Rs 36,000 but Ganga Dayal had been able to reduce it by occasional payments to a sum of Rs 26,000. The learned Judge sanctioned the sale of 4-annas share in the two villages in suit and an usufructuary mortgage of another portion of the property. But it appears that Bhagwati Prasad backed out of the transaction and the result was that the family property was put up for sale. At page 63 of the record is printed how the bids went before the Revenue Officer. Bhagwati Prasad evidently preferred to take his chance to purchase the property at an auction-sale to a purchase by private treaty. With respect to 4-annas share in Harnampur he offered Rs. 11,200 but the decree-holder outbid him by offering Rs. 100 more. Similarly in respect of the other property the decree-holder offered Rs. 11,100 as against Rs. 11,000 offered by Bhagwati Prasad. Thus, we find that at an open auction-sale the two properties fetched only the sum of Rs. 22,400. This sale took place on the 20th of December 1907. To save the property Ganga Dayal had to pay within the 30 days of sale not only the decretal amounts but also five per cent over the purchase-money. He, it appears, had been able to persuade the appellant to pay Rs. 25,100 for the two shares in the villages of Lachhmipur and Harnampur inclusive of one dhur area in village Belaura. He had also been able to persuade the appellant to advance a sum of Rs. 4,500 on a simple mortgage over the share in the village of Sarpataha. The learned District Judge approved of this proposal and a draft sale-deed was filed and approved. The sale-deed was eventually executed and on the 18th of January 1908 the entire amount of Rs. 29,600 was paid into the treasury and the sale was set aside.

It has been urged that although Ganga Dayal may have done his best in the interests of the family he might have done better and if he had used more discretion he might have procured Rs. 30,000 at least for the property. It is urged that his failure to obtain the best value for the family property vitiates the sale and the Court below was right in setting it aside.

It is conceded that although the permission of the District Judge was obtained by Ganga Dayal for the transactions in which he entered, Ganga Dayal could not validly be appointed a guardian of his minor nephews who were living jointly with him and that, therefore, the permission which was obtained from the District Judge did not stand good in favour of the appellant. This point having been conceded by the learned Counsel for the appellant we do not wish to express any opinion over it. Assuming, however, that the learned Judge's permission went for nothing, the proceedings show at least this that, it was impossible to obtain a better value at the time than was really obtained. We must assume the learned Judge did his duty and he made an enquiry in the interests of the minors and the lunatic as to the value of the property and sanctioned the transaction only when he found that it was beneficial to their interests. Besides this presumption of law we have got the positive evidence of a learned Vakil of Gorakhpur who says that the then Munsif of Gorakhpur was entrusted with an enquiry into the application submitted before the District Judge. As we have said, the orders of the learned District Judge are very good evidence that the value paid at the time was a very proper value.

Coming to the evidence adduced in the Court below by the parties we find that there is no documentary evidence whatsoever to show what value the properties in the two villages of Lachhmipur and Harnampur could fetch at the time. There is no sale-deed. There is no evidence of income from the property except a certain vague statement on the part of the plaintiff No. 1. That statement is that one bigha of Lachhmipur could be let at Rs. 2-4 to Rs. 2-8 per annum. If this be the annual rent the price of the land could not be very high. The learned Subordinate Judge has been mainly, if not wholly, influenced by the fact that he misread the proceedings before the Revenue Officer at the auction-sale. It appears that after a 4-annas share of Harnampur had been sold, a one-anna share out of the 4-annas share of Lachhmipur was offered for being bid for, but no bids were made. The result was that the entire 4-annas share of Lachhmipur had to be put up. The learned Subordinate Judge thought that the price fetched, namely, Rs. 11,100, for Lachhmipur was the price paid for a one-anna share and not for the entire 4-annas share. We are perfectly sure that if he had correctly read this document he would have come to a different conclusion altogether.

We have already said there is no documentary evidence by which we can judge the market value either at the date of the sale or at the date of the suit of the properties in question.

Coming to oral evidence, we have read the whole of it and we find it impossible to be guided by it. On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent the evidence of no less than eight persons has been printed. One of these Raj Bahadur Lal is a patwari, but he is not the patwari of any of the villages in question. He said that he was the patwari of two adjoining villages. In our opinion no sufficient reason having been shown why the patwari of the villages in suit could not be found it is impossible to rely and act upon the statement of Raj Bahadur. He says that the lands of Lachhmipur could be sold at the date when he was examined at Rs 100 per bigha and the lands at Harnampur at Rs 125 per bigha. It does not appear whether he was speaking of the cultivated land or the average value of the land. The 4-annas share sold would include lands actually under cultivation, lands which could be brought under cultivation by spending money and labour, and lands which would be absolutely unreclaimable at any expense. The evidence of the appellant's son Ganesh Prasad would go to show that there are huge areas in both the villages which are not cultivated and which are, therefore, not capable of yielding any income. Of the 8 witnesses examined by the plaintiffs the plaintiff No 1 states that the lands in Harnampur would fetch Rs. 175 to Rs. 200 per bigha and the lands in Lachhmipur would fetch Rs. 150 per bigha. The witness Sheo Shankar Dube would not go so far as that. He does not belong to either of the two villages and his means of knowledge are extremely doubtful. He says that he never purchased any share in the two villages and that within the last 20 years, so far as he knew, no shares in those villages had been sold. The witness Dhanraj Rai brought a sale-deed which has been proved by Ram Krupal and which related to an entirely different village of Aligarh. He does not say anything about the valuation of the lands in suit. The witnesses Ramphal Panday and Mahipat do not speak anything on the value of the lands in the two villages in question. We have already commented on the statement of Raj Bahadur Lal. The witness Laji Sahai does not speak on the point.

The appellant has examined his son to show under what circumstances the property was purchased and what value was paid for which property and why. The witness Jadunath Panday says that the price was fixed at Rs. 34 or Rs 35 per bigha when the purchase was made. This price was evidently for all the lands whether good, bad or indifferent, taken as a whole.

The sale-deed having been executed under the circumstances already described, it lay heavily on the plaintiffs to prove that their uncle, who did so much for them, could obtain much better value than he did obtain. We are of opinion that it has not been established that the price paid, namely, Rs. 25,100, was in any way inadequate price for the property at the time of the sale.

The result is that the appeal succeeds and it is hereby allowed, and the suit of the respondents Tameshwar Prasad and Rameshwar Prasad is dismissed with costs throughout. The costs in this Court will include Counsel's fees on the higher scale.

There is a cross-objection on the part of the respondents Nos 1 and 2 but on it no Court-fee was paid. A sum of Rs. 800 was demanded as Court-fee. The respondents never said they would pay the Court-fee and the cross-objection might be rejected on that account. The learned Counsel for the appellant states that he was served with a copy of the cross-objection. We find on the record that on the 10th of January 1922 Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal, one of the learned

DOO DOO MEAH v. KASIM ALI.

Counsel for the appellant was served with a copy of the cross-objection. He was right, therefore, in claiming the costs of the cross-objection. The cross-objection is being rejected because no Court-fee has been paid, but the costs due on the cross-objection will be paid by the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 to the appellant. The costs will include fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal the plaintiffs seek to recover possession of certain lands from the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 under the following circumstances:

They allege that they bought the lands from defendants Nos 4, 5 and 6, defendant No. 4 being the wife of plaintiff No. 1, defendants Nos. 5 and 6 being respectively the mother and aunt of plaintiff No. 2, who had acquired the property on partition, it being part of the property of one Fazar Ali.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 claim to be in possession under a perpetual lease granted to them by the 3rd defendant on the 30th March, 1906. At this time the 3rd defendant was a minor; he gave his own age in 1922 as 29, which would have made him 13 in 1906, the date of the lease and the 1st defendant admits that he was only 15 or 16 at the time.

Such being the case the contract of lease was not voidable but void and the defendants are in under a void lease. Mohori Biri v. Dharmodas Ghose (1), Dattaram Gaurindabhar Guzar v. Vinayak Balkrishna Agashe (2), and the rightful owner could eject them at any time. Are the plaintiffs the rightful owners? They claim through the 4th, 5th and 6th defendants, who themselves claim through the 3rd defendant as manager. All these defendants make common cause with the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' case is that the land belonged originally to one Fazar Ali who died about 20 years ago leaving defendants Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6 and another daughter as heirs. Defendant No. 3 managed the estate though a minor and admittedly leased out this portion. When defendants Nos 4 to 6 came, of age in 1910-11, there was a division of the inheritance and this portion of it fell to defendants Nos 4, 5 and 6. This partition is testified to by Sultan, the headman and Shor Ali, his uncle, neither of whom is related to the plaintiffs and both of whom seem to be independent witnesses, and I accept their evidence.

Defendants Nos 4, 5 and 6 sold the lands in suit by a duly registered deed of sale to the plaintiffs who have brought this suit. This sale-deed was attacked in argument, but the vendors themselves do not dispute it and they are the only persons concerned. Defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6 might just as well have been joined as plaintiffs, and in my opinion the attacks are irrelevant.

The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court was correct in giving the plaintiffs a declaration and moreover against this portion of the judgment, there has been no cross-appeal; such being the case, I see no answer to their claim for possession, the defendants being under a void lease, and the defendants must vacate. JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal under the Letters Patent from a decree of a learned Judge of this Court setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismissing the suit in toto.

The plaintiff's allegations were that the plots in suit were the tenancies of one Ghisa, deceased. The plaintiff alleged to be an heir of Ghisa and as having been in joint cultivation with him over these plots. It was stated that on the 4th February 1919 the lambardar had recognized the plaintiff as the tenant of these plots and had indeed attested this fact before the kanungo, that the plaintiff was in possession of these fields by cultivation in the year 1326F. that in kharif 1327 Fasli he actually sowed some crops but that in March 1920 the defendants wrongfully dispossessed the plaintiff by cutting away the standing crops. It is necessary to enumerate the reliefs which were claimed by the plaintiff in his plaint. They are as follows:—

(1) Rs. 100 as the value of the crops illegally cut by the defendants.

(2) Ejectment of the defendants and a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff.

(3) A perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from ever interfering in future with the plaintiff's possession of the plots in dispute.

The defendant Sita Ram pleaded that he was holding the plots under a registered kabuliyat, dated the 13th February 1919, and that the plaintiff had no right to maintain the suit against him. It was also pleaded that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain this claim which was exclusively cognisable by the Revenue Court.

The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the suit should have been filed in the Revenue Court and ordered that the plaint be returned for presentation to the proper Court. An appeal was preferred to the District Judge who came to the conclusion that the suit had been rightly instituted in the OHET RAM v. SITA RAM.

Civil Court. Instead of, however, remanding the case for disposal on the merits he proceeded under sections 136 and 197 of the Tenancy Act and ultimately passed a decree for Rs. 80 as damages for possession of the plots and for an injunction against the defendants from interference in future with the plaintiff's possession.

The defendants preferred an appeal to this Court which has been allowed. We may note that before the learned Judge it was never urged that no appeal lay to him. The learned Judge's attention was not drawn to this question and naturally there is no adjudication on this point. The point also is not quite a clear one. This being a Letters Patent appeal we have refused the point to be raised for the first time under the Letters Patent.

We must therefore assume that the learned District Judge had passed a decree which was duly appealed against to this Court.

The learned Judge of this Court after doubting whether the District Judge was right in holding that the suit was cognizable by the Civil Court has gone on to remark that he does "not, however, intend to decide this case on the point of jurisdiction" i. e., he has assumed that the suit had been rightly instituted in the Civil Court and the learned District Judge was properly seized of the appeal and was fully justified in disposing of it on the merits.

We may note here that in our opinion there can be no doubt that the plaint as drafted and the claim as brought could only have been brought in the Civil Court. It is apparent that no perpetual injunction could ever have been granted by the Revenue Court. It is clear also that the claim was one for damages against a trespasser and for the recovery of possession against him and that the landlord was not made a party to these proceedings. The suit really was at the very best one between the rival claimants and should have been disposed of by the Civil Court. The learned Judge, however, has dismissed the suit on the following ground. The plaintiff claims to hold this land under an oral agreement of tenancy whereas the defendants relied upon a registered lease executed by the zemindars. On the date when the suit was instituted, the plaintiff admittedly was out of possession and had in the previous month been forcibly dispossessed by the defendants. The learned Judge, therefore, thought that in a case of this kind the plaintiff had failed to prove that he had a better title than the defendant, and that, therefore, the plaintiff could not be given a decree for possession. The learned Judge further thought that it followed from that conclusion that the plaintiff could not even get a decree for damages for the crops which he had sown and which had been wrongfully cut by the defendants.

It is impossible for the Civil Court to determine the exact nature of the tenancy, but it cannot be disputed that when the plaintiff was put in possession of the plots by the lambardar who collected rents from him he became at the very least a non-occupancy tenant. A non-occupancy tenant is entitled to hold on and sow crops so long as he is not duly ejected. Up to March 1920 the plaintiff was in occupation of the plots and had actually sown crops in the field No. 3404. The learned District Judge has found distinctly that the crops which had been cut by the defendants were the crops belonging to the plaintiff which he himself had sown. He has also found that even subsequent to the registered lease of the 13th February 1919 granted in favour of the defendant No. 1, the lambardar had received rents from the plaintiff on account of the plots in question. It is, therefore, clear that in March 1920 the plaintiff certainly had a right to retain possession of the plots until he was duly ejected by the landlord. A Revenue Court could not have entertained a suit for ejectment with effect from March 1920. Such a suit could under section 80 of the Agra Tenancy Act have been filed only between the 30th of June and the 1st of October following. The plaintiff however, was forcibly dispossessed by the defendants in the middle of the agricultural year at a time when the plaintiff's crops were standing. Had the plaintiff's dispossession been effected by the landlord himself the question as to whether the plaintiff should be restored possession, or not under the proviso to section 79 would then have arisen. As matters stand, however, the landlord did not give possession to the defendants and the plaintiff was not dispossessed by the landlord, but by the defendants. It is the defendants who cut away the crops and who apparently have appropriated these crops and it is against the defendants that the plaintiff seeks relief. It is, therefore, difficult to hold under the circumstances of this case that the dispossession complained of was a dispossession by the lambardar.

Our attention has been drawn by the learned Counsel for the defendants to three cases of this Court and it has been contended that inasmuch as the defendants were claiming title under a registered lease granted by the zemindar the dispossession by them must be deemed to have been the dispossession by the landlord. The first case relied upon is that of Ram Lal v. Chuni Lal (1). It will be noticed, however, that in that case although the heir of the original tenant had got her name recorded yet neither she nor her sub-tenants who claimed under her had ever been in actual possession of the holding.

In the same way in the case of Sokhai v. Ram Prasad (2), it was the landlord who had let out the land in the occupation of a tenant to a third party. The learned Judge understood the finding of the lower Appellate Court to be that if the plaintiff was ever in possession he was dispossessed by the landholder who thereafter let the land to the defendant.

Similarly in the case of Balbhaddar Chaube v. Somarau Rai (3) a learned Judge of this Court had distinctly held that in that case the dispossession of the plaintiff was a dispossession by the zemindar which was manifest from the fact that in the plaint it was stated that the zemindar brought suits for rent against some tenants holding the plots in question and obtained decrees and that the plaintiff himself regarded this as amounting to his dispossession. Furthermore in that case the relief claimed by the plaintiff was not only against the principal defendant but also against the zemindars who were impleaded.

It will, therefore, be apparent that in all the three cases the zemindar had been understood to have actually dispossessed the occupying tenant and then let the land to a third person. In the present case, on the other hand, the learned District Judge was of opinion that, in spite of the registered lease granted to the defendant, the lambardar acknowledged the plaintiff as the tenant, and, in fact, realised the rents from him. It is also clear that it was not till more than a year after that registered lease that the defendants purported to take possession of the field, and that they tried to do this in the middle of the agricultural year at a time when the plaintiff's crops were standing. The defendants must be deemed to have, therefore, forcibly taken possession of the plots, and the dispossession of the plaintiff cannot be deemed to be an ejectment by the zemindars. The zemindars are not made parties to the suit and the defendants are merely trespassers. Even the learned Judge of this Court at the end of his judgment remarked that the arguments before him proceeded on the basis that this was a purely civil suit properly instituted in the Civil Court. Under the circumstances the principle underlying the cases referred to cannot apply to this case. Treating the suit as a suit against trespassers it is apparent that the suit was maintainable. We may also note that the suit was instituted within six months of the plaintiff's dispossession and furthermore the matter went up in appeal before the learned District Judge, who having all the materials on the record proceeded under sections 196 and 197 to dispose of the matter finally. Under the circumstances the question as to which was the proper forum for the suit has lost its import.

ance. The case must, therefore, be disposed of on its actual merits.

It has been contended on behalf of the defendant that the plaintiff had no right to retain an absolute possession of these plots and that in view of the provisions of section 50 of the Indian Registration Act the registered lease, though subsequent to the oral lease, must have priority. It is urged that at the time when the suit was brought the plaintiff was not in possession, and that inasmuch as the registered document has priority over all unregistered documents the plaintiff has not a better title, and, therefore, his claim for possession must be dismissed.

We are unable to accede to this contention. In the first place section 50 of the Indian Registration Act (XVI of 1908) does not apply to leases exempted under the proviso to sub-section (1) of section 17 of that Act. A reference to the notification published in the U. P. Gazette, dated the 3rd December 1885, shows that agricultural leases have been exempted from the operation of section 17. It would follow, therefore, that section 50 also would be inapplicable to such agricultural leases. The lease in favour of the defendants is not a lease of proprietary interest but is a mere agricultural lease though it purports to be in perpetuity. Furthermore on the date when the defendants took possession of the field they knew that the plaintiff was in possession and that his crops were actually standing on the land. They, therefore, had clear notice of the plaintiff's oral tenancy, if not of the fact that it had been attested before the kanungo. Under all these circumstances it is impossible to hold that the registered document superseded the tenancy of the plaintiff. The plaintiff even if he was a mere non-occupancy tenant at any rate had a right to remain in possession till duly evicted. The mere fact that a registered document was executed in favour of the defendants did not ipso facto put an end to his tenancy or extinguish his right. We are, therefore, of opinion that on the date of dispossession i.e., March 1920, he had a right to remain in possession and the defendants had no right to take forcible possession of his lands. The plaintiff accordingly would be entitled to be restored to possession, as against the defendants. The learned Counsel for the defendants-respondents has as a last resort contended that the plaintiff being at best a mere non-occupancy tenant had no right to be restored to possession in view of the provisions of section 79 of the Agra Tenancy Act. When we have held that this is not a case of dispossession by the landlord but of a dispossession by trespassers section 79 of the Agra Tenancy Act does not apply. In any view of the matter the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree for compensation for the crops forcibly cut away by the defendants.

As regards the relief for injunction we are of opinion that this should not be granted in the absolute terms asked for. It is clear that the defendants hold a registered lease from the zemindar and he may have the right to get the plaintiff ejected in the ordinary way from the holding and to put the defendants in possession. A perpetual injunction, therefore, is out of the question.

We accordingly allow this appeal and setting aside the decree of the learned Judge of this Court, modify the decree of the learned District Judge by directing that the decree for possession and for injunction will hold good till such time as the plaintiff is ejected in due course of law. The rest of the decree of the District Judge will stand confirmed. The plaintiff will get his costs here and hitherto from the defendants including cost in this Court on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Execution of decrees—Inquiry into validity of decree.

Every order or judgment, however erroneous, is good until discharged or declared inoperative. An enquiry into the validity of a decree is outside the functions of an Executing Court subject to the proviso that there is a valid decree in existence which can be executed [p. 255, col. 2].

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Nadia, dated the 8th of May 1922.

Babu Tarakeswar Pal Choudhuri, for the Appellants.

Babus Sarat Chandra Choudhuri and
Indu Bhusan Ray, for the Respondents.JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Nadia, disallowing objections filed by the judgment-debtors in an execution case under section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

A suit in ejectment had been brought against the owners of certain properties represented by one Charu Chandra Ganguli, the common manager appointed under section 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The suit was eventually compromised and decreed accordingly on the 4th February 1921. Upon execution being taken out, objection was taken by the judgment-debtors that the decree could not be executed because Charu Chunder Ganguli did not represent the estate on the date of decree and also because the leave of the District Judge was not obtained for the compromise.

On behalf of the decree-holders a preliminary objection was raised in the Court below that the application was not maintainable under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, in the execution stage the contention being that a separate suit might lie for the purpose of questioning the validity of the decree, but that the Executing Court could not go behind the decree. The learned Subordinate

Judge on a consideration of the authorities held that the objections could not be determined in an execution proceeding, and that only those questions which would render a decree void ab initio, so as to affect the jurisdiction of the Court, could be gone into. He accordingly upheld the preliminary objection.It has been urged on behalf of the appellants that the learned Subordinate Judge erred in so deciding, and that if the decree was a nullity, as it is maintained it was, the Executing Court was entitled to go behind it and to refuse to execute it. In support of this view reference has been made to the cases of Narendra Bahadur Chand v. Gopal Sah (1), and Jungli Lall v. Laddu Ram Marwar (2). Those cases are however distinguishable from the present one inasmuch as in both instances the decree was held to be a nullity by reason of the fact that one of the judgment-debtors had died and his representatives had not been brought on the record so as to render the decree incapable of execution. That however is not the position here. The point whether an Executing Court can question the validity of a decree was considered in the case of Kalipada Sirkar v. Harimohan Dalal (3), and the view taken was that every order or judgment, however erroneous, is good until discharged, or declared inoperative, and that the Executing Court cannot inquire into the validity, or propriety of the decree. It was pointed out by Mookerjee, J., that a proceeding to enforce a judgment is collateral to the judgment and that therefore no enquiry into its regularity, or validity can be permitted in such a proceeding. At the same time it may be conceded that the proposition, that an enquiry into the validity of a decree is outside the functions of an Executing Court, is subject to the proviso that there is a valid decree in existence which can be executed. It cannot be said in this instance that there was not a valid decree, or that it was incapable of execution. The common manager was not dead, and the decree was obviously capable of execution. The only objections taken were :

(1) That Charu Chandra Ganguly had ceased to be the common manager at the date of the compromise decree and

(2) That under the law the common manager had to obtain the permission of the District Judge to the compromise, and that he had failed to do so.

In our judgment these matters were outside the province of the Execution Court and the learned Subordinate Judge was right in the view taken by him, and in giving effect to the preliminary objection.

Coming to the merits of the case it is argued that Charu Chandra Ganguly did not represent the estate at the date of decree. Two orders of the District Judge have been placed before us. One is dated the 3rd May 1919 and contains a direction that Charu Chandra Ganguly should make over charge to one Dwijraj one of the estate amlas, who was to look into the former's accounts and himself furnish security for Rs. 1,000, within two months. Probably what was in prospect at that time was that Dwijraj should be appointed as common manager in place of Charu Chandra Ganguly, but however that may be there is nothing in that order from which it can be said that Charu Chandra Ganguly was thereby discharged, it was at most a step preparatory to his discharge contemplated in the future. There is nothing to show even that any action was taken upon that order by the persons concerned, and matters therefore remained in that position up to the compromise decree on the 4th February 1921. So far there is nothing to show that Charu Chandra Ganguly could not represent the defendants on that date as common manager. Subsequently, however, on the 14th September 1921, another order was passed by the District Judge. He refers to the last order of 3rd May 1919, to the fact that nothing has been done under it, and that Charu Chandra Ganguly has never been properly discharged though he may have ceased to deal with the properties; and he makes a declaration that the common management should be deemed to have come to an end since the 3rd May 1919, and that date is to be treated as the dividing line between the responsibility of Charu Chandra Ganguly on the one hand and Dwijraj on the other. It is argued that this order, therefore, invalidates the decree of the previous February because in terms of the order Charu Chandra is to be taken as having ceased to be common manager in 1919, and, therefore, could not properly be said to represent the defendants at the time of decree. In my opinion this argument can not be supported, because in a matter of this kind I think that it has to be determined by the position at the time of the decree itself, and that that cannot for the present purpose be said to be affected by the subsequent order of September, which was not directed to the matter of the decree at all.

Then it is argued that the permission of the District Judge was not given to the compromise. In point of fact permission was given, but upon a petition not of Charu Chandra but of Dwijraj, dated 19th January 1921. The whole matter was before the Court, the learned Judge applied his mind to it, and passed the order. The evidence moreover shows, and there is no reason to disbelieve it, that Srinath Chatterjee, the principal malik among the judgment-debtors, himself took an active part in effecting the compromise. In the circumstances I do not think it can be said that the permission which was actually granted is now to be treated as invalid because the application was made in the name of Dwijraj instead of Charu Chandra.

The appeal is dismissed, with costs. Hearing-fee two gold mohurs.

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Kamaun, dated, the 12th of April 1924.

Mr. Sarkar Bahadur Johni, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Kamaun, upholding an order of a First Class Magistrate refusing to make an order under section 488, at the instance of a woman called Musammât Kumli for the payment by one Gardiner of Rs. 15 a month for the education of a child, whom the woman alleges to be her illegitimate child by Gardiner.The narrative of the case is briefly as follows:—Musammât Kumli was engaged by Gardiner, whose wife was dead, to look after his children some time at the end of 1910 or beginning of 1911. Her husband was in jail, and was released in 1913, in about July, as the woman says. She belongs or belonged to the Dom caste. She gave birth to a child, the date as alleged by her being November the 15th, 1913. She apparently used to look after Gardiner's children during the winter months and, usually, if not always, return to her home, a village three miles outside Naini Tal, during the hot months, when the children were at Naini Tal. She left Gardiner's service in 1919, according to her own account, but more probably in the first half of 1918, as alleged by Gardiner. She at least is certainly wrong about the date because she admits that settlement was made with her at the end of 1918, admittedly also a long while after she was turned out. She says she was turned out because as Gardiner said she was now beginning to have children and she admits that not long afterwards she had a four months miscarriage. Towards the end of 1918 Gardiner paid her Rs. 300 in settlement of her claims. Four and a half years later she has lodged the present application, asking for payment of Rs. 15 a month to be made by Gardiner to some body she calls the "Rector of the school" for the education of the child. She has informed me in this Court that she is now a Roman Catholic and that the "Rector of the school" to whom her application refers is the Roman Catholic Bishop of Lucknow. Both Gardiner and the woman are agreed in asserting, whether truly or falsely, that the settlement made at the end of 1918 by the payment of Rs. 300 did not concern the child. Gardiner denies paternity and, therefore, as must follow, denies that any settlement was made for the child. He denies that he ever had or accepted responsibility for it. The woman declares that the settlement did not include the child but was a payment to herself and that Gardiner said he would be responsible for the future of the child.

The Magistrate disbelieved very much of the woman's story, and came to a definite finding that "in such surroundings it is impossible to say who may or may not have had sexual intercourse with Musammât Kumli who is a woman of loose character." In other words, he found it impossible to attribute paternity to Gardiner. He further appears to have attached some weight to the fact that if the woman got Rs. 300 "it is fairly obvious that this must have been done to prevent her making any sort of claim whatever again for maintenance." The learned Sessions Judge held:

(a) that section 488 does not provide for education expenses,

(b) that the payment of Rs. 300 "appears to have satisfied all Musammam Kumli's claims,"

(c) that the payment of Rs. 300 and the letters filed "strongly support her allegation of intimacy with Gardiner,"

(d) and that he "would consider that the preponderance of probabilities strongly favours Musammam Kumli's claim that Mr. Gardiner is the father of the boy Harry."

He has not found definitely whether or not Gardiner is the father of the child.

Both Courts in dismissing her claim ordered the payment of Rs. 300 costs to Gardiner. The woman has applied in revision to this Court.

The learned Acting Chief Justice issued notice to Gardiner to show cause:—

(1) why the case should not be remitted to the Magistrate to hear according to law,

(2) under what circumstances he alleges that any previous payment of gift of a house in 1918 was accepted by the lady as a composition for her claim under section 488.

The only issues in the case really were:—

(1) Has the woman, Musammam Kumli, any right to make the application in her own name.

(2) Do "Educational expenses" (for which alone she asks) come within the term "maintenance" in section 488 so as to permit of an order being made for the payment of such expenses?

(3) Is the child proved to be the child of Gardiner?

As to the first question, it is clear that section 488 contemplates applications by a wife or a child. In this case there is no question of a wife. Musammam Kumli only alleges herself to be a discarded mistress and the application should have been made by the woman as guardian of the child and for the child. This would only have called for a formal amendment which could have been rightly permitted had the point been noticed in the Courts below, and I have in fact here treated the application as if it had been made by the woman not in her own name but as guardian of and for the child. This is not a mere technicality, for, had the point been noticed the lower Courts would not have fallen into the error of speaking of the payment of Rs. 300 by Gardiner as if it was a composition of the claims of the child and further the second portion of the rule issued to Gardiner by the learned Acting Chief Justice would not, as I think, have been issued in its existing form. Properly regarded the payment of the Rs. 300 could be weighed as evidence of an intimacy between Gardiner and the woman, but in no sense could it be regarded as a binding composition of the claims of the child. It is to be noted, however, that neither of the lower Courts actually dismissed the application on the ground that there had been a final composition. The First Court dismissed it on the ground that it was impossible with any certainty to attribute the paternity to Gardiner. The learned Sessions Judge upheld the dismissal but on the actual ground that section 488 does not provide for ordering payment of educational expenses.

With any claim of the woman, then, in her own right we are not concerned. She has no claim. I deal with the claim as if it had been made by her as guardian of the boy for the boy. For the child, if he is in fact an illegitimate child disowned by his father every body must feel sympathy, but whatever it may be possible to do for him in other ways that sympathy must not be allowed to have the smallest influence in determining the weight to be attached to the evidence produced by the woman who claimed to be his mother as against the alleged father. And similarly an appreciation of the unpleasantness of the position of the alleged father in such a case as this must be allowed no weight as against the child.

In this case the opposite party happens to be an Inspector or retired Inspector, of Police, but it is right to say at the outset that that fact has had, so far as the record indicates, no bearing whatever on the facts of this case either before or after it came into Court. There is nothing before me to show that Gardiner has in any way abused his position as a Police Officer.

KUMLI v. EMPEROR.

I have gone into the facts with very great care. The child was unrepresented here by any Counsel and the burden thrown on me was very much heavier in consequence.

I have examined more than once every word of the record and if the issue of paternity had to be decided, I should have been compelled to order the matter to be re-heard after taking further evidence on the ground that evidence was produced in the Sessions Court which was not fully sifted and that certain other points needed further inquiry, before the issue of paternity could be decided, particularly in reference to the evidence of 1913 and 1918. I will proceed to state my reason for not adopting that course. As I have said the fact that the application is made in the name of the woman is a matter of form. The second point, viz., whether such an application as the present can be made for the payment of educational expenses requires deeper consideration. Section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure says "If any person neglects to maintain his legitimate or illegitimate child unable to maintain itself, the Magistrate may, upon proof of such neglect order such person to make a monthly allowance for the maintenance of such child". It was on the ground that 'maintenance' does not include educational expenses that the learned Sessions Judge dismissed the case. He quoted no authority and gave no reasons in support of his opinion.

The object of proceedings for maintenance is to prevent vagrancy [compare In re Shaik Fakrudin (1)] and that object is attained by the provision of lodging, food and clothing. A husband is bound to "maintain" his wife but he is not bound to do more than supply her with lodging, food and clothing, he is not bound to maintain her "as his wife". See In re Gulabdas Bhaidas (2). The specific question of schooling fees was very fully considered in case of Nga Hla v. Mi Hla Kyu (3), a case of the Upper Burma Report, decided on the 5th of January 1909. In that case an application was made for an increase in the amount of the maintenance that had already been allotted on amongst other grounds "that costs of schooling fees and clothing will be increasing", as the child grew older. Mr. Shaw, J. C., who had made research among English and Indian authorities also came to the definite conclusion that maintenance "is not intended to go further than to insure to the wife or children food, clothing and lodging". I need not detail at greater length his reasons, which are set forth fully in the report for holding that maintenance does not include education. From those reasons I see no reason to differ and to that extent uphold the order of the Sessions Judge in this case.

A question that might arise is as to whether I should in any way facilitate, if I can do so, the amendment of the application so that it might take the form of an application for maintenance proper. I should at any rate have grave doubts as to whether I had any power to allow such a material alteration, but of one thing I am quite certain and that is that I ought only to allow it if I was satisfied that the application as framed was framed in error, that what the woman really wanted on behalf of the child was maintenance. But there are facts in this case which make it perfectly clear beyond the shadow of a doubt that the application was framed as it was deliberately after advice being taken and in no way at all owing to ignorance.

It is only necessary to refer to the fact that on October 19th, 1919, Musamat Kumli on behalf of herself and the child purchased a house in Almora for the sum of Rs. 150. At first she told the Court that she had expended the Rs. 300 given her by Gardiner in settlement of her domestic expenses and said nothing about this purchase. Later when cross-examined further she said that she had purchased this house out of the sum of Rs. 300. When asked to produce the sale-deed she said she had none. Pressed again on the point she admitted that there was a sale-deed, but said that it was with her brother Gardiner applied for and obtained a copy of the sale-deed. It showed that the purchase was made in her name and that of the boy "Harry, son of Jogia". She says now in explanation of that that she never saw the sale-deed or had anything to do with it and that Gardiner got the name of Jogia entered in the sale-deed. She had, however, further to admit that one Jogia Mistri was endeavouring to get her to become his mistress.

I need not enter now into the question of whether the settlement which was made at that time was a settlement intended to include the claims of the child or not. Whether Gardiner at that time was admitting, at any rate to the woman the paternity of the child and the settlement was made on that basis, or whether he was denying it, or whether she was in fact then making no claim, one thing is certain and that is that she considered at that time that all claims of whatever sort or on whatever basis were being settled at that time, and so did Gardiner. This is clear for two reasons. No man would have settled the woman's claims and, if claims, true or false, were being made as regards the child, would have left those open. Similarly, if those claims as to the child were being made, truly or falsely, and if they were not settled, but, as the woman says, Gardiner promised to be responsible for the child, it is incredible that the woman should have waited for four and a half years to make any claim for the child. Therefore, it is certain that whatever claims may have been made in 1918 and whether they were admitted or not the woman thought that all claims to maintenance even on behalf of the child had been settled. That the child's claims, if he was Gardiner's child, could not be legally so concluded is immaterial. That is what she thought and what her advisers thought and that is why her application was deliberately framed by her and her advisers to ask for schooling expenses only and for those to be paid not to her but to the "Rector of the school". In these circumstances, I should feel wholly unjustified, even if I had the power, in suggesting or permitting any amendment. The result is that so far as this application asks for Rs. 15 for schooling fees to be paid to the "Rector of the school", it must be dismissed.

The remaining question for consideration is the question of the costs allotted to Gardiner. I do not wish to say anything that may seem in any way to suggest any opinion of mine on the main question which was at issue and which, as I have already said, I am of opinion, could not be satisfactorily determined without further enquiry. But in deciding the question of costs I have to consider the responsibility of each of the parties in connection with these proceedings and also the question whether the parties have put their cases frankly before the Court. For the reasons, I have already given, it is undesirable to enter into particulars of some of the matters on which evidence was given. But as regards Mr. Gardiner's want of frankness I may instance the incident of the photographs. When he was shown two photographs, he denied having taken them, with the result that a Commission had to be executed to the Magistrate at Saharanpur to ascertain whether or not the photographs had been taken in the compound of the bungalow, at that time occupied by Gardiner in Saharanpur. It was proved that the building appearing in the photograph was an out-house in that compound.

On the other hand I am satisfied that there was at least one most discreditable incident in the case of the applicant. The Sessions Judge, before whom the photographs were first produced, asked the child whether he knew anything about them. The child is now 10½ years of age. He was born, if we are to believe the woman, on November 15th, 1913. The woman said, in November 1923, that the photographs were taken eight years previously, in other words in the cold weather of 1915. I have no doubt that the learned Sessions Judge would not have asked the child any question about the photographs had he realised, as it is easy for me to do with the whole record before me, that the child was at that time two years of age. The child in reply said "Kumli is my mother. I know the Sahib (Mr. Gardiner) He is my father. I remember this picture (Exhibit X). My father here took it. I do not remember the name of the dog. This Exhibit Y is a photo of me, Dorothy (one of the children of Mr. Gardiner) and my mother. I cannot make out the fourth person. My father here took the photograph. What I have round my neck is the Miss Sahib's chaddar, no my mother's. The others were wearing boy's clothes, my mother too". The photograph (Exhibit X) referred to was one of a group in which this woman, Musammât Kumli, Gardiner's two little girls and his little boy Eric had been dressed up for fun. The boy in the photograph (Exhibit X) was, as this woman admits, not the child before the Court but Gardiner's boy Eric. Nothing is more plain than that an endeavour had been made to coach this poor child to pretend that he knew all about and remembered the photographs. It was impossible that he should do so, as he could only have been two years old, on the woman's own saying. But this fact was overlooked with the result that the poor child made a hopeless mess of his statement. Comment on this incident is superfluous. Anything more disgraceful is difficult to imagine.

Taking into consideration such facts as these both sides of the case I alter the order for costs from one for the payment of Rs 300 to the payment of Rs 150, the said Rs. 150 to include the Doctor's fee, which had to be paid owing to another false statement made by this woman as to Gardiner having a birth-mark similar to that of the child. With this modification of the order as to costs I dismiss the application.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by two persons, Mazher Ahmed and Imdad Mia. They were both tried before a Jury for an offence under section 467 of the Indian Penal Code. The Jury unanimously found them guilty and the Judge agreeing with the verdict of the Jury sentenced them to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of six months. The facts are shortly as follows. One Ali Mia brought a rent suit against one Makbul Ali on the 21st of May 1920 and Ali Mia obtained an ex parte decree in that rent suit. He realized the decretal amount by attachment on the 4th of July 1920. Makbul Ali applied to set aside the ex parte decree. This was done. The suit was re-heard and was dismissed on the 13th of May 1921. On the 23rd of ANNAVI v. EMPEROR.

March 1922 Makbul Ali applied for a refund of the amount of the ex parte decree which had been realized by execution. Ali Mia put in a petition objecting to the application on the 10th of June 1922. He alleged that the money had in fact been re-paid by him to Makbul Ali and in support of his contention he filed with his petition what purported to be a receipt for the money. The receipt was found to be a forgery and hence these proceedings.

The accused Mazher Ahmed was the writer of the receipt and Imdad signed Makbul's name on the receipt. There is no doubt that the receipt was never signed by Makbul and we are satisfied that Imdad did not affix Makbul's name to the receipt at Makbul's request. Clearly, he was rightly convicted and we dismiss the appeal so far as Imdad is concerned.

So far as Mazher Ahmed is concerned, upon the evidence, he wrote the body of the receipt but not the date and there is no evidence to show that he knew that it had been signed. He stated that he wrote the receipt at the request of Makbul. This is clearly untrue. But we do not think that upon the materials a conviction under section 467 can follow so far as he is concerned. As we have already stated there is no proof that he was present when the receipt was in fact executed or that he helped any person to use it. He might have been charged under the provisions of section 467 read with section 109. But this was not the charge that he had to meet and having regard to the decision in the case reported as Empress v. Riasat Ali (1) we think that he cannot be convicted of an offence under section 467 in the absence of evidence that he was present at the execution of the receipt or that he helped any person to use it.

In the circumstances, the appeal succeeds so far as Mazher Ahmed is concerned and we set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon him. The bail bond is cancelled.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 114—Interpretation—Charge—No proof of acts previous to commission of offence—Abetment—Prejudice to accused.

Section 114, Penal Code, deals with a person, who would be guilty of abetment independent of any act done at the time of the offence, that is to say, a person whose abetment is complete apart from his presence. The section defines the liability of such a person if he happens to be present when the offence is committed. [p 263, col. 1]

Ram Ranjan Roy v. Emperor, 27 Ind. Cas. 554, 42 C. 422 at p 426, 19 C. W. N. 28; 16 C. L. J. 170, followed.

A charge against an accused ran thus—"You abetted by being present, in the commission of the offence of mischief and thereby committed an offence under sections 114 and 430, Indian Penal Code." No acts were alleged on the part of the accused which related to a point of time previous to the commission of the offence. At the trial the case sought to be made out against him was that he was at the place where the offence was committed and instigated the other accused to commit the offence at the time they committed it. On revision against the conviction.

Held, that the accused must be held to have been misled by the nature of the charge and that the error had occasioned a failure of justice [ibid].

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional, First Class, Magistrate, Namakal, in Criminal Appeal No. 54 of 1923, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Stationary Second Class Magistrate, Namakal, in C. C. No. 200 of 1923.

Messrs. V. L. Ethiraj and P. Ramathan, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The charge framed against the fourth accused runs thus—

"That you... abetted, by being present, in the commission of the offence of... mischief.....and thereby committed an offence punishable under sections 430 and 114, Indian Penal Code.

JAMUNA SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Section 114 of the Indian Penal Code implies that the abetment had been completed before the actual offence was committed. It reads thus—

"Whenever any person who, if absent, would be liable to be punished as an abettor, is present when the act or offence for which he would be punishable in consequence of the abetment is committed, he shall be deemed to have committed such act or offence."

What is it that the section contemplates? It is dealing with a person, who would be guilty of abetment independent of any act done at the time of the offence, that is to say, a person whose abetment is complete apart from his presence. The section defines the liability of such a person if he happens to be present when the offence is committed.

No acts are alleged on the part of the fourth accused which relate to a point of time previous to the commission of the offence. The case sought to be made out against him is that he was at the place where the offence was committed and instigated the other accused to commit the offence at the time they committed it. In the words of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in Ram Ranjan Roy v. Emperor (1): "The only abetment charged necessarily required the presence of the fourth accused while to come within section 114 the abetment must be complete apart from the presence of the abettor."

The next question is, has the fourth accused been misled by this error in the charge and has it occasioned a failure of justice? It seems to me that the fourth accused did not have notice of the matter with which he was charged. When prosecution witnesses did not allege that he committed any act previous to the commission of the offence he would be justified in believing that no evidence of his guilt was being given and it is extremely difficult to say that he has not been misled and that there has not been a consequent failure of justice.

(1) 27 Ind. Cas. 551; 42 C. 432 at p. 428, 19 C. W. N. 28, 18 Cr. L. J. 170.

On the whole I think it is safe to set aside his conviction and the sentence and I, therefore, do so and direct that he shall be re-tried on a charge properly framed. The fine, if it has been collected, shall be refunded.

As regards the rest of the accused, the sentence is reduced to the term of imprisonment already undergone. In regard to the sentence of fine, I reduce it to Rs. 20 in the case of each of the accused. And the excess fine, if collected, will be refunded. In default, each shall undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of two weeks.

The order directing payment of compensation to P. W. No. 1 will stand.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V. of 1898), s. 257
Defence witness unable to attend on account of illness—Examination on commission—Procedure

One of the two persons stated by the prosecution to be the ring-leaders of an affray which was the subject of the trial pleaded alibi and asked permission to call a certain witness to prove it. This witness wrote to the Court stating his inability to attend on account of ill-health and sent medical certificate to that effect. On the date of the hearing the accused applied to the Court for the issue of a Commission to examine this witness at his house. The Magistrate was of opinion that the case being important, the witness should be examined on Court and as it was not known when the witness would be well enough to attend the Court, he dismissed the application.

Held, (1) that some effort should have been made to ascertain as to whether it would, within a reasonable time, be possible for the witness to come to Court and if not then to take the evidence on Commission [p. 265, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Bucknill, J.—This was an application in criminal revisional jurisdiction made by ten persons who were originally all convicted on the 17th December last by a Magistrate of the First Class at Chapra of various offences and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment in connection with an assault upon a man of the name of Raghunath Singh. This Raghunath Singh was the complainant in the case. From the decision of the Magistrate an appeal was preferred to the Sessions Judge of Saran but was dismissed on the 28th January last. It is unnecessary, and under the circumstances would perhaps be undesirable, that I should dilate upon the facts which led up to this accusation being made against the present applicants. The matter has now come before this Court on a very simple point in revisional jurisdiction.

The position during the trial was that one of the two persons who were stated in the story for the prosecution to be the ring-leaders of the affair was the second applicant whose name is Nageswar Prasad. This man who is said to be a petty landholder of some little importance in his neighbourhood asked permission to call a certain witness on his behalf in order to show that he (the applicant) was, at the time when the offence was alleged to have been committed, not present there at, but was actually in Calcutta. This individual whose testimony it was thus sought to be obtained was Mr. R. H. M. Rustomji of 20 Ballygunje Circular Road, Calcutta, and it is admitted that he is a mercantile gentleman of some position and importance. Now it is quite true that, apparently, in the written statement which this applicant filed in the first instance, he did not therein state that he proposed to urge in his defence a plea that he was not present at the assault; but he did mention this gentleman in his list of witnesses and it seems clear from the explanation which is now given by the Deputy Magistrate that this gentleman Mr. Rustomji could not attend the Court. On the 27th November, which was, I gather, the first day upon which the defence opened its side of the case, it is clear that this applicant put in a petition asking that this Mr. Rustomji might be examined on Commission; on the ground that he was ill. Now the Deputy Magistrate states.—

"It is true that a petition was filed on the 27th November 1923 to examine the alibi witness, Mr. R. H. M. Rustomji of Calcutta, of one of the accused persons, namely, Nageswar Prasad on Commission, but as the case was important I thought his attendance in Court absolutely necessary."

"The certificate about his illness did not suggest by which date he could undertake the journey of coming over to Chapra and the accused did not insist for another date to produce him. I had, therefore, no other alternative but to reject the application for his examination by Commission."

I think that perhaps the Deputy Magistrate took an incorrect view of his powerlessness. The letter which was couched in very courteous language written by Mr. Rustomji to the Deputy Magistrate was of such a character and was accompanied by a medical certificate of such a character that I should have thought it spoke for itself. It says that he regretted that he was unable owing to ill-health to undertake a railway journey and, therefore, could not attend the Court and the medical certificate stated that he was suffering from a weak heart and a painful internal malady. Under these circumstances and as the Deputy Magistrate thought that this gentleman was a very important witness, I think that the proper course would have been that some effort should have been made to ascertain (either by telegram or by correspondence and either undertaken on behalf of the Court or undertaken by the applicant himself) as to whether it would, within a reasonable time, be possible for this invalid gentleman to come to Chapra and if not, then, reluctantly, to come to the conclusion that it was necessary that his evidence should be taken on Commission owing to his inability to be present at the place where the case was being decided. But all that the Deputy Magistrate did at that time, so far as I can gather, was simply to note in the order sheet—"Rejected. Filed". He gives no reason there for such rejection and he certainly does not indicate that he contemplated either giving the applicant another chance of ascertaining when and if, this gentleman could attend or of assisting further through the Court the applicant to ascertain those facts as to the possibility of attendance and as to the necessity of taking the evidence on Commission. I am bound to say that as the matter stands I should have felt that the applicant might consider himself somewhat hardly treated. There does occur, however, a circumstance which may be explicable but which does not seem to have been explained by the learned Counsel who appears for the applicant. It does not seem that any question about this witness was referred to at the trial, because the Deputy Magistrate does not refer to it himself in his decision. That may perhaps be, because, he having rejected the petition, there was nothing more for him to say, but what does seem noticeable and inclines one perhaps to consider that there may be something in what the learned Assistant Government Advocate suggests, namely, that the evidence of this gentleman would not be of much value, is that in the ground of appeal to the Sessions Judge this point does not seem to have been included and that the Sessions Judge himself does not in his judgment mention it at all. It is, however, put in the forefront of the application in revisional jurisdiction made to this Court. I am bound to say that on general principles I think that this man was entitled under the circumstances to have the evidence of this gentleman taken. Whether it would have been of any value to him it is impossible to hazard any confident conjecture but that he thought it was and that the Deputy Magistrate himself thought that Mr. Rustomji was an important witness appears to be quite clearly the case. The question as to how far the evidence of this Mr. Rustomji might have affected others of the applicants other than the applicant himself is one which perhaps needs at a later stage very careful consideration. It is quite obvious that, if the prosecution story which puts as the leader of an affray or of an assault an individual whose presence at the scene of the alleged occurrence is conclusively disproved, it can not but throw serious grounds of suspicion upon the whole of the prosecution story, and I should not be prepared definitely to say that in the event of this witness being able clearly to show that this Nageswar Prasad, the applicant, was not present at all at the scene of what took place, but was in Calcutta at that time, that such evidence would not militate very seriously against the whole truth of the complainant's story. Under these circumstances I think that the proper course will be to set aside the decision of the Sessions Judge of the 27th January last and to set aside the judgment of the Magistrate of Chapra of the 17th December last and to order, firstly, that the evidence of this Mr. R. H. M. Rustomji shall, if possible, be taken on behalf of the accused Nageswar Prasad Singh. I do not pretend to be able to foresee in what way this evidence can be taken. It may be that this gentleman is now in a position in which he can and will come from Calcutta in order to give his testimony; on the other hand he may be still in such a state of health that a Commission will have to be issued to take his evidence in the case at his own home. Secondly, that the Magistrate shall, after, if possible, having taken this evidence, re-consider in the light of that evidence (if it throws any light at all upon the matter) the case of all those accused who were before him. If he is unable for any reason to take or obtain the evidence of this Mr Rustomji I think that it is necessary that his report to that effect and the reason for his failure should be submitted to his Court

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s 439
Revision—High Court, power of, to quash pending proceeding, exercise of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1890), s 154—Owner of land failing to give information of riot—Ingredients of offence

The High Court has power to quash a criminal proceeding in its early stages before any evidence has been recorded, but this is a power which will be only exercised in exceptional cases. [p 271, col 1]

Per Cuming, J.—The High Court has the power of interfering with criminal cases whilst they are still pending before the subordinate Courts, but the exercise of this power is sometimes fraught with considerable danger to the due administration of criminal justice. If parties are to be allowed to come up at every and any stage of a criminal prosecution to challenge the order of the Magistrate, a very powerful weapon is at once placed in the hand of the well-to-do to defeat the ends of justice and to protract indefinitely a criminal trial [p 270, col. 2, p 271, col 1]

It is for the Magistrate before whom the case is pending to determine whether the facts proved or the facts alleged do or do not constitute a criminal offence. The accused party has then his remedy by way of appeal or revision, when the case has been finally decided [p 271, col 1]

Per C C Ghose, J.—The ingredients necessary for a prosecution under section 154 of the Penal Code are the following—

- (a) Unlawful assembly or riot
- (b) Accused is the owner or occupier of the land or has or claims to have an interest in the land.

(c) Either the accused or his agent or manager knew that the offence was being or had been committed or had reason to believe that it was likely to be committed

(d) With such knowledge that the offence was being or had been committed, or having reason to believe that it was likely to be committed, the accused did not give notice to the nearest Police Station

(e) The accused having reason to believe that the offence was about to be committed, did not use all lawful means in his power to prevent the offence or in the event of its taking place, did not use all lawful means in his power to disperse or suppress the riot or unlawful assembly. [p 269, cols 1 & 2]

It is not necessary, however, in order to render the owner of land on which a riot takes place criminally liable that he should be aware of the likelihood of such an occurrence and it is enough that his factor or agent should have taken an active part in the riot to warrant the conviction of the owner under section 154, Penal Code, [p 270, col. 1]

The very greatest caution is required before proceedings are started against a person under section 154 of the Penal Code [p 270, cols 1 & 2]

It is the bounden duty of the High Court to interfere with a proceeding pending in a subordinate Court when it is brought to its notice that a person has been subjected, or is about to be subjected, to the harassment of an illegal prosecution [p. 270, col. 2]

Criminal revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Jessore, dated the 21st, April 1923

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Manmatha Nath Mukherjee and Nakuleswar Mukherjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr Orr, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—The facts connected with this Rule are as follows—The petitioner, Nripendra Bhusan Ray, is a non-resident zemindar of Narail in the district of Jessore. It is stated that he resides at Madhupur in the Sonthal Parganas and that all the affairs of his zemindari, which lies in several districts, are managed by one Bepin Behari Dutt, who is his manager and who resides at his sudder chutcheri in Narail. There is a hat at a place called Simakhali, 17 or 18 miles distant from Narail, which is owned by the petitioner and others. This hat is let out to various persons under leases for a term. In 1927 B. S. the hat in question was leased out to one Ibrahim Sikdar for a period of three years at an annual rental of Rs. 575 and during the pendency of this lease a rival hat was started in or about January 1922, at a place called Kholabari, which is within a mile of Simakhali. On the 17th September, 1922, a riot occurred at Kholabari. Certain persons, namely, Forman, Izatulla, Wares Sikdar, Basiruddin and Khodai Mulla, were convicted of rioting at Kholabari by the Additional Sessions Judge of Jessore on the 8th February 1923. Thereafter a case was started under sections 150 and 157, Indian Penal Code, against one Hemant Kumar Banerjee, who was the petitioners' former local agent at Narail, and some other persons on the ground that they collected and engaged various persons to commit the aforesaid riot at Kholabari. It has been stated before us that the said case ended in an acquittal of the accused therein. On the 12th March, 1923, an application was made before the Sub-Divisional Officer, Sadar, for drawing up proceedings against the petitioner under section 155, Indian Penal Code, and against the said Bepin Behari Dutt under sections 150 and 156, Indian Penal Code. The Sub-Divisional Officer held that he could not entertain the application. Thereafter the Inspector of Police of the Magura Sub-Division filed a formal complaint before the District Magistrate of Jessore, charging the petitioner and the said Bepin Behari Dutt with having committed offences punishable under sections 155 and 156, Indian Penal Code, respectively. In his complaint before the District Magistrate the Inspector of Police stated that the ijaradar of the Simakhali hat began to oppress the traders and dealers at Simakhali hat by realising enhanced rents and excessive tolas and by exercising other acts of highhandedness over them. It was further stated by the Inspector of Police that on account of the oppressions of the ijaradar of Simakhali hat, a rival hat had been started at Kholabari and that both the hats began to sit on the same days, viz., on Sundays and Wednesdays, and that the result was that the old hat at Simakhali lost its importance and the new hat at Kholabari flourished. He further stated that owing to the rivalry of the two hats breaches of the peace were apprehended and proceedings under sections 107 and 144, Criminal Procedure Code, were instituted from time to time in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Magura. He then referred to the riot which took place on the 17th of September 1922, and to the conviction of some of the rioters by the Additional Sessions Judge of Jessore in February 1923. He went on to refer to the case against the local agent, Hemant Kumar Banerjee, and stated that in the course of the investigation of the case against Hemant Kumar Banerjee, 16 letters were produced by Bepin Behari Dutt, the manager of the petitioner, before one Ajit Mohan Chowdhury, Inspector of Police. It was alleged that from the letters and from other evidence it would appear that the said Bepin Behari Dutt was guilty of an offence punishable under section 156, Indian Penal Code and that the petitioner was liable for an offence under section 155, Indian Penal Code. The petition of the Inspector of Police contained also the following paragraphs:—

"That the said riot at Kholabari hat on the 17th September, 1922, was committed for the benefit of the above named Babu Nripendra Bhushan Ray, zemin-dar, who was interested in the subject-matter of the dispute which gave rise to the riot and the accused, Babu Bepin Behari Dutt, manager, had reason to believe that such riot was likely to be committed and did not use all lawful means in his power to prevent such riot or unlawful assembly from taking place, and that the said Babu Bepin Behari Dutt has thereby committed an offence under section 156, Indian Penal Code.

"That it will further appear from the letters above mentioned that Babu Bepin Behari Dutt connived at the engagement of persons to become members of the unlawful assembly.

"That the said riot at Kholabari on the 17th September 1922, was committed for the benefit of Babu Nripendra Bhushan Ray, owner of the Simakhali hat, and the said Babu Nripendra Bhushan Ray was interested in the subject-matter of the dispute which gave rise to the riot, and his agent or manager, having reason to believe that the riot was likely to be committed, or that the unlawful assembly, by which such riot was committed, was likely to be held, did not use all lawful means in his power to prevent such riot or unlawful assembly and that the said Babu Nripendra Bhusan Ray has thereby committed an offence under section 155, Indian Penal Code."

The Inspector of Police, Govinda Bandhu Majumdar, was examined on oath by the learned District Magistrate. The Inspector of Police stated, among others, the following matters:—

Q. Did accused No. 2 know or have reason to believe that an unlawful assembly was being held or would be held at Simakhali?

A. So far as I enquired, I could not find that there was such knowledge on the part of accused No. 2.

Q. Where was accused No. 2 at the time of the unlawful assembly?

A. At Narail, about 15 or 16 miles, I think, from Simakhali.

Q. Who was the agent of the zemindar on the spot at the time of the unlawful assembly at Simakhali?

A. At the time of the unlawful assembly at Simakhali which led to the riot at Kholabari, the zemindar's local agent, i. e. Hemant Kumar Banerjee, was not there, but his dependant, Surendra Nath Bhattacharjee, was there.

Q. At the time of unlawful assembly leading to the riot, where was Babu Hemant Kumar Banerjee i. e., on the 17th September 1922?

A. He was at Bunaganti Cutchery, 12 miles from Simakhali, on 17th September 1922 afternoon.

Q. Did the unlawful assembly take place in the afternoon.

A. Yes.

Q. Then so far you know, there was no agent or manager of the zemindar present at Simakhali just before or at the time when the unlawful assembly assembled on 17th September 1922.

A. No, none.

Q. Do you complain of any other unlawful assembly besides that of 17th September 1922.

A. No, no other.

Q. Did you find from any reliable evidence that accused No. 2 had reason to believe that an unlawful assembly such as was actually held at Simakhali on 17th September 1922, would be so held?

A. In the course of investigation of case No. 3 of October 1922, I seized some letters which accused No. 2 produced to me; in one of them I find that the accused No. 2 enjoined or entreated his agent, Hemant Banerjee, to cause demolition of the new hat.

Q. What was the date of that particular letter?

A. (Refers to papers) 23rd Savan, 1329 (8th August 1922)

Q. What is the language of the letter?

A. Shattwar bad hata jahate dhansa hoy tahar byebasta kariba

Q. How do you know that the accused wrote that letter?

A. From signature.

Q. To whom is the letter addressed?

A. To Superintendent Rakra Mokam Simakhali

Q. Is it quite clear that that letter refers to the Kholabari hat?

A. Yes.

The learned District Magistrate by his order dated the 21st April, 1923, held that sections 155 and 156, Indian Penal Code, were not applicable to this case, but that a case under section 154, Indian Penal Code, against the petitioner Nripendra Bhusan Ray had been made out. The following is the text of the order made by the learned District Magistrate,—“In my opinion sections 155 and 156, Indian Penal Code, are not applicable in this case; for (i) neither of the accused is owner or occupier of the land of Kholabari hat, respecting which the riot took place; (ii) neither accused claims any interest in the land of the Kholabari hat; (iii) neither accused claims any interest in the Kholabari hat, i. e., the subject-matter of the dispute which gave rise to the riot—their desire being merely to destroy that hat, which I hold not to be the same as “claiming an interest in the hat”, and (iv) the last answer (before the supplementary questions) of complainant to my questions, shows that accused No. 1 has not accepted or derived actual benefit from the riot.

NRIPENDRA BHUSAN V. GOBINDA BANDHU.

"But it appears from the complainant's statement on S. A. that so far as the forming of an unlawful assembly, at Simakhali on the land of accused No. 1 is concerned, a case under section 154, Indian Penal Code, is made out against the zemindar Babu Nripendra Bhusan Ray (vide, especially the last few answers to the supplementary questions to complainant). Summon Babu Nripendra Bhusan Ray of Narail, Zemindar, under section 154, Indian Penal Code, for 12th May 1923. I transfer the case to Sub-Divisional Officer, Sadar, for favour of disposal. The complaint against accused No. 2, Babu Bepin Behari Dutta, is dismissed, section 203, Criminal Procedure Code."

The present Rule is directed against the said order of the learned District Magistrate. It is argued on behalf of the petitioner that having regard to the language of sections 154, Indian Penal Code, and to the facts elicited in the examination on oath of the Inspector of Police, the present proceedings are wholly unjustified. Section 154, Indian Penal Code runs as follows:—"Whenever any unlawful assembly or riot takes place, the owner or occupier of the land upon which such unlawful assembly is held, or such riot is committed, and any person, having or claiming an interest in such land, shall be punishable with fine not exceeding one thousand rupees if he, or his agent or manager, knowing that such offence is being or has been committed, or having reason to believe it is likely to be committed, do not give the earliest notice thereof in his or their power to the principal officer at the nearest Police Station; and do not in the case of his or their having reason to believe that it was about to be committed, use all lawful means in his or their power to prevent it, and, in the event of its taking place, do not use all lawful means in his or their power to disperse or suppress the riot or unlawful assembly."

The ingredients necessary, therefore, for a prosecution under section 154, Indian Penal Code, are the following:

(a) Unlawful assembly or riot.

(b) Accused is the owner or occupier of the land or has or claims to have an interest in the land.

(c) Either the accused or his agent, or manager knew that the offence was being or had been committed, or had reason to believe that it was likely to be committed.

(d) With such knowledge that the offence was being or had been committed, or having reason to believe that it was likely to be committed, the accused did not give notice to the nearest Police Station.

(e) The accused having reason to believe that the offence was about to be committed, did not use all lawful means in his power to prevent the offence, or in the event of its taking place, did not use all lawful means in his power to disperse or suppress the riot or unlawful assembly.

In the present case it is argued that the charge is not that subsequent to a riot or unlawful assembly, no information had been given to the Police; but that with the knowledge or having reason to believe that such an offence was about to be committed, steps were not taken to prevent a riot. It is pointed out on behalf of the petitioner that on the petition of complaint of the Inspector of Police and on the answers to the supplementary questions, it is clear that there is no allegation that the petitioner, or his agent or manager knew or had reason to believe that the offence was being or had been committed and that, therefore, the ingredients required by section 154, Indian Penal Code, had not been satisfied. Knowledge of the landholder or of his agent is the first essential element of an offence under this section.

I have very carefully examined the record and I am of opinion that on the materials on record I am bound to give effect to the contentions urged on behalf of the petitioner. The Inspector of Police, who was examined before the Magistrate, does not allege that the petitioner, who is the zemindar, had any knowledge or had any reason to believe that a riot was likely to be committed. Further, the allegation of knowledge on the part of the agent or manager of the zemindar is not substantiated on the examination of the complainant on oath. It is true that the Inspector did refer to certain letters alleged to have been written by the accused No. 2 but the implication involved therein is plainly inconsistent with what the Inspector himself has stated, viz, that as far as he could find, there was no knowledge on the part of the accused No. 2 that an unlawful assembly or riot was going to take place at Simakhali. It is not necessary to lay particular stress upon the fact that at the time of the unlawful assembly or riot the agent or manager of the zemindar was at Narail, which is about 15 or 16 miles from Simakhali, or that the zemindar's local agent, Hemant Kumar Banerjee, was at a kutcheri which is 12 miles distant from Simakhali, but stress must be laid upon the facts elicited in the examination of the complainant on oath, which have been referred to above.

I am not unaware that it has been held that it is not necessary in order to render the owner of land on which a riot takes place criminally liable that he should be aware of the likelihood of such an occurrence and that it is enough that his factor or agent should have taken an active part in the riot to warrant the conviction of the owner under section 154, Indian Penal Code. This Court has held that knowledge on the part of the owner or occupier of the land of the acts or intentions of the agent is not an essential element of an offence under this section and that he may be convicted under it, though he may be in entire ignorance of the acts of his agent or manager. The facts, however, in this case show that the agent or manager had no knowledge and had no reason to believe that an unlawful assembly or riot would be held or committed at Simakhali; this, in my opinion, is really the most important point in this case as far as the petitioner is concerned. On the present record, I am of opinion, that there are no materials justifying the initiation of proceedings under section 154, Indian Penal Code, against the petitioner, Nripendra Bhushan Ray. In my opinion the very greatest caution is required before proceedings are started against persons under section 154, Indian Penal Code. I would, therefore, quash the present proceedings and make the Rule absolute.

This Court has undoubted power to quash proceedings in subordinate Courts. [See Chandi Pershad v. Abdur Rahman (1) Choa Lal Dass v. Anant Pershad Misser (2); Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v. Queen Empress (3) and Hari Charan Gorai v. Srisch. Chandra (4)] and in this connection I adopt respectfully what has been said by Woodroffe, J., in Lekhraj Ram v. Debi Pershad (5). I am fully sensible of the danger of interfering with cases while they are still pending in the subordinate Courts, but I am equally alive to the danger of this Court not being able to say that it is its bounden duty to interfere when it is brought to its notice that a person has been subjected, or is about to be subjected to the harassment of an illegal prosecution.

As my learned brother does not agree to the Rule being made absolute, the case will therefore be laid before the Chief Justice for reference to a third Judge.

Cuming, J.—The facts of the case out of which this application has arisen are set forth in the judgment which has just been delivered by my learned brother and it is unnecessary for me to re-capitulate them.

I would discharge the Rule. While admitting that this Court has the power of interfering with criminal cases whilst they are still pending before the subordinate Courts, I am still of opinion that it is a power the exercise of which is sometimes fraught with considerable danger to the due administration of criminal justice. If parties are to be allowed to come up at every and any stage of a criminal prosecution to challenge the order of the Magistrate, a very powerful weapon is at once placed in the hand of the well-to-do to defeat the ends of justice and to protract indefinitely a criminal trial. It seems to me that it is for the Magistrate before whom the case is pending to determine whether the facts proved or the facts alleged do or do not constitute a criminal offence. The accused party has then his remedy by way of appeal or revision, when the case has been finally decided.

The disadvantages of what can only be described as a simultaneous trial by two Courts of the same offence are so obvious that it seems to me that they outweigh any possible advantages which might be gained by following the procedure above indicated. I am very unwilling at this stage to go into the facts of the case for to do so might seriously prejudice the accused but would point out that the mere fact that one of the accused's agent was not actually present at the riot but was some 10 or 12 miles distant does not for one moment prove that he did not know of, or have reason to believe that a riot was about to be committed. I am not prepared to say that the allegations in the complaint if proved would not bring the accused within the mischief of section 154. That is a question which will be determined when evidence is gone into.

Newbould, J.—This Rule was issued upon the District Magistrate of Jessore calling on him to show cause why his order summoning the petitioner on a charge under section 154, Indian Penal Code, should not be quashed. The Rule was heard by my learned brothers O. C. Ghose and Cumming, J.J., and as they were unable to agree it has been referred to me for decision.

As regards the question of law, there is no real difference between them. They both agree that this Court has power to quash a criminal proceeding in its early stages before any evidence has been recorded and they both agree that this is a power which will be only exercised in exceptional cases. The question is whether the present case is one of those exceptional cases.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of my learned brother O. C. Ghose, J., and I only propose to re-state them very shortly. The petitioner is a zemindar who is one of the owners of a hat held in a place called Simakhali. A rival hat was started at Kholabari about a mile from Simakhali. According to the case for the prosecution on the 17th September 1922 an unlawful assembly was collected at Simakhali and they went from there to Kholabari where they committed a riot. After the conclusion of the trial in the rioting case on the 24th April 1923 the complainant an Inspector of Police filed a written complaint before the District Magistrate charging the petitioner and one Bepin Behary Dutt described as his manager with offences punishable under sections 155 and 156, Indian Penal Code. These offences were alleged to have been committed in connection with the riot at Kholabari. After examining the complainant the Magistrate held that offences under these sections had not been established against either of the accused persons but that a case had been made out which justified him in summoning the petitioner to answer a charge under section 154, Indian Penal Code, with reference to the unlawful assembly which had taken place at Simakhali prior to the riot at Kholabari. The necessary ingredients that have to be proved to establish the offence under this section are set out in the judgment of my learned brother, O. C. Ghose, J. It is not disputed that from the petition of complaint and the statement of the complainant on oath the Magistrate could have good ground for believing that all these ingredients except one were likely to be proved by the prosecution. The only question is whether on the petition of complaint and on the complainant's statement there is material for holding that a case can be made out that the petitioner's agent or manager knew or had reason to believe that the offence of being members of an unlawful assembly was likely to be committed.

On behalf of the petitioner great reliance is placed on a statement by the complainant in answer to supplementary question. The question and answer are as follows:—"Did accused No. 2 know or had reason to believe that an unlawful assembly was being held or would be held at Simakhali. Answer:—So far as I enquired I could not find that there was such knowledge on the part of accused No. 2." But in a later part of his examination the following question and answer appear:—"Did you find from any reliable evidence that accused No. 2 had reason to believe that an unlawful assembly such as was actually held at Simakhali on 17th November, 1922, would be so held? Answer:—In the course of investigation of case No. 3 of October 1922 I seized some letters which accused No. 2 produced to me. In one of them, I find that accused No. 2 enjoined his agent Hemanta Banerjee to cause demolition of the new hat." Considering both these statements of the complainant I find it difficult to hold that there was what can be called in law "no evidence" that the complainant's agent or manager had knowledge that an unlawful assembly was likely to take place at Simakhali. Further if we turn to the written petition we find what amounts to a distinct allegation of such knowledge. It must be remembered that the petition was drafted with a view to starting a case against the accused for having committed offences under sections 155 and 156 with reference to the actual riot at Kholabari and not with a view to the prosecution which was actually ordered with reference to the occurrence at Simakhali. From paragraphs 11 and 12 we find distinct allegation of knowledge on the part of the petitioner's agent or manager. In paragraph 11 of the petition it is alleged that the agent of the Narail zemindar collected lathials at Simakhali. In paragraph 12 it is alleged that these lathials proceeded from the old hat of Simakhali and committed rioting with culpable homicide at Kholabari. It is further alleged that Hemant Banerjee, the agent of the Narail zemindar, collected and engaged persons to commit the aforesaid riot. I am told that Hemant Banerjee has since been acquitted on the charge under section 150,

Indian Penal Code. Although the prosecution may not be in a position to prove that he actually collected and engaged persons to commit riot it does not follow that they will not be able to prove what is contained in that allegation, namely, that the riot took place with his knowledge, or that he had reason to believe that the taking place of the unlawful assembly was probable. My learned brother Cuming, J., remarks that it may prejudice the accused if too much is said about the strength of the case for the prosecution and with this I agree.

For the reasons I have given I hold that no sufficient case has been made out for quashing the prosecution of the petitioner at the present stage of the proceeding and I accordingly discharge this Rule.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 12-B OF 1924.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act (II of 1876), Rules under, rr. 51, 69—Possession of waste land in anticipation of sanction—Liability for payment of revenue and ejectment—Trees planted by would-be grantee—Grant refused—Would-be grantee ordered to remove trees—Failure to remove trees—Occupation—Grazing ground

A person who is given possession of some State waste land and brings it into cultivation is liable under r. 51, of the Rules made under the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act, to pay revenue and is also liable to ejectment but he cannot be ordered by the Revenue Authorities to remove the trees planted by him on the land and the mere fact that such trees remain on the land after it is constituted a grazing ground and he is ejected therefrom does not constitute occupation of the grazing ground by him and, therefore, he is not punishable under r. 69 of the said Rules.

Criminal revision upon reference made by the Sessions Judge, Tavoy and Margui, for review of an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Margui, in his Criminal Regular Trial No. 83 of 1923.

MAUNG PE V. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.—On the 19th of May 1917, Maung Pe applied for a grant of an area of some 13 acres of State waste land for rubber cultivation.

Notice of his application was duly published and no objections were received.

In anticipation of the issue of a grant he brought part of the land under cultivation.

On the 30th. of August 1918 the Township Officer recommended the issue of the grant.

On the 26th of March 1919 the Deputy Commissioner refused the grant on the ground that the land ought to be reserved as a grazing ground. At the same time he ordered that steps be taken to reserve the land as a grazing ground.

Apparently the land was notified as a grazing ground in Grazing Ground Proceedings No. 7 of 1918-19 of the Mergui District Office.

On the 8th of March 1920, Maung Pe filed an objection to the notification on the ground that he had actually been assessed to revenue on his cultivation of the land and had paid Rs 48-9-0 as land revenue. His objection was rejected.

On the 17th of April 1920 he applied for a refund of the land revenue which he had paid for the year 1919-20. The Deputy Commissioner said that he was prepared to remit the revenue if Maung Pe vacated the land and that the only way he could vacate the land was to remove the rubber trees.

On the 20th of August 1920 the Deputy Commissioner recorded that Maung Pe must vacate the land at once and that until he had removed the rubber trees, he had not vacated. When he vacated the revenue will be refunded.

On the 6th of September 1920 the Sub-Divisional Officer was directed to see that the land was vacated.

The matter was allowed to drag on until May 1923, when Maung Pe's prosecution under r. 69 of the Rules under the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act for occupying a finally demarcat-ed grazing ground was ordered. It then appeared that the land had never been shown on the maps of the Land Records Department as grazing ground and a dispute arose between the Deputy Commissioner's Revenue and Land Records Offices, which suggests that even then the land had not been finally demarcated as a grazing ground.

On the 3rd September 1923 a complaint of an offence under r. 69 was filed against Maung Pe.

No evidence was offered to show that the grazing ground had ever been finally demarcated but Maung Pe was convicted on his admission that rubber trees planted by him were still on the land. He was fined Rs. 50 which he paid. He was also ordered to cut down the trees root and branch within a month.

He applied in revision to the Sessions Judge who has reported the case to this Court with a recommendation that the conviction be set aside and the fine refunded, and that the order to cut down the trees be set aside.

It is perfectly clear that the conviction cannot be justified and in my opinion the action of the Revenue Authorities was entirely misconceived. Under r. 51, Maung Pe was liable to pay revenue and was also liable to ejectment. But I see no reason to believe that that rule empowered the Revenue Authorities to order him to remove the trees which he had planted. A mere fear that he might subsequently trespass on the grazing ground and tap the trees would not justify such an order, and if he did so, after the grazing ground had been finally demarcated, he would be liable to prosecution under r. 69. The mere fact that trees, which he had planted before the grazing ground was ever constituted or ever thought of, remained on the ground after he had been ejected could not possibly constitute occupation of the grazing ground by him.

The conviction and sentences are set aside and the fine which has been paid will be refunded. The Magistrate's order that the rubber trees must be cut down root and branch within a —Revision against acquittal—Interference, when justified—Police report, use of—Final report of investigating officer used without examining him, effect of—Error of law—Ground for setting aside acquittal.

The power of interference in revision with a judgment of acquittal is sparingly exercised and ordinarily only in cases where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice. But it is neither possible nor expedient to lay down general principles. The High Court will interfere where circumstances require it [p. 274, col. 2].

The final report and diary of an investigating officer, who was not called as a prosecution witness, might be used to suggest means of further elucidating points which needed clearing up but only of elucidating them by legal evidence. The use of such a report as evidence is an error in law but it is not by itself a good ground for setting aside an acquittal. [p. 276, col. 2].

An error of procedure of a grave character would afford ground for interference, but not a mere error of improper admission of evidence, which was not essential to the result which might have been come to wholly independently of it. [ibid.]

Criminal revision from a decision of the Sessions Judge, Gaya, dated the 31st March, 1924, reversing that of the Magistrate, First Class, Gaya, dated the 31st January 1924.

Messrs. G. C. Pal and S. S. Bose, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Hasan Imam and Rai T. N. Sahai, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision by the private prosecutor to set aside the acquittal of the opposite party by the Sessions Judge of Gaya on appeal.

There is no question that the High Court has power under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to set aside an acquittal by a Subordinate Court. In not a few instances this Court has exercised the power and the case of Jitan Dasadh v. Domoo Sahoo (1) is an example. But an examination of those instances appears to indicate that in practice the exercise of the power has been largely restricted to cases which have not been tried out. For instance the case cited dealt with an acquittal under section 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The practice of the Court accords with the rule laid down by Jenkins, C. J., in Faujdar Thakur v. Kasi Choudhuri (2). That rule has been quoted with approval by a Bench of this Court of which I was a member in Gulli Bhagat v. Narain Singh (3), and Raj-kishore Dubey v. Kamto Peshwar Dubey (4) (Criminal Revision, No. 229 of 1923). Thus the power of interference in revision with a judgment of acquittal is sparingly exercised and ordinarily only in cases where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice.

But it is not possible nor would it be expedient to lay down a general principle. The Court will interfere where the circumstances require it. And in the present case there is a differentiating consideration which was apparently not present in previous cases and which may have induced the Division Bench to issue a rule. The acquittal of the accused in the Sessions Court consequentially nullified an order of the Magistrate under section 545 granting financial compensation to the private prosecutor.

The facts necessary for an appreciation of the case for the petitioner are briefly as follows:—There is a pind which is plot No. 22 of Patkhaulia running north and south between the Diwarthan ahar (plots Nos. 10 to 21 of Patkhaulia) on the west and plot No. 23 of Patkhaulia and plot No. 483 of Majhauli on the east. Plot No. 483 is north of plot No. 23. East of plot No. 483 is plot No. 484 and east of plot No. 484 is plot No. 486 of the same village. The natural flow of the water is south to north. The prosecution case was that a gera or embankment extended from the pind eastward in the northern part of plots Nos. 483, 484 and 486, the object of which was to hold up the water so that the dhan fields to the north might be irrigated therefrom, and that the accused cut 25 cubits of that gera in plot No. 483 near the pind, so that the water behind the gera flowed away and was lost, and thus the supply of water for agricultural purposes was diminished. The accused denied the existence of any such gera and asserted on the authority of the fard-ab-pashi that the surplus water of the ahar flowed by a kanwah (overflow) situated in plot No. 21 at the northern end of the pind eastward into plot No. 483 of Majhauli and then back southward into plot No. 23 of Patkhaulia and then eastward. The complainant's case was that that kanwah no longer existed, the outlet being by a pakka baao (opening) in the southern end of the pind from the ahar into plot No. 23. The accused contended that the baao does not affect the kanwah, the former being intended to drain the ahar and the latter to discharge the surplus water when the ahar is full.

The Police reported the case to be false and the complainant impugned the report of the Investigating Sub-Inspector. The Trying Magistrate made a local inspection and found a gera existing in plots Nos. 484 and 486, and it is now clear that the gera in these plots as well as a broad bandh north of plot No. 23 do exist, the former apparently being made after the preparation in 1914 of the Survey Map. In his judgment the Magistrate held that the gera had existed for some years, that half of the gera across plot No. 483 had been cut by the accused, and that the opening which exists therein was not due to kanwah water passing through. He convicted the opposite party some under section 430 and some under section 430 read with section 114, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced them to fines half of which he directed to be given to the complainant as compensation under section 545 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

In appeal the learned Sessions Judge found that the case for the prosecution was not true, and that the appellants did not commit the offence for which they have been convicted. He accordingly allowed the appeal and directed the fines to be refunded.

It is now contended that his judgment is vitiated by an illegality patent on the face of the judgment in that he made use contrary to law of the final report of the Investigating Sub-Inspector of Police who was not examined as a witness. In support of the contention reference is made to the remarks of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Dal Singh v. Emperor (4). In reply Mr. Hasan Imam for the opposite party submits that the Judge had materials before him on the record and came to conclusions thereon on which he was bound to acquit and only tested them by a reference to the Police papers.

The learned Sessions Judge first considered whether the gera exists and found that it did not extend cross the narrow strip of land in plot No. 483 up to the pind. He pointed out that the Magistrate in his inspection note had merely spoken of the gera at this point as non-existent and continued.

"Obviously the most important witness on this point was the Sub-Inspector, who enquired into the case, and must have seen the place very soon after the occurrence. For some unexplained reason he has not been examined. If a substantial embankment, described by the prosecution witness as thigh high and three to three and a half cubits broad, had just been removed by the appellants for a distance of twenty to twenty-five cubits, as alleged, the Sub-Inspector must have seen marks of demolition and, as he has not been examined, I feel bound to point out that, in his final report he makes the following remarks, "the alleged gera 25 cubits in length which was said to have been cut, did not appear to have been freshly cut; rather it looks like a water course through which the surplus water of the villages Tekra, Madarpur and Patkhaulia ahar No. 22 flows." It appears therefore that had the Sub-Inspector been examined, he would not have supported the prosecution on this important point."

GANGA SINGH v. RAMBHAJAN SINGH.

Ganga Singh v. Rambhajan Singh.

"It would seem, therefore, that a view adverse to the prosecution case that a gera existed in plot No. 483, suggested itself to the Appellate Court because the Investigating Sub-Inspector had not been examined and that the Court tested that view by reference to an opinion which the Sub-Inspector had recorded on the point at issue.

The learned Judge then considered whether the kanwah still existed and after pointing out that on this point also the evidence of the Sub-Inspector would have been important, he found on the evidence on the record that it did exist in plot No. 21. He proceeded:

"I find therefore that the prosecution has failed to show that any gera existed in plot No. 483 or that the kanwah had ceased to exist or that the ahar no longer drains through plot No. 483 as recorded in Survey; rather it appears to me that the appellants are right on all these points."

He next pointed out that the band north of plot No. 23 did not affect the case as the water now flows direct east from that point, and found as follows:

"It is clear therefore that although a gera exists in plots Nos. 484 and 486 and no doubt holds up a certain amount of water for the irrigation of paddy it is confined to those plots, and did not extend into plot No. 483."

It is obvious that on such findings an acquittal must follow. But in the final paragraph of his judgment the learned Judge went on to give further reasons for holding that the prosecution case as presented to the Court was not true. Most of them are based on the record but he also again referred to the final report in connection with certain alleged statements of prosecution witnesses to the Investigating Officer as to which they had been cross-examined, and remarked "Here again the Sub-Inspector was a necessary witness in the case".

In referring to the final report of the Investigating Officer for the purposes mentioned the learned Sessions Judge erred in law. The final report and diary of the Investigating Officer might be used to suggest means of further elucidating points which needed clearing up but only of elucidating them by legal evidence. Thus the Sessions Judge on a perusal of the final report might well have examined the Sub-Inspector as a witness or directed him to be examined by the Trying Magistrate, and in that manner his testimony as to what he saw on the spot and what was said to him by witnesses, would subject to all just exceptions have become legal evidence.

But the mere fact that there has been an error of procedure is not by itself good ground for setting aside an acquittal. An error of procedure of a grave character would afford ground for interference but not a mere error of improper admission of evidence, which was not essential to a result which might have been come to wholly independently of it. Such is the law as laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Dal Singh v. Emperor (4) in respect of a conviction and the latter part of it is certainly not less applicable to an acquittal. In the present case it has been found that the testimony of the first independent person who visited the place of occurrence has been withheld by the prosecution so that an inference as to the non-existence of a gera in plot No. 483 may be drawn, that the prosecution story as to kanwah is false, and that of the accused true, that the entry in the Record of Rights as to the course of irrigation through plot No. 483 which is in favour of defence, has not been rebutted, that there was delay in lodging the first information, and that there is no reference therein to the mob of 100 men mentioned in the evidence in Court, which fact leads to an inference that it is a subsequent development in the prosecution case. These findings, none of which are vitiated by an error of law, are when taken in combination at least as consistent with the truth of the defence as with the truth of the prosecution story, and clearly the acquittal might have been, and from the tenor of the judgment apparently would have been reached on these considerations independently of the inadmissible evidence. An examination of the record also satisfied me that a different result is not probable, if a re-hearing of the appeal is directed.

In these circumstances the order of acquittal ought not to be set aside in revision. The Rule is accordingly discharged.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 494—Bigamy
—Mona Sikh—Anand marriage, validity of

A Hindu professing the Sikh religion though a Mona may have his marriage performed according to the anand rites, and such a marriage would be valid for all intents and purposes, such as an offence under section 494, Penal Code [p. 277, col. 2]

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Mianwali, dated the 9th February 1923, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, with section 30 powers, Mianwali, dated the 15th January 1923.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners Walu Ram and Musammât Kaki Bai have been found guilty by a Section 30 Magistrate at Mianwali of an offence under section 494, Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment each. On appeal to the Sessions Judge their conviction and the sentences have been upheld. They have now, filed two separate applications for revision to this Court, Walu Ram through Pandit Sheo Narain and Musammât Kaki Bai through jail.

The facts are fully stated in the judgments of the Courts below, and it is not necessary to recapitulate them. It is alleged on behalf of the prosecution that Musammât Kaki Bai, who was originally married to the complainant Sukha Ram, re-married Walu Ram during the lifetime of her former husband, and thus committed the offence of bigamy, punishable under section 494, Indian Penal Code. As against Walu Ram it is alleged that he knew that Musammât Kaki Bai was the wife of Sukha Ram, and that in re-marrying her he abetted the offence of bigamy. It has been found by the learned Sessions Judge that the charge of bigamy has been fully established and that both the accused are guilty.

In revision the first contention raised by Pandit Sheo Narain on behalf of the petitioner Walu Ram is that the prosecution has wholly failed to establish a valid marriage between Sukha Ram and Musammât Kaki Bai, and that the conviction should consequently be set aside. It is pointed out that in the complaint lodged by Sukha Ram it was stated that his marriage had been performed according to the Dharami Shastrin, while the evidence produced shows that his marriage with Musammât Kaki Bai was celebrated according to the anand rites. It is argued that Sukha Ram was an Arora by caste and was, therefore, incompetent to enter into an anand marriage. It is, however, not denied that a Hindu professing the Sikh religion may have his marriage performed according to the anand rites, and that such a marriage would be valid for all intents and purposes. In the present case it is clear from the statement of the complainant that though he is a mona yet he is a believer in the Sikh religion and that it was for this reason that he had his marriage performed in accordance with the avgad rites. In the Court below no objection was taken by the learned Pleader for the petitioner as regards the factum and validity of this marriage, and it was admitted that the evidence on the record clearly established a valid marriage between the complainant and Musammatt Kaki Bai. In face of this admission and the statement made by the complainant himself in the Court below that he was a Sikh by faith, it is now idle to contend that the marriage was not valid and that the conviction is consequently illegal.

Next it is argued that a valid marriage between Musammatt Kaki Bai and the accused Walu Ram has not been established. On this point the finding of fact arrived at by the learned Sessions Judge is that the marriage did take place, and I am not prepared to go behind this finding in revision. As regards the validity of the marriage, it is clear from the evidence produced on behalf of the prosecution that the marriage between the two accused was performed according to the Sikh rites, and that such a marriage would be valid if the husband professed the Sikh religion. The accused Walu Ram is the brother-in-law of one Gurdit Shah Singh who is obviously a Sikh by religion. The marriage is alleged to have been performed in the Dharamsala owned by Gurdit Shah Singh. No evidence was produced by the defence to show that the petitioner was a Hindu and not a Sikh by faith. The presumption in these circumstances would be in favour of the validity of the marriage, and I must, therefore, hold that the second contention raised by the petitioner is equally futile. I uphold the conviction but, in view of the fact that Musammatt Kaki Bai had been deserted by her first husband and not properly looked after by him, I also hold that at the time of her marriage with Walu Ram the latter very probably did not know that her first husband was living. In these circumstances the sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment would be rather excessive. The accused have already been in Jail for about ten months and are now on bail. In my opinion the punishment already undergone by them would be quite sufficient to meet the ends of justice, and I order accordingly.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 263.

Charge not framed—Conviction, legality of Section 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code is restricted in its application to cases in which no appeal lies, and exempts a Magistrate from framing a charge in such cases. But in a case tried summarily in which the sentence passed is appealable, there is no such exemption. The conviction of a person, therefore, in such a case without framing a charge is illegal.

Rule against an order of the Sessions Judge, Midnapur, dated the 4th June 1923, affirming that of the Additional District Magistrate, Midnapur, dated the 9th May 1922.

Babu Phamindra Nath Das, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Orr, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case has been convicted of theft and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 25. From the record and the explanation submitted it would appear that the petitioner pleaded guilty. But the Trying Magistrate and the learned Sessions Judge who heard the appeal appear to have overlooked the fact that this was a case in which an appealable sentence was passed. Section 263 applies to cases in which no appeal lies and exempts the Magistrate from framing a formal charge in such cases. But there is no such exemption in a case tried summarily in which as in the present case, the sentence passed is appealable. Further under section 262, Criminal Procedure

Code, it is necessary that in a summary trial the procedure prescribed for warrant cases shall be followed in warrant cases with certain exceptions. One of the distinguishing points between a summons and warrant case is that in a warrant case sufficient evidence to support the charge must be recorded before a charge can be framed and the accused called on to plead. This apparently was not done in the present case.

That being so we must hold that the conviction of the petitioner was illegal. We accordingly set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioner and direct that he be tried according to law. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—Order for maintenance, form of—Magistrate, whether can direct separate residence for wife.

Under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code a Magistrate is not allowed to make any other order except a monthly cash allowance.

An order directing the husband to give his wife 12 maunds of grain, each harvest and to provide her with a separate house is illegal.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Jullundur, with his letter No. 124, dated the 1st May 1924, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

REFERENCE.—The applicant in this case, a man called Atru, was directed by the Magistrate to give his wife 12 pucca maunds of grain each harvest and Rs. 2 per month by way of clothing allowance and he was also directed to provide the woman with a separate house at the village of Gosal. All this the Magistrate purported to do under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code. According to that section a Magistrate may direct that any person who having sufficient means neglects to maintain his wife, should pay her a monthly allowance not exceeding one hundred rupees. There is nothing in the Code which allows a Magistrate to make any other order except a monthly cash allowance. The order as to a separate residence and payment of grain seems to me totally illegal and I therefore forward the proceedings to the High Court with the recommendation that the order of the Magistrate be cancelled. This will not preclude the woman Musammat Mahon from applying to the Magistrate for a monthly allowance as allowed by section 488, Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. Sagar Chand, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—The order passed by the Magistrate is obviously an illegal one as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge and must therefore be, and is set aside. The finding of the Magistrate is that Atru's offer, to maintain his wife, if she lives with him, is a bona fide one and that the woman is not entitled to live separately and claim separate maintenance. Under the circumstances she is not entitled to separate maintenance and her application is dismissed.

prosecution witnesses and produce defence. But when the witnesses were re-called, the Court discovering its mistake, cancelled the charge, refused to permit cross-examination and gave judgment against the accused.

Held, that the accused were prejudiced in their defence owing to the wrong procedure of the Court and must be given a further opportunity of cross-examining prosecution witnesses.

Case reported by the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Lucknow at Unao, by his order, dated the 14th May 1924.

Mr. H. N. Das, for the Applicants.

Mr. P. C. Gupta, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.—This is an application in revision of an order passed by an Honorary Magistrate of the Third Class which has been referred to this Court by the Second Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow. The applicants were put upon their trial for an offence under sections 447 and 428 of the Indian Penal Code. Prosecution witnesses were examined and a few questions were asked by the applicants who were undefended. The Magistrate framed a charge and the applicants stated that they would cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and produce defence. A date was fixed and the prosecution witnesses were re-called at the expense of the applicants. On the day of hearing the Magistrate having ascertained that this was not a warrant case but a summons case, cancelled the charge, refused to permit the cross-examination of the witnesses and ultimately gave judgment against the applicants. As the learned Second Additional Judge points out the Magistrate's action was technically incorrect, and there is no doubt that this procedure led the applicants to suppose that they would have an opportunity of further cross-examination. This being so they can fairly say that they were prejudiced in their defence, and it is only proper that they should have a further opportunity of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses. I, therefore, accept the reference, set aside the conviction and sentences passed by the Court of first instance and direct that the case be taken up again from the point where the Magistrate refused to give the applicants a further right of cross-examination.

Identification evidence, when should be accepted.

A witness's evidence of identification given in Court should only be accepted if he identified the same person whom he had previously picked out in the identification parade in the Jail [p 281, col 1].

Appeal from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, with powers under section 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Jhang, dated the 17th March 1924.

Chaudhri Zafarullah Khan, for the Appellant.

Mr Abdul Rashid, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a joint appeal by 13 persons who have been convicted of the abduction of an unmarried girl Musammât Rani, daughter of Langru, under section 366 of the Indian Penal Code and have been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment each.

A great deal of violence was used in the abduction, and the medical evidence shows that some 12 of the prosecution witnesses received more or less severe injuries. One of them Mohabata (P. W. No. 25) received a grievous injury on the head and Raju (P. W. No. 20) had his ulna bone broken. Two others received injuries from sharp-edged weapons and many other head injuries were caused by blunt weapons. The facts have been given in great detail in the judgment of the Magistrate, and it is not denied that the girl was abducted. Counsel, however, urges that the motive alleged on behalf of the prosecution is a very improbable one. He has, however, laid special stress on the cases of five of the appellants in regard to whom he urges that the evidence of identification is weak. In my opinion there is nothing very improbable in the alleged motive, and the only important question which, it appears to me, has to be decided is which of the appellants, if any, took part in the abduction. I have carefully considered the evidence of the eye-witnesses, and I find that in the case of eight of the appellants at all events there is ample evidence in support of their convictions. These are Sardara, Sohna, Majhi, Hassan Ali, Nura, Amira, Dalmir and Thoba. The cases of Manak, Nadri, Salihon, Mammin and Mahni need to be considered in detail. During the course of the Police investigation an identification parade was held in the Jail at which prosecution witnesses picked out certain persons as having taken part in the abduction. The same witnesses again identified some or all of the accused persons in Court. It is contended and I consider with force that a witness's evidence of identification given in Court should only be accepted if he identified the same persons whom he had previously picked out in the identification parade in the Jail. Now, as regards Manak I find that the only evidence against him is that of P. W. Nos 5, 8 and 17. P. W. No 5, however, did not identify him in the Jail, and though P. W. No 8 identified him in the Jail, he did not specifically name him in Court but only specifically named accused Nos 1, 2, 4 and 8. (I am adopting the numbers given in the judgment of the learned Magistrate). P. W. No 17 also included him in the 'rest of the accused' and did not name him specifically at the trial. In my opinion the evidence against Manak is insufficient for his conviction.

I next take the case of Nadri. The only witnesses, who gave evidence against him in Court, are P. W. No. 5, P. W. No. 8 and P. W. No 17. P. W. No 5 did not identify him in the Jail, and the evidence of P. W. Nos. 8 and 17 is open to the same objection as in the case of Manak.

I next take the case of Salihon. He was only identified in Court by P. W. Nos. 13 and 14 who did not identify him in Jail. Counsel for the Crown admits that the evidence against Manak, Nadri and Salihon is very weak.

As regards Mammin the evidence of P. W. Nos 8 and 9 is not sufficiently specific and the only witness whose evidence is worth anything against him is P. W. No. 21, the daughter-in-law of Langru. She admittedly knew him before and yet his name was not mentioned in the first information report. Under these circumstances I do not think it would be safe to base his conviction upon the uncorroborated evidence of one witness.

Next comes the case of Mahni. P. W. Nos. 8 and 9 gave evidence against him which is open to the objection already stated, and the only witness who gives any important evidence against him is P. W. No 11. This man admittedly has given evidence against him on a previous occasion, and there is also the fact that Mahni belongs to a different tribe from that of the other appellants, and I do not see why he should have joined them.

I, therefore, accept the appeal so far as to set aside the convictions and sentences of Manak, Nadri, Salihon, Mammin and Mahni, and acquit them and direct that they be forthwith released from custody.

It is urged that the sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment passed upon the rest of the appellants is too heavy. With the exception of Dalmir who is a boy of 18 or 19 years of age, all of them are grown up men. The offence was a very serious one and they could all have been convicted of causing grievous hurt under sections 325 and 149 of the Indian Penal Code as well as of abduction and could have been sentenced separately. The abduction was committed by a large number of men and great violence was used; and under the circumstances, I cannot consider the sentence to be excessive except in the case of Dalmir. Dalmir is one of two sons of Yara who is said to be absconding and to have taken a principal part in the occurrence, and he probably acted under the influence of his father and elder brother. I, therefore, reduce the sentence in his case to one of two years' rigorous imprisonment. As regards the other appellants the appeal is dismissed.

If a Legal Practitioner, whose certificate is cancelled for a serious offence in the course of his professional duties, realising the gravity of his offence, makes up his mind for the future to live a straightforward and honest life and the High Court is satisfied that since the cancellation of his certificate, 7 years back, he has honestly endeavoured to reinstate his character, it is the manifest duty of the High Court to give him another chance by cancelling the order debaring him from further practice. [p. 283, cols. 1 & 2.]

An application by a Mukhtar for cancellation of the order dated the 12th March, 1917, debaring him from practice and for his reinstatement.

Messrs. Hasan Imam, K. P. Jayaswal, J. P. Sinha, L. K. Jha and S. Nooruddin, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an application on behalf of Mathura Prasad Singh formerly practising as a mukhtar at Motihari. He was guilty of a serious offence in the course of his professional duties which I need not refer to in detail here as it has been the subject of an enquiry and was referred to again when an application was made to this Court for his reinstatement. On the 12th March, 1917, in consequence of the offence to which I have referred, his case was dealt with by a Bench of three Judges of this Court and owing to the gravity of the offence which was proved, his certificate was cancelled and he was debarred from further practice. Five years later in May 1922 he applied to this Court asking the Court to reinstate him in his practice as a mukhtar alleging that since he was debarred some five years earlier he had endeavoured to lead an honest and straightforward life and certain certificates from various people giving him a good character were produced before the Court. We considered, however, on that occasion, in view of the gravity of his offence, that the probationary period through which he had passed was not sufficient to enable us to arrive definitely at the conclusion that he had in fact reinstated his character so as to make it safe for the Court to reinstate him as a member of an honourable profession. The certificates produced on that occasion were not very full and did not really give the Court sufficient information upon which it could safely act. Consequently the application was at that time refused.

The present application, made some two years later is fortified by full particulars of the life which the petitioner has led since he was debarred from further practice in March 1917. It appears that in 1918 he did some work for Mr. Kailaspati, a Vakil of this Court and Mr. Kailaspati has given him a certificate of good character stating that he found him well behaved, diligent and honest in his work. In the year 1919, he was engaged as an Assistant Manager in the Cawnpore Branch of the "General Trading Company" during a part of that year. He was in charge of the stock of papers as well as of the sales and cash and the certificate given by Mr. Upadhyaya, a Vakil of this Court, whose family was connected with that business, states that he discharged his duties faithfully and honestly, and that subsequently in the same year he worked at Mr. Upadhyaya's zemindari at Ramnagar in the Champaran district being partly in charge of the collection work and partly in charge of Court cases, that he proved diligent and trustworthy and did his work well. Mr. Upadhyaya further says that he comes of a respectable kayasth family. In the early part of the year 1920 he obtained employment with the "Jharia Iron and Brass Works" at Jharia in Manbhum and the proprietor of that concern states that during that time he found him honest and truthful. Later in the same year he worked for about six months with the "Choudhury Coal Co." also at Jharia. He kept correspondence and accounts and he also purchased and sold coal. The proprietor of that concern states that he found him straightforward and reliable, and he left his service of his own accord when he got employment with Messrs. Dulichand-Prabhudayal of Jharia. He then entered the service of the Dulichand Prabhudayal Coal Co. at Jharia in the year 1920, the proprietor of which concern Prabhudayal Gupta states that he thoroughly satisfied himself as to his character and ability before giving him an appointment. He was appointed as manager of the firm in January 1921 and since that time he has remained in that service. His duties were to look after Court cases concerning the firm, the purchase and sale of coal and to keep accounts and also to go on occasions to the mufassil to realise arrears from customers and he had the management of work on a considerable scale and large sums of money passed through his hand during that time. He was getting Rs. 50 per month plus a commission upon the net profits and the proprietor certified that his conduct has been quite satisfactory and praiseworthy and he has proved himself trustworthy and he strongly recommends him for any position of trust.

That shortly is the history of this young man since he was debarred from further practice in 1917. There are in addition a number of certificates from judicial and executive officers at Dhanbad, that is, in the neighbourhood in which he was residing and in which he was employed. They are all to the same effect that they have found him honest and straightforward and further that they have found him courteous and self-respecting. I need not refer to them in detail. I am glad to find also that in the petition which he himself has presented to this Court, he fully recognises the gravity of his offence and has expressed his great penitence and his determination to set himself a high standard of morality and honesty as a guide in his future life. I have no doubt that this young man whose certificate was cancelled after two years' practice as a mukhtar has since that time honestly endeavoured to reinstate his character. He has also realised that his offence was a grave one and has made up his mind for the future to live a straightforward and honest life. In these circumstances seeing that it was seven years ago that he was debarred I think our manifest duty is to give him another chance. I am satisfied that he is endeavouring to lead an honest and straightforward life and I hope in the future he will continue to do so. I think that his application should be granted. The order made on the 12th March, 1917, debarring him from further practice will be cancelled and he may apply in the ordinary course for the grant of a fresh certificate.

PRAYAG GOPE V. EMPEROR.

If this has not been done, the High Court on revision will ordinarily remand the case for a finding with reference to admissible evidence only.

Petition under sections 435 and 139 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Joint Magistrate, Penukonda, in Criminal Appeal No. 31 of 1923, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Saeistadar, Second Class, Magistrate, Kalyanadurg, in Calendar Case No 115 of 1922.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioner.
Mr. T. Richmond, for the Respondent.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The Appellate Magistrate erred in treating as evidence against the first accused admissions of the second accused. Under section 187 of the Indian Evidence Act, the improper admission of evidence is not ground of itself for a reversal of any decision, if it appears to the Court that, independently of the evidence improperly admitted, there is sufficient evidence to justify the decision. If I were competent to deal with facts, I should ignore the evidence which ought not to have been admitted and then consider whether there still remains sufficient evidence to support the conviction, see Mohur Singh v. Ghureeba (1). But I am dealing with the matter in revision and I cannot adopt this course. Ordinarily in such circumstances, the case will be remanded and the Magistrate will be directed to give a finding with reference to admissible evidence only. But unfortunately there was already one remand and I do not think any useful purpose will be served by prolonging this enquiry. It further appears that in so far as the civil rights of the parties are concerned they have entered into a compromise and that a decree has been passed giving effect to it. Dr. Swaminadhan says that he will be quite satisfied if I reduce the sentence to the period of imprisonment already undergone. I think, in the circumstances, this is quite fair and I accordingly make that order and direct that the fine if it has been collected shall be refunded. The balance of the sentence shall be remitted.

JUDGMENT.

Adami, J.—This case comes before the Court in its revisional jurisdiction. The petitioners have been sentenced to various terms of rigorous imprisonment under sections 379 and 144 and 143, Indian Penal Code. The first two petitioners have been sentenced to 18 months under sections 379, 75 and 6 months under section 144; the sentences running concurrently. The other three have been sentenced to three months under section 143 and a fine of Rs. 50 under section 379. The value of the properties stolen was Rs. 50.

2 Suh. P. C. J. 379 (P. C.).

EMPEROR V. BALDEO PRASAD.

Mr. Agarwala on behalf of the petitioners puts forward three points. The first is that after the defence had closed their case, the Court called the complainant as a Court witness and examined him and failed thereafter to examine the accused under section 342, Criminal Procedure Code. The second point is that the case was tried by a Deputy Magistrate of the Second Class who after convicting the petitioners, forwarded the case to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for sentence because he held that the sentences which the petitioners should receive would be greater than he had power of inflicting. The third point is that though the common object of the unlawful assembly was the theft of crops, the petitioners have been sentenced separately under sections 379 and 143 or 144.

With regard to the first point I do not think that this Court will be inclined to interfere since the petitioners seem to be in no way prejudiced. The complainant was called as a Court witness and examined as such by the Court. The judgment of the lower Appellate Court shows that the Court questioned this complainant not as to occurrence but as to some matter in relation to the title of the lands. The petitioners had a chance of cross-examining him but refrained from doing so. If they were unwilling to cross-examine him as a Court witness it would be unlikely that they would have been anxious to make any statement to explain away any evidence given by the complainant as a Court witness. I do not think that section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, can be brought into play where a Court witness is examined, be he complainant or any other person.

With regard to the second point, section 349 clearly states that if the Magistrate considers a person to be guilty and to deserve a larger penalty than the Magistrate himself can impose, the Magistrate should send the case to a superior Court for imposing a fitting sentence. In the present case the Deputy Magistrate of the Second Class convicted the petitioners. This was wrong. After an expression of opinion as to the petitioner's guilt, the Magistrate should have forwarded the case without any record of conviction.

On the third point there is no doubt that the common object being such as it is described in the charge the petitioners could not be separately convicted and sentenced under the two sections—section 379 and section 143 or section 144 and the conviction and sentence under one of these two sections must be set aside. The difficulty is to know which conviction and sentence should be set aside. If the conviction and sentences under section 379 are set aside, then also, the two petitioners, who have been subjected to a heavier punishment by reason of their previous conviction, will also escape the effects of the previous convictions. Ordinarily the case is one which should go back for re-trial owing to the Trial Court not carrying out the provisions of section 349, but as pointed out by Mr. Agarwala the case has a larger element of civil nature in it and also the petitioners have already served a considerable part of their sentence.

With regard to the previous convictions it is to be remembered that those convictions were passed in 1898 and 1902 and there is nothing to show that these persons have since then led otherwise than a good life.

We set aside the convictions under section 379, Indian Penal Code and reduce the sentences to the period already undergone under sections 143 and 144. The fine under section 379, if paid, will be refunded.

Sen. J.—I agree.

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Cawnpore, dated the 9th April 1924.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Haider Husain, an agent of two persons, Baldeo Prasad and Lachman Prasad, lodged a complaint under section 409 of the Indian Penal Code against one Nand Kishore, on the 10th of April 1923. That case was enquired into and dismissed under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code on the 20th of April 1923. The subsequent proceedings deal with the question of whether Haider Husain and Baldeo Prasad and Lachman Prasad should or should not be prosecuted under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code for having lodged or abetted the lodging of a false complaint against Nand Kishore. In view of these subsequent proceedings and the delay that had occurred in taking action against Baldeo Prasad and Lachman it is important to note that no new facts are alleged to have come to light since the 20th of April 1923, when the case against Nand Kishore was dismissed. This is important because there has been a tendency to lay down a hard and fast rule that delay is a ground for setting aside an order for prosecution. It may under certain circumstances be almost a sufficient ground in itself but in other cases it may be no ground at all. It is possible to imagine a case in which the commission of an alleged offence may not have actually come to light for many months or even years after it had been committed. In the present case it is clear that all the facts which justified, if they do justify, the prosecution of these men were known on or before the 20th of April 1923 when the case was dismissed.

The next step was an application on the 23rd of April 1923 by Nand Kishore to Mr. Christie, then City Magistrate, who had tried the original case for sanction to prosecute Haider Husain under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code. No attempt was then made to obtain sanction to prosecute Haider Husain's employers Baldeo Prasad and Lachman Prasad. The sanction was granted on the 6th of July 1923. Eventually owing to the passing of Act XVIII of 1923 which came into force on the 1st of September 1923, it was thought necessary and steps were taken to alter the sanction granted by Mr. Christie to a complaint under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This apparently, so far as I am informed, brought the matter to the notice of the prosecuting Inspector who then applied on the 30th of October to Babu Prem Chand Seth who had succeeded Mr. Christie as City Magistrate, for an order under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code against Baldeo Prasad and Lachman Prasad, the employers of Haider Husain. It will be noticed then that no steps whatever were taken against Baldeo Prasad and Lachman Prasad from the 20th of April when the original case was dismissed to the 30th of October 1923. The learned District Magistrate in referring the case speaks of "the obstructive tactics of the accused." It is true that Haider Husain was taking the matter of his own prosecution from Court to Court. It is probably true that that involved the record going from the Court of the City Magistrate to the Sessions Court and to the High Court, but I cannot see even if that is so, that it accounts in any way whatever for Nand Kishore not having applied to prosecute Baldeo Prasad and Lachman Prasad at the same time that he applied against Haider Husain when all the materials that he was ever going to get were already in his possession and in that of the Court. Nor do I think that the prosecuting Inspector was justified in making an application against Baldeo Prasad and Lachman Prasad so many months afterwards. It is quite likely, and I am certainly ready to accept, that he was in no way to blame for an application in regard to these two men not having been made before. But I do think that after a lapse of nearly six months he should have declined to take any action. It is not necessary for me to determine whether this delay would or would not be sufficient in itself for setting aside the order for prosecution as there are other points which will have to be dealt with and one of which will appear by itself sufficiently strong to make it inevitable that the reference of the District Magistrate be returned and the order of the Assistant Sessions Judge quashing the complaint under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code against Baldeo Prasad and Lachman Prasad be maintained.

To make the next point clear it is necessary to add one or two further facts. On the 30th of October 1923, as I have already stated, the Prosecuting Inspector applied to prosecute Baldeo Prasad and Lachman Prasad in the Court of Babu Prem Chand Seth who had now become City Magistrate. On the 21st of January 1924, the Prosecuting Inspector applied again to Mr. Christie, now no longer in charge of the City, for an order under section 476 of the Criminal procedure Code against Baldeo Prasad and Lachman Prasad. It is not very clear how he came to make a second application, whether it was of his own initiative because he thought it better to apply to the Magistrate who had already granted a similar order against Haider Husain or whether it was due to some objection raised by Baldeo Prasad and Lachman Prasad in the Court of Babu Prem Chand Seth. Both suggestions are made but it is not very material to determine exactly what motives led to the filing of the second application. It was, in fact, filed and Mr. Christie, on the 8th of February 1924, passed an order under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code against Baldeo Prasad and Lachman Prasad. That order was appealed to the learned Assistant Sessions Judge, Mr. Ram Chander Saksena, who set it aside on the 14th of March 1924. He has referred to the delay that took place but the real point on which he based his order setting it aside is that Mr. Christie had no jurisdiction to pass the order under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code when he had ceased to be acting in the capacity of City Magistrate in which capacity he had decided the original case. The learned Assistant Sessions Judge refers to the cases Chuni Lal v Harbans Rai (1) and Mallu Khan v. King Emperor (2). He remarks that authority to the contrary has been shown to him but he does not say what authority. The learned District Magistrate in referring the case says "my object in making this application is to obtain a clear ruling of the Hon'ble Court with reference to proceedings under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, in the case of Magistrate who has been transferred to another Court before such proceedings are taken." The learned District Magistrate remarks "there appears to be a support for both the views expressing (sic) in the rulings of the Hon'ble High Court." He does not tell this Court wherein he finds the conflict. It appears to me beyond the shadow of a doubt that Mr. Christie had no jurisdiction whatever. It has been clearly pointed out in the case of Muhammad Ibrahim v. Emperor (3) and In the matter of Nawal Singh (4), that a successor in a Court is the same Court as his predecessor in that Court. The corollary to this is perfectly clear that the predecessor who has departed to another Court can no longer be held to be a presiding officer of the First Court. There have been some doubts expressed by other High Courts, but they have since mostly, if not all, come to this view. In any case the view of this Court has long since been clear. Mr J. M. Banerji for the accused also rightly relies on the fact that the wording of section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code is now different to that under the old Code, making the matter still more clear. He points out that now the offence must be one which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court. In the present case that cannot by any stretch of imagination mean anything but the Court of the City Magistrate and that it is only that Court that can pass the order under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The last point that I have to notice is that the District Magistrate himself referred this case to the High Court through the Sessions Judge instead of through the Legal Remembrancer. Had I noticed this, when the reference was first put up, it would undoubtedly have been my duty to refuse to accept the reference and to return it to be produced before this Court through the proper channel. As to what that proper channel is, a reference to the cases of Ram Bahsh v. Durjan (5); Emperor v. Jamma Bai (6), and Emperor v. Ganga (7) will make clear. So far as this Court is concerned it is for the District Magistrate to act either through the Government Advocate or through the Legal Remembrancer as he may be advised to be the proper course. I understand from the Assistant Government Advocate that he should act through the Legal Remembrancer but that is not for me to determine. It is sufficient for me to say that this Court will not ordinarily accept a reference direct. When the matter was brought to my attention I thought as the case was now before the Court it was best to deal with it. The object of the rule, I have stated, is sufficiently clear, for it only carries out the principle underlying section 435, clause (4), namely, that there should be no judicial action by an inferior Court by way of criticism of its superior Court.

For the reasons I have already given the order of the Assistant Sessions Judge is maintained and the reference returned.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 250
—Compensation without examination of all prosecution witnesses

Compensation under section 250, Criminal Procedure Code, can be awarded only after the complainant has had an opportunity of producing all his evidence.

Where, therefore, the Court refuses to examine all the witnesses produced by the complainant whether their names appear in the list filed or not, the order for compensation is illegal.

Criminal revision from an order of the Township Magistrate, Kawa, in Criminal Regular No. 10 of 1923.

Mr. Mg Tsain, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—Compensation under section 250 can be awarded only after the complainant has had an opportunity of producing all his evidence. In this case, the Trial Court refused to examine two witnesses whose names did not appear in the list filed but who were brought to the Court by the complainant in order to save expense. Thus the complainant was illegally prevented from putting forward his whole case.

On the merits, also, there appears to have been a genuine dispute as to the boundaries of the land, and it is possible that the complainant acted on a mistaken belief.

Be that as it may, the failure of the Township Magistrate to comply with the law vitiates his order for compensation and I must set it aside.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss 8, 20—Grant of heritable and transferable rights by zemindar—Validity of grant—Fixed-rate tenancy—Thekedar—Mortgage of non-transferable rights, validity of.

The grant by a zemindar of a lease in perpetuity giving the lessee heritable and transferable rights, does not create a tenancy at a fixed rate, inasmuch as a fixed-rate tenancy cannot be created by a contract with the zemindar, and any rights which can be granted by the zemindars must be consistent with the provisions of section 20 of the U. P. Tenancy Act. Such a lessee might be said to be a thekeedar within the meaning of the said section but even in that case his interest is not transferable. Therefore if such a lessee mortgages his rights under the lease, the mortgage is void and unenforceable against the mortgagor in his lifetime, or after his death without having an heir, against the zemindar. All that the mortgagee would be entitled to is a simple money-decree against the assets of his mortgagor [p 288, col 2, p 290, col 1].

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 23rd November 1922.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Musammatt Naurasi was the tenant of a certain holding from which the zemindars sought to eject her. A settlement was subsequently arrived at between her and her husband, Mata Badal, on the one hand and the zemindars on the other, whereby the latter granted a lease in perpetuity to Mata Badal of the same holding, giving the lessee heritable and transferable rights. Some time after this lease was executed Mata Badal and Musammatt Naurasi made a possessory mortgage of the holding in favour of the predecessor-in-title of the present plaintiffs for a sum of Rs. 200, out of which Rs. 12 were taken for the payment of certain arrears of rent due to the zemindars. The validity of the mortgage forms the subject-matter of contention in this appeal. The Court of First Instance found that the mortgage was invalid, inasmuch as it offended against the provisions of section 20 of the Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901). The lower Appellate Court, however, came to the conclusion that the mortgage was valid under section 20, clause 3, of the said Act. Section 20 provides that the interest of an occupancy tenant or a non-occupancy tenant, other than a thekeedar, shall not be transferable in execution of a decree of a Civil or Revenue Court, or otherwise, than by a voluntary transfer between persons in favour of whom, as co-sharers in the tenancy, such a right originally arose, or who have become by succession co-sharers therein, but the interest of a thekeedar shall, subject to the terms of his lease, be heritable but not transferable. Both Mata Badal and Musammatt Naurasi are dead. They left two sons who were impleaded as defendants to the present suit, but both of them died during the pendency of the suit, leaving no issue. The zemindars thereupon took possession of the tenancy and they resisted the claim of the plaintiffs to enforce their mortgage. In the plaint the tenancy mortgaged was described as a tenancy at a fixed rate, but the Trial Court has found that the mortgagors were not tenants at fixed rates within the meaning of section 8 of the U. P. Tenancy Act. It is immaterial whether Musammatt Naurasi and her husband were non-occupancy tenants or occupancy tenants before they took a permanent lease of the holding from the zemindars. As observed in Bathchi v. Bathchi (1) a fixed rate tenancy cannot be created by a contract with the zemindar, and any rights which can be granted by the zemindars must be consistent with the provisions of section 20 of the U. P. Tenancy Act, which forbid the sale of a holding in execution of a decree of a Civil or Revenue Court, and also a voluntary transfer, except in favour of persons who are co-sharers in the tenancy. It might be said that Mata Badal was a thekeedar of transferable rights under the lease granted to him by the zemindars, but the interest of a thekeedar is not permitted by law to be transferable. The zemindars took no step to avoid the mortgage within the time allowed by law, but all the same the holding cannot be sold in execution of a decree, and as pointed out in Ram Sarup v. Kishan Lal (2) the mortgage cannot, despite the contract contained in the lease, be enforced. The zemindars claim the holding by right of escheat and despite the covenant entered in the original lease, if the mortgage was void and unenforceable as against the mortgagors, it cannot be enforced against the zemindars after the escheat, nor can the holding be put up to sale in enforcement of the mortgage. The mortgagees can only get a simple money-decree against the assets of their mortgagors in the hands of the defendants, if any. The appeal is therefore allowed and in lieu of the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court a simple decree for money will be prepared with costs incurred by the mortgagees in the Courts below and future interest from the date of the suit till payment at 6 per cent. per annum, against the assets of the deceased. Considering the peculiar circumstances of the case and the conduct of the zemindars who are seeking to deprive the mortgagees of their money after they had given the lessee transferable rights, I make no order as to the costs incurred by the defendants-appellants here or any of the Courts below.

Co-sharer—Joint land—Hat started by two co-sharers—Subsequent improvement by one—Other co-sharer whether excluded from profits

When a hat is started on a joint land by two co-sharers, the fact that after the hat has been established one co-sharer makes improvements in the hat at his own expense, does not give him the right to exclude the other co-sharer from the hat that had been started for their joint benefit. [p 291, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Birbhum, dated the 17th January 1921.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal and Babu Jyotish Chandra Sarkar, for the Appellants.

Babu Sitaram Banerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case as found by the lower Court are as follows:—The land in suit about 1½ bighas in area appertains to a Revenue free Mahal bearing Touzi No. 237 of the Birbhum Collectorate. The plaintiff, known as the Raja of Hetampur, is the patnidar of 12½ annas share of that Estate and the defendants are owners of the remaining 3½ annas share of the zemindari. On the 6th Pos 1320, corresponding to December 1913, a hat was opened on this land. It was the plaintiff's case that he alone opened this hat, but the finding is that it was established both by the plaintiff and the defendants. At first some thatched huts were erected from materials collected by the plaintiff's manager and the defendants from their joint tenant. About a month later it was proposed to build corrugated iron sheds in place of the thatched huts. The defendants were asked to pay their share of the expenses of erecting these iron sheds and they expressed their inability to do so. Thereupon the plaintiff had the iron sheds built at his own cost. The plaintiff also at this time set up a marble slab describing the bazar as Brahma Bazar after his son Brahma Narain Chakravarti. In the year 1325 the defendants attempted to levy tolls and there was dispute which led to proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, being instituted. These proceedings were dropped and to prevent future disputes the plaintiff instituted the present suit for declaration of his right to take the 16-annas share of the profits arising from the hat. On these findings of fact the lower Court has granted the plaintiff a decree declaring his exclusive title to that portion of the hat on which the corrugated iron sheds stand and to the exclusive profits arising therefrom. The remainder of the claim has been disallowed.

We are unable to agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that on the facts found the plaintiff is entitled to a decree declaring his rights to the whole of the profits arising from any portion of the hat. The law to be applied in a case when one co-sharer takes exclusive possession of joint land is laid down in the cases of Watson & Co. v. Ramchand Dutt (1) and Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein (2) and our attention has also been drawn to the case of Madan Mohan Saha v. Rajab Ali (3). But the principles laid down in these cases are not applicable to the facts as found in the present case. Since the hat was started on joint land by both the plaintiff and the defendants, it is not a case of one co-sharer taking possession to the exclusion of the other. The fact that after the hat had been established the plaintiff made improvement in the hat at his own expense would not give him the right that he claims in this suit to exclude his co-sharer from the hat that had been started for their joint benefit.

On behalf of the plaintiff is filed a cross-objection to this appeal and it is contended that the finding of fact should be reversed and it should be held that the plaintiff established the hat after purchasing the rights of the tenants in occupation of the land. In support of this he relies on the deeds of sale Exhibit 1 executed by one Katikan Bibi in 1903 in favour of Ishan Mudi conveying 10 cottas of rent free land, Exhibit 3 a deed of sale by which Ishan Mudi sold this land and an additional 5 cottas of rent paying land to the plaintiff on the 3rd February 1919, and also Exhibit 4 a deed of sale by which the widow of Gadadhar sold some land to the plaintiff on the 2nd March 1919. These two last deeds recite that the land was actually sold to the plaintiff before the establishment of the hat. But the evidence given to prove these deeds does not support the recitals in them. Ishan Mudi himself says that the land was forcibly taken from him by the zemindar, and it was not until he threatened to bring a suit that the sale deed was executed. The witness who proves Exhibit 4 says nothing about any purchase prior to the date of the deed. It is also suggested that the witnesses for the plaintiff who support the defendants' story that the hat was started by both the plaintiff and defendants have been induced to give false evidence because the defendants have considerable influence in the locality. We cannot reject the evidence of the plaintiff's own witnesses on this ground. Not one or two but practically all the plaintiff's witnesses agree that the hat was started by both parties. We cannot believe that if the land had really been bought by the plaintiff before the hat was started he would have asked his co-sharer defendants to join with him in starting the hat. We have no doubt that this fact is true and this is fatal to the case for the plaintiff.

The result is that the plaintiff's suit fails. We accordingly decree this appeal, reverse the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the suit. The defendants-appellants will get their costs in this and in the lower Court.

Where a case is transferred from a Small Cause Court to an Honorary Munsifs Court under section 8 (2) of U. P. Honorary Munsifs Act and not under section 24, Civil Procedure Code, the Honorary Munsif, for the purpose of hearing the case, does not become a Small Cause Court Judge and, therefore, his decision is appealable.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The only ground urged in this revision is the fourth ground which was added by a subsequent application. It is suggested that because this case was transferred from the Court of a Judge of Small Causes to the Court of a Honorary Munsif that therefore the Honorary Munsif for the purpose of hearing the case became a Small Cause Court Judge and no appeal lay from his decision to the Subordinate Judge. This is to assume that the transfer was under section 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and to ignore the effect of section 9 of Act II of 1896 under which the Honorary Munsif is appointed. He is declared by that section to be a Civil Court under the Bengal, North-Western

The breach of an undertaking given to the Court by a litigant, pending proceedings, on the faith of which the Court sanctions a particular course of action or inaction, is misconduct amounting to contempt [p. 285, col. 1].

When a person is guilty of such contempt he places himself in a perilous situation so as not to be heard by the Court till he has purged his contempt [ibid.]

The Court, thereupon, proceeded to try the suit on the merits and it was eventually dismissed. Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Midnapore, dated the 16th, September 1922.

Mr. S. C. Maity and Babu Apurba Charan Maakerjee, for the Appellant.
Babus Hamendra Nath Sen and Gopendra Nath Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a question of some novelty and of considerable importance.

The plaintiff, who is the appellant in this Court, instituted a suit for recovery of possession of land and mesne profits in the Court of the Second Munsif at Midnapur. The subject-matter of the litigation was valued at Rs. 600 and Court-fee was paid accordingly. The defendants objected that the suit had been undervalued and that if properly valued it would be found to be beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court where it had been instituted. This point was investigated and on the 1st December, 1921, the Munsif came to the conclusion that the value of the subject-matter of the litigation was Rs. 6,000. The result was that the plaint was returned to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court. On the 21st December, 1921, the plaint was presented in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Midnapore; but notwithstanding the finding of the Munsif, the suit was valued at Rs. 1,125 and Court-fee was paid accordingly. The defendants objected that the suit had been undervalued. The objection was manifestly of vital importance from a two-fold standpoint. In the first place, if the value of the suit was Rs. 6,000 instead of Rs. 1,125, the forum of a possible appeal would be the High Court and not the Court of the District Judge. In the second place, if the value was Rs. 6,000 instead of Rs. 1,125, a considerable amount of additional Court-fee would be leviable from the plaintiff. The suit was taken up for trial on the 14th September, 1922. The hearing lasted for three days and on the 16th September, 1922, the suit was dismissed on the merits. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge embodied a direction upon the plaintiff to pay the deficit Court-fee. The parties are not agreed as to what happened at the trial and how this order came to be made. This much is clear that the Court-fee demanded by the Subordinate Judge was not paid. The decree dated the 23rd October, 1922, recited, first, that although the suit had been valued at Rs. 1,125 by the plaintiff, its value had been determined by the Subordinate Judge to be Rs. 6,000, and, secondly, that the deficit Court-fee had not been paid up to that date by the plaintiff. On the 3rd February 1923, the decree was amended in respect of costs. In the decree as originally drawn up, the costs had been calculated on the basis of a valuation of Rs. 1,125. The decree was amended and costs were calculated on the basis of a valuation of Rs. 6,000. The decree further directed that separate costs would be paid to the different sets of defendants. The plaintiff, who was apparently satisfied with the decree as originally drawn up, now found himself in a position of embarrassment, and on the 20th April, 1923, lodged the present appeal in this Court against the amended decree. The grounds were directed not to the merits but to the question of costs. The memorandum of appeal was valued at the difference between the original and amended costs and the Court-fee was paid accordingly. The Stamp Reporter did not fail to notice the note made in the decree that the deficit Court-fee had not been paid by the plaintiff, but the question could not be considered at that stage, because till the records were received, it could not be ascertained whether the amount due from the plaintiff had or had not been deposited in the lower Court. On the receipt of the records, the matter has now been placed before us for orders.

The appellant has urged that there is no provision of the law which entitles this Court to compel him to pay the deficit Court-fee. The respondent has relied upon the provisions of section 12 of the Court Fees Act, 1870. The first clause of the section provides that the decision of the Trial Court upon the question of valuation is final as between the parties to the suit. The second clause provides for the correction of error, if any, committed in this respect by the Trial Court. The second clause is in these terms.

"But whenever any such suit comes before a Court of Appeal, reference or revision, if such Court considers that the said question has been wrongly decided, to the detriment of the revenue, it shall require the party by whom such fee has been paid to pay so much additional fee as would have been payable had the question been rightly decided and the provision of section 10, paragraph ii, shall apply."

Paragraph ii of section 10 provides that where, in the opinion of the Court, the valuation of the suit has been wrongly estimated and the plaintiff has consequently been required to pay an additional fee, the suit shall be stayed until the additional fee is paid. If the additional fee is not paid within such time as the Court shall fix, the suit shall be dismissed.

The appellant contends that section 12 is by its terms inapplicable. The question of valuation has not been wrongly decided by the Trial Court, and though there has been a detriment of the revenue, it is attributable, not to an erroneous decision of the Court upon the question of valuation, but to the failure of the plaintiff to carry out the direction of the Court. In these circumstances, it is argued that clause (2) of section 12 is of no assistance. It may be conceded that a provision of this character should be strictly construed and that additional fee should be levied from a party litigant only in exact conformity with the precise words of the Statute, although provisions in fiscal Statutes should not be so construed as to furnish a chance of escape and a means of evasion. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Oliver (1), Partington v.

Attorney-General (2), Cox v. Rabbits (3), Pryce v. Monmouthshire Ry. and Canal Co. (4), Oriental Bank Corporation v. Wright (5), Tennant v. Smith (6), Secretary of State for India v. Scoble (7), United States v. Thirty-six Barrels of Wine (8) and Attorney-General v. Furness Railway Co. (9). But this manifestly raises the question, what is the position of a litigant who takes up such an attitude. That must be determined with reference to the facts of the particular case before the Court.

It is not disputed that in the normal course of events the question of valuation should have been decided in the first instance and an order made by the Subordinate Judge upon the plaintiff to pay the deficit Court-fee before he proceeded to try the suit on the merits. There has been a divergence of statement between the parties as to how there was a departure from the provisions of the law on the subject. The defendants maintain that the suit was tried on the merits because the plaintiff gave an undertaking that the deficit Court-fee would be paid before the decree was drawn up. The plaintiff maintains, on the other hand, that no such undertaking was given. We have examined the affidavits placed before us and we have come to the conclusion that the story narrated by the defendants should be accepted as true. It is inconceivable that an experienced Subordinate Judge would have proceeded to the trial of the suit on the merits unless an undertaking had been given that the deficit Court-fee would be paid. What the plaintiff has done in substance is that he has obtained a trial of the matters in controversy on the merits and he has gone back on his undertaking because the result has proved unfavourable. In these circumstances, the question arises, what action should be taken by the Court.

It is unquestionable that the breach of an undertaking given to the Court by a litigant, pending proceedings, on the faith of which the Court sanctions a particular course of action or inaction is misconduct amounting to contempt. It is further well-settled that when a person is guilty of such contempt he places himself in a perilous situation so as not to be heard by the Court till he has purged his contempt. Lord Chief Baron Gilbert laid it down as a general rule that the contemner who is in contempt is never to be heard by motion or otherwise till he has cleared his contempt and paid the costs, as for example, if he comes to move for anything or desires any favour of the Court (Gilbert on Forum Romanum 102). The limitations of this rule were examined and explained in the case of Dharmapal v. Krista Dayal (10), where the decisions in Clark v. Dew (11), Herring v. Cloberry (12), Curtis v. Curtis (13), Chuck v. Cremer (14), Russell v. East Anglian Railway Company (15), Garstin v. Garstin (16), Carendish v. Cavendish (17), Gordon v. Gordon (18), were analysed and reviewed. Reference may further be made to the cases of Wenman v. Osbaldiston (19), Hill v. Bissel (20), Voules v. Young (21), Anon (22), Bellchamber v. Giani (23), Killing v.

Killing (24), Odell v. Hart (25), Bryan v. Twigg (26), Lord Cranstown v. Goldshede (27), Wilson v. Bates (28), Crawforth v. Holder (29), Harrison v. Harrison (30), Oldfield v. Cobbett (31), Taylor v. Taylor (32), Futvoye v. Kenward (33), Burdell v. Hay (34), Gould v. Twine (35), White v. Bromige (36), where the applicability of this doctrine came under consideration in diverse circumstances. It is in fact an elementary rule that one in contempt may be denied certain favours of the Court and privileges, until he has purged himself of contempt, and a useful collection of cases was brought to the notice of the Court in the course of the arguments in Gordon v. Gordon (18). The rule denying privileges is limited to proceedings in which the contempt occurs. A litigant in contempt has no standing in the Court. In the case before us, the attitude of the plaintiff has placed him entirely out of Court. He is competent to appeal to this Court, only on the assumption that a decree has been made against him in a litigation valued at Rs. 6,000. If the value of the suit is Rs. 1,125, as he pretended in the Court below, the appeal lay to the Court of the District Judge. He has adopted the view of the Subordinate Judge that the value of the subject-matter of this litigation is Rs. 6,000 in order to enable him to seek the assistance of this Court. He has, however, most inconsistently refused to pay the Court-fee leviable

Where there is an oral lease and a registered kabuliyat and rent has been paid and received for several years, the lessee is liable, even if the kabuliyat does not constitute a valid tenancy, to pay compensation for the use and occupation of the land, and the measure of that compensation is the amount agreed to be paid under the lease [p. 297, col. 1].

If a mortgagor of land applies for mutation of names and gets himself entered as lessee and the mortgagee as lessor, the latter is entitled to rely on the presumption laid down in section 44 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act that the relation of landlord and tenant exists between the parties [ibid].

If the rent agreed on between the parties for land, in respect of which an ex-proprietary tenancy has arisen, is less than the statutory rate laid down in section 10 of the Tenancy Act, the rent is claimable even though formal proceedings under section 38 of the Land Revenue Act have not been taken [ibid].

JUDGMENT.—These are two connected appeals in a suit for arrears of rent under section 102 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The suit has been decreed by both the Courts below and the defendant appeals. On 6th July, 1909, the defendant executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs of an eight annas share in the village of Mirpur Gaiindiwar Mahal Daiyan Sadarang. It is in respect of this share that the present suit for arrears of rent has been brought. On the same date the mortgagees gave a theka of the share to the mortgagor on a rent of Rs. 210 per annum. No written lease was executed but the defendant executed a registered kabuliyat stating that he had taken the zamindari share, the area of which was 101 bighas, on a lease from the plaintiffs and agreeing to pay the rent. Application for mutation was made to the Revenue Court and the defendant was duly entered in the khewat as the thekedar and the plaintiffs as lessors in respect of the theka. It appears from the evidence of the patwari, who was the only witness examined, that the defendant who has admittedly been in possession, paid rent under the theka, up to the year 1912.

The defence to the suit which was put forward in the Courts below and is repeated in the grounds of appeal is:

1. That no tenancy was created by means of the kabuliyat and, therefore, the defendant cannot be sued for rent. In this written statement he declared that he had paid Rs. 210 a year now claimed up to date not by way of rent but by way of interest on the mortgage.

2. That as part of the land covered by the lease was sir land no rent could be claimed in respect of this portion of the area covered by the lease until rent had been determined under section 38 of the Land Revenue Act, which admittedly was not done.

3. That in any case the Courts below should have found whether a portion of the rent payable in respect of the 35 bighas of sir land is less than the statutory rate prescribed by section 10 of the Tenancy Act.

It appears to us that it is not necessary in this case to go into the first question whether the tenancy can be created by means of a registered kabuliyat or not. The case is covered by the Full Bench Ruling in Shro Karan Singh v. Maharaja Parbhu Narain Singh (1). The defendant took possession of land under a lease and paid rent for at least three years in accordance with it and even if the kabuliyat did not constitute a valid tenancy, the defendant is liable under the ruling just referred to to pay compensation for the use and occupation of the land; the measure of that compensation being the amount which he agreed to pay under the lease. Moreover in this case as the defendant himself applied for mutation of names and got himself entered as thekedar and the plaintiffs as lessors, the plaintiffs are entitled to rely on the presumption laid down in section 44 of the Land Revenue Act that the relation of landlord and tenant does exist between the parties. There is nothing to rebut that presumption. On the contrary there is a good deal to confirm it.

To the contentions regarding the sir area there are two answers. In the first place, as this lease was undoubtedly a theka of the zamindari share the case is covered by the ruling in Mithan Lal v. Chhaju Singh (2) on which the learned District Judge has relied. In the second place it has been held in more than one case that if the rent agreed on between the parties for land in respect of which an ex-proprietary tenancy has arisen, is less than the statutory rate laid down in section 10 of the Tenancy Act, the rent is claimable even though formal proceedings under section 36 of the Land Revenue Act have not been taken. In the present case the Respondents' Counsel has been able to show from the evidence of the patwari who was the sole witness, that the portion of the rent due in respect of the sir area is less than the amount which could have been fixed under section 36 of the Land Revenue Act. The decree of the Court below is, therefore, correct and we dismiss these appeals with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Arts. 4, 5

A legal fiction has no place where substantial justice does not require its interference, still less where substantial justice would suffer from its operation. The Court will not endure that a mere form or fiction of law, introduced for the sake of justice, should work a wrong, contrary to the real truth and substance, of the thing. [p. 289, col. 1.]

The use of the term "leviable" in Article 5 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act does not justify the inference that the Legislature intended to introduce a fiction into the law, namely, an imaginary representation of the plaint or memorandum of appeal at the time when the application for review is filed. [p. 300, col. 2.]

As soon as a suit has been instituted, the amount of Court-fee payable on a possible application for review of the prospective judgment in the suit becomes fixed. [ibid.]

Neither under the Court Fees Act as originally framed in 1870 nor under the Court Fees Act as amended in 1922, can a petitioner for review of judgment be called upon to pay Court-fee on the basis of the fee which would be payable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal if it were to be filed on the date of the application for review. The amount must be calculated on the basis of the fee leviable (which, in the normal course of events, is the fee actually levied) on the plaint or memorandum of appeal according to the law in force when the plaint or memorandum was filed in Court. Although provisions in fiscal Statutes are not to be so construed as to furnish a chance of escape and a means of evasion, a fiscal Statute must be strictly construed, and liability or additional liability cannot be imposed on the subject except by clear and unambiguous terms. [p. 301, col. 1]

Under section 80 of the Transfer of Property Act, as soon as an order absolute for sale is made, the security is extinguished, and the relative rights of the mortgagor and mortgagee are thenceforth regulated by the decree. But the mortgagee is not thereby debarred from proving that the description of the property mentioned in the schedule to the decree itself was erroneous, and if that is established to the satisfaction of the Court, it has ample authority to mould the relief accordingly as between the original parties or their representatives-in-interest. JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule for the review of the judgment of this Court in Nanda Lal Agram v. Jogendra Chandra Datta (1).

A preliminary question of considerable importance has been raised with regard to the amount of Court-fee payable on the application. We have heard the Assistant Government Pleader as the matter affects the public revenue and the point must be examined before we consider the application on the merits.

The subject-matter of the appeal was valued at Rs. 7,750, and on the 20th December, 1919, a Court-fee of Rs. 385 was paid on the memorandum in accordance with the table of rates of ad valorem fees embodied in Schedule I of the Court Fees Act, 1870. The appeal was thereupon registered and was heard in due course. Judgment was pronounced on the 29th August, 1922, when the appeal was dismissed with costs. On the 21st November, 1922, the appellant presented the application for review of judgment now under consideration. The application bore a Court-fee of Rs. 192-8-0, that is, one-half of Rs. 385, the amount payable and paid on the memorandum of appeal when it was lodged in this Court. The Stamp Reporter, to whom the application was presented in the first instance, made a note that there was a deficiency of Rs. 115. In the opinion of the Stamp Reporter, the amount payable as Court-fee was Rs. 307-8-0, that is, one-half of Rs. 615 which would have been payable on the memorandum of appeal, if it were lodged in this Court on the 21st November, 1922, when the application for review was filed. At this stage, it is necessary to mention that after the 20th December 1919, when the memorandum of appeal was filed and before the 21st November, 1922, when the application for review was lodged, the Bengal Court Fees (Amendment) Act, (IV of 1922 B. C.) had come into force on the 1st April, 1922. Section 5 of this amending Statute modified Art. 1 of Schedule I of the Court Fees Act, 1870, by enhancement of the rate of fee payable on plaints, written statements and memorandum of appeal. Section 9, as a corollary, altered the table of rates of ad valorem fees appended to the same schedule. The consequence was that from the 1st April, 1922, the amount of Court-fee payable on a memorandum of appeal valued at Rs. 7,750 was raised from Rs. 385 to Rs. 615.

The determination of the question now raised before us depends upon the true construction of clauses 4 and 5 of Schedule I of the Court Fees Act. Art. 4 provides that the proper fee for an application for review of judgment, if presented on or after the ninetyeth day from the date of the decree, is the fee leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal. Article 5 provides that the proper fee for an application for review of judgment, if presented before the ninetyeth day from the date of the decree, is one-half of the fee leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal. There is no dispute that as the application in the present case was made before the ninetieth day from the date of the decree, Art. 5 is applicable, and the argument has centred round the question, what is the point of time to which the expression leviable has reference.

The Assistant Government Pleader has invited us, on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council, to read into the third column of Arts. 4 and 5 the following expression: "If the plaint or memorandum of appeal were presented when the application for review is made." There are two obvious objections to the proposed construction; namely, first, it requires us to read into the articles words which are not to be found there; and, secondly, the fiction that is invoked is absolutely contradictory to the actual facts because an application for review of judgment cannot be concurrent with a plaint or memorandum of appeal which must of necessity precede the judgment to be reviewed. As Lord Mansfield observed in Johnson v. Smith (2) fiction has no place where substantial justice does not require its interference, still less where substantial justice would suffer from its operation. "The Court would not endure that a mere form or fiction of law, introduced for the sake of justice should work a wrong, contrary to the real truth and substance of the thing." This is an echo of what Lord Coke had said in Butler and Baker's case (3), "the law will never make any fiction, but for necessity and in avoidance of a mischief."

The petitioner, on the other hand, urges that the Court Fees Act itself contains a provision which specifies when the fee is leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal and he invites our attention to section 6 which is in the following terms:

"Except in the Courts hereinbefore mentioned, no document of any of the kinds specified as chargeable in the First or Second Schedule to this Act annexed, shall be filed, exhibited or recorded in any Court of Justice, or shall be received or furnished by any public officer, unless in respect of such document there be paid a fee of an amount not less than that indicated by either of the said schedules as the proper fee for such document."

This shows conclusively that the requisite Court-fee is leviable when the plaint or memorandum is filed: Amjad Ali v. Muhammad Israil (4). This is corroborated by the provisions of O. VII of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. Rule 1 requires that the plaint shall, in addition to other particulars, contain a statement of the value of the subject matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and of Court-fees. Rule 11 ordains that the claim shall be rejected, when written upon paper insufficiently stamped, if the plaintiff has failed to supply the requisite stamp paper within a time to be fixed by the Court.

The Assistant Government Pleader urges that if the expression "leviable" refers to the time of presentation of the plaint or memorandum of appeal, the Legislature might as well have replaced it by the word "levied." This argument is fallacious and overlooks the fact that what is leviable might not have been levied. In this connection, reference may be made to sections 12 and 28 of the Court Fees Act.

"12 (1) Every question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of any fee chargeable under this chapter on a plaint or memorandum of appeal shall be decided by the Court in which such plaint or memorandum, as the case may be, is filed, and such decision shall be final as between the parties to the suit.

(11) But whenever any such suit comes before a Court of Appeal, reference or revision, if such Court considers that the said question has been wrongly decided to the detriment of the revenue, it shall require the party by whom such fee has been paid to pay so much additional fee as would have been payable had the question been rightly decided, and the provisions of section 10, paragraph ii, shall apply."

"28. No document which ought to bear a stamp under this Act shall be of any validity, unless and until it is properly stamped.

But, if any such document is through mistake or inadvertence received, filed or used in any Court or office without being properly stamped, the presiding Judge or the head of the office as the case may be, or, in the case of a High Court, any Judge of such Court, may, if he thinks fit, order that such document be stamped as he may direct, and, on such document, being stamped accordingly, the same and every proceeding relative thereto shall be as valid as if it had been properly stamped in the first instance."

Reference may also be made to section 149 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

"149. Where the whole or any part of any fee prescribed for any document by the law for the time being in force relating to Court-fees has not been paid, the Court may, in its discretion, at any stage, allow the person, by whom such fee is payable, to pay the whole or part, as the case may be, of such Court-fee; and upon such payment the document in respect of which such fee is payable, shall have the same force and effect as if such fee had been paid in the first instance."

It is plain that if the Legislature had, in Arts. 4 and 5 used the expression "levied" instead of "leviable," the result would have been that if by mistake a smaller amount than what is leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal, has been levied, the applicant for review will be entitled to the continued benefit of the mistake. Conversely, if the amount levied is in excess of what is leviable, the petitioner will be prejudiced, though he may be entitled to a refund of the sum paid in excess: Lakhi Narain Jagdeo v. Kirtibas Das (5) and In the matter of the Petition of Prosunno Chander Roy Chowdhury (6). There is thus ample reason why the Legislature should have used the term "leviable" and not "levied." The use of the term "leviable" does not, in our opinion, justify the inference that the Legislature intended to introduce a fiction into the law, namely, an imaginary representation of the plaint or memorandum of appeal at the time when the application for review is filed.

We are fortified in this conclusion by another circumstance of a very special character. In the case of a suit or an appeal, the litigant is required to value the relief claimed and to pay Court-fee accordingly. In the case of an application for review, the applicant is not required to value the relief claimed and to pay Court-fee on the basis of such valuation. It is immaterial whether the applicant seeks a review of the judgment in respect of the whole or a fraction of the subject-matter of the controversy. The proper fee for the application is the fee leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal, whether the review affects the whole or a part of the decree. Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Mahomed Uzir (7), Imdad Hasan Khan v. Badri Prasad (8), In re Sheikh Ali Ahmad (9), and Husaina v. Sahib Nur (10); though the decisions in Proceedings, 16th January, 1872 (11) and In re Manohar G. Tambekar (12), may perhaps point to the opposite conclusion. The policy of the Legislature is obvious. The substance of the matter is that for the purpose of ascertainment of the Court-fee payable on the application for review, the application relates back to the plaint or memorandum of appeal, as the case may be; the amount is levied in a fixed proportion, independent of the scope of the application for review. To put the matter differently as soon as a suit has been instituted, the amount of Court-fee payable on a possible application for review of the prospective judgment in the suit becomes fixed.

We may note that the Assistant Government Pleader did not formulate the point for decision accurately when he stated that the question is, whether the case before us is excluded from the operation of the amending Statute. The real question is, does the amending Statute affect the decision of the question. The answer, in our opinion, must be in the negative, and we are supported in this view by two additional considerations. In the first place, the true construction of Arts. 4 and 5 must be determined irrespective of the amending Statute, which makes no reference to them. These articles found a place in the Court Fees Act as framed in 1870; and the intention of the Legislature as expressed in the language used, cannot obviously be affected by the supposed object of the framers of the amending Statute of 1922. There is nothing to show that the framers of the Statute in 1870 anticipated and kept in view the contingency which has now arisen; there is equally nothing in the amending Statute to indicate that the legislators of 1922 realised and provided for this case. Section 17 of Act IV of 1922 B. C. which was interpreted in Thaddeus Nahapet v. Secretary of State for India in Council (13) clearly does not advance the contention of the Assistant Government Pleader; on the other hand the decision in Taraprasanna Chongdar v. Nrisinha Murari Pal (14) militates against his argument. In the second place, we must bear in mind the elementary rule that, although as pointed out in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Oliver (15) provisions in fiscal Statutes are not to be so construed as to furnish a chance of escape and a means of evasion, a fiscal Statute must be strictly construed, and liability or additional liability cannot be imposed on the subject except by clear and unambiguous terms. See Stockton & Darlington Railway Company v. Barret (16), Partington v.

Attorney-General (17), Gox v. Rabbits (18), Pryce v. Monmouthshire Ry. and Canal Co. (19), Oriental Bank Corporation v. Wright (20), Tennant v. Smith (21), Secretary of State for India v. Scoble, (22); Deputy Commissioner of Singhbhum v. Jagadish Chandra Deo Dhabal Deb (23) and Raj Rajeswari Jiu. v. Gati Krishna Chakrabarti (24). From whatever point the question may be viewed, there is thus no escape from the conclusion that neither under the Court Fees Act as originally framed in 1870 nor under the Court Fees Act as amended in 1922, can a petitioner for review of judgment be called upon to pay Court-fee on the basis of the fee which would be payable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal if it were to be filed on the date of the application for review. The amount must be calculated on the basis of the fee leviable (which, in the normal course of events, is the fee actually levied) on the plaint or memorandum of appeal according to the law in force when the plaint or memorandum is filed in Court. Tested in the light of this principle, the application in the present case must be deemed to bear the correct Court-fee and must accordingly be heard on the merits.

To appreciate the ground for review, it is essential to re-call the relevant facts which are set out in the following passage of our judgment:

"The subject-matter of the litigation is a tract of land, measuring about 30 bighas, described in Schedule A to the plaint. The land belonged admittedly to the Sahas, who executed a mortgage in favour of Malik on the 29th September, 1900. The mortgagees sued to enforce his security and obtained a decree on the 27th September, 1902. At the execution sale which followed in due course, on the 14th May, 1907, Samalka became the purchaser. He obtained a sale certificate on the 28th April 1908. Samalka, it is said, was the nominal purchaser and bought in the property, one-third for the benefit of Ramdeo and two-thirds for the benefit of Rooya. On the 3rd June, 1910, and on the 8th July, 1910, respectively, Rooya and Ramdeo, the beneficial owners, executed two conveyances in favour of Banerjee. The plaintiff Dutt alleges that he was the real purchaser, and the conveyances were taken by him in the name of Banerjee. It would be a needless digression to narrate the story of the dispute between Dutt and Banerjee as to who became the beneficial owner under the conveyances, it is sufficient to state that Dutt may now be taken to have established his title against Banerjee, who has consequently disappeared from the scene.

"The history of the title set up by the first defendant who is the rival claimant may now be stated. In 1907, the Chaudhuries, who were the 6-annas co-sharer landlords, obtained against the Sahas a money decree for arrears of rent in respect of the disputed lands. This decree was executed, and at the sale which followed on the 12th May, 1908, the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors was purchased by one Sarkar. On the 14th October, 1908, the first defendant, Agrani, purchased the property from Sarkar on the basis of an alleged agreement for sale dated 6th July, 1908. In the interval, Sarkar had sold to Bose on the 20th July, 1908, and on the strength of the title so acquired, Bose sold to the second defendant, Dutt, brother of the plaintiff, on the 25th May, 1910. These transactions, it has been held, do not affect the purchase by Agrani from Sarkar, and were evidently attempts made by the plaintiff to perfect his title by buying in outstanding claims. The controversy between the plaintiff and the first defendant must consequently be determined on the following basis, namely, that the title of the plaintiff is traced to the mortgage sale of the 14th May, 1907, which itself rests on the mortgage of the 29th September, 1900, while on the other hand, the title of the first defendant cannot be traced beyond the execution sale of the 12th May, 1908 when the right, title and interest of the Sahas was exposed for sale. Before that date, the property had already vested in Samalka by virtue of the mortgage sale and could not again be brought to sale at the instance of the co-sharer landlords in execution of the money decree they held against the Sahas; we are consequently not called upon to consider what would have been the position, if the so-called rent-decree were not a mere money decree and had the qualities of a true rent-decree. The inference is thus irresistible, that, prima facie, the first defendant has no title which can be successfully set up against the plaintiff. What then is his answer to the claim? His defence, as will presently appear, is founded on a clerical error which crept into the mortgage instrument.

In the schedule to the mortgage bond, the boundaries of the hypothecated property were described as follows.

"Within District Hooghly, Sub-Registry Howrah, Station Golabari, Thana Golabari, Pergana Paikan village, Mouza Salikha, lies the Tantipara land measuring about 30 bighas :

East—A place belonging to us called Bajaldanga

West—Jatadhari Haldar's land.

North—Biswambhar Saha's tank.

South—A place called Barabagan.

"Maliks of 10 annas share are the Raja of Dighapatia and Bibi Jaso Kumari; the annual rent of Rs. 35 is payable to both the Sarkars, and the malik zemindar of 6-annas share is Gurdas Kundu Chowdhury to whom Rs. 40 is payable as annual rent.

"It has now transpired that, by mistake, the north, and south boundaries were interchanged; what is stated as the north boundary was in fact the south boundary, and what is stated as the south boundary was in fact the north boundary. The scribe evidently made a mistake and wrote 'north', for "south" and 'south' for 'north'. This erroneous description of the boundaries was in due course reproduced from the mortgage-deed into the plaint, from the plaint into the decree, and from the decree into the sale certificate. The error appears to have been subsequently discovered, and in the conveyance by Rooya to Banerjee dated the 3rd June, 1910, the correct boundary is given in one portion of the deed, though the incorrect boundary is also set out in the schedule. In the conveyance by Samalka to Banerjee, however, dated 8th July, 1910, the incorrect boundary alone is reproduced. On these facts, the first defendant urges that the plaintiff has not purchased the disputed land at all, and must content himself with such land as may be found to lie within the incorrect boundaries set out in the mortgage deed. It is plain that if this contention prevails, the plaintiff takes nothing. As the result of the further enquiry, which was directed by this Court on the 9th February, 1921, it has transpired that there is no land which corresponds to the incorrect boundaries. There is no tract of 30 bighas which lies in Tantipara and is bounded on the east by Bajaldanga, on the west by Jatadhari Haldar's land, on the north by Biswambhar Saha's tank and on the south by Barabagan. The fact that there has been a misdescription becomes manifest on a local inspection of the place, and this is confirmed, when the map is examined. There is, further, no plot of 30 bighas except the disputed land which, as stated in the mortgage bond, was held by the Sahas as tenants, 10-annas under Dighapatiya and Jaraokumari and 6-annas under the Chaudhuris. There is thus not the remotest doubt as to the facts. The only question is, whether the first defendant is entitled in law to take advantage of the error in the mortgage deed and thereby to defeat the title of the plaintiff."

"It is plain that as the result of the execution sale, which was held on the 12th May, 1908, by the co-sharer landlords on the basis of the money-decree held by them, nothing could vest in the purchaser Sarkar beyond the right, title and interest of the Saha judgment-debtors. The purchaser would thus be bound by the same rule of estoppel as the judgment-debtors."

We then proceeded to point out that tested in the light of this principle, the claim of the contesting defendant could not be sustained, because the first defendant was in no better position than the Sahas would have been if they had endeavoured to defeat the plaintiff by reliance on the clerical error in the mortgage bond. In support of the view that the first defendant was in the same position as the Sahas, we referred to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mohammed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (25), where it had been ruled that the purchaser at the execution sale acquires the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and does not consequently occupy a position of greater advantage than the judgment-debtor does on the application of the doctrine of estoppel. In support of the view, that the mortgagor is bound by the rule of estoppel not to dispute the validity of the mortgage, we referred to the decision in Debendra Nath Sen v. Mirza Abdul Samad (26), where reference is made to Goodtitle v. Bailey (27), Doed. Bristow v. Pegge (28) and Doed. Ogle v. Vickers (29). To these may be added Right v. Bucknell (30), Doe v. Stone (31) and Madell v. Thomas (32). The two principles just mentioned cannot be and have not been disputed. They form the foundation of another decision whereon we also placed reliance, namely Bepin Krishna Ray v. Jogeshwar Ray (33), where a mistake was traced from the decree backwards, through successive stages of the judicial proceedings, to the mortgage instrument itself. It has now been argued that we overlooked that the decision last mentioned had no application, because, in that case the rights of the parties were governed by O. XXXIV, rr. 4 and 5 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and not by sections 88 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, which were in force when the transactions in this case took place and must consequently regulate the rights of the parties.

It is not disputed that there is a substantial divergence between section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act and O. XXXIV, r. 5 of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 89 provided that in a suit for sale, upon the failure of the defendant to pay the dues within the prescribed period, an order absolute for sale shall be made, "and thereupon the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished." There was much divergence of judicial opinion as to the precise effect of the concluding clause of section 89, and it was ruled by a Full Bench of this Court in Bibijan Bibi v. Sachu Bewah (34) that "thereupon" means "after sale" and not "after the order absolute for sale". This view, however, was overruled by the Judicial Committee in Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (35) and the clause itself was left out by the Legislature when section 89 was replaced by O. XXXIV, r. 5. But this cannot affect the rights of litigants which accrued when section 89 was in force. The effect of that section has been considered by the Judicial Committee in Hetram v. Shadi Ram (35), Matru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (36) and Sukhi v. Ghulam

Safdar Khan (37).

In Hetram v. Shadi Ram (35), a property had been twice mortgaged by way of simple mortgage, once in 1880 and again in 1881. Het Ram purchased the property from the mortgagee in 1883. In 1885 the mortgagee of 1880 obtained against the mortgagor and Het Ram a decree absolute for sale under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. He did not implead the mortgagee under the mortgage of 1881. He took no further steps under the decree and the property was not brought to sale. He died, and was succeeded to by Het Ram as his heir. In 1910 the mortgagee under the mortgage of 1881 instituted the suit. It was held that Het Ram could not set up the mortgage of 1880 as a shield, because the decree of 1885 was (1) barred by limitation, (2) inoperative as against the plaintiff who had not been made a party to the suit and because the mortgage itself was gone, because of the terms of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

In Matru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (36) a property had also been the subject of two mortgages of 1872 and 1879 respectively. The mortgagee of 1872 obtained in 1884 a decree for sale under the same section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, but omitted to implead the second mortgagee. A lady who was an assignee of the second mortgage raised suit in 1909. The owner resisted the decree unless he was paid the whole amount due under the first mortgage with interest calculated at the rate stipulated therein. The plaintiff offered to pay the amount under the decree of 1884, but refused to pay the amount of the mortgage so calculated. The Subordinate Judge gave effect to the contention of the owner. The High Court altered the decree and gave effect to the offer of the plaintiff. The owner then appealed. The Board adhered to the judgment of the High Court. The Judicial Committee, pressed with the decision in Unes Chunder Sircar v.

NANDA LAL V. JOGENDRA CHANDRA.

Zahur Fatima (38), pointed out that at the time when the High Court delivered judgment, the case of Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (35) had not been before the Board. That case decided that an order made under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 (Act IV of 1882), for the sale of mortgaged property, has the effect of substituting the right of sale thereby conferred upon the mortgagee for his rights under the mortgage and the latter rights are extinguished. When the decree or order for sale in the case of Umes Chunder Sircar v. Zahur Fatima (38) was made, the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, had not been passed and the procedure prescribed by that Act for suits for sales under that Act did not exist, that case was decided on the law as it then stood. The view thus adopted by the Judicial Committee fits in with the pronouncement in Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (39), where Lord Davey observed that, after the expiration of the period of grace, if the property should not be redeemed, the matter would pass from the domain of contract to that of judgment and the rights of the mortgagee would thenceforth depend, not on the contents of his bond, but on the directions in the decree.

In Sukhi v. Ghulam Safdar Khan (37) Lord Dunedin pointed out that O. XXXIV, rr. 3 and 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, which now govern final decrees for foreclosure and sale, do not provide that after a decree thereunder the mortgage security is extinguished, as was prescribed by section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act in the case of a sale decree made under that section. On this ground, the decisions in Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (35) and Matru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (36) were distinguished. The inference follows that the law now under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, remains as it certainly was before the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 as expounded and applied in Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (39).

In the case before us, the mortgage decree was made on the 27th September 1902 and the execution sale thereunder took place on the 14th May, 1907. Section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act was in force till the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 came into operation on the first day of January 1909. The rights of the parties must consequently be determined with reference to section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act and not O. XXXIV, r. 5 of the Civil Procedure Code. The decision in Bepin Krishna Ray v. Jogeshwar Ray (33) is consequently distinguishable. There the mortgage decree was made on the 16th December 1909, and the sale in execution was held on the 18th September, 1911. The rights of the parties thus fell to be determined only with reference to O. XXXIV, r. 5 Civil Procedure Code. In addition to this circumstance, the error in the mortgage instrument was discovered before the sale was completed, and a suit was instituted for rectification of the mortgage, before the sale could be held again. We must accordingly consider, whether in view of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act as explained by the Judicial Committee in Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (35) and Matru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (36), the plaintiff can establish as against the defendant, that there was an error in the description of the property and is entitled to succeed on that footing.

The defendant has strenuously contended that under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, as soon as the order absolute for sale was made, the security was extinguished, and the relative rights of the mortgagor and mortgagee were thenceforth regulated by the decree. This may be conceded. But it does not follow that the mortgagee became thereby debarred from proving that the description of the property mentioned in the schedule to the decree itself was erroneous. The petitioner has contended in substance that the effect of section 89 is to place at the stage of the decree, an impassable barrier across the path of enquiry from the sale certificate backwards to the mortgage instrument. The question we have to solve is, what is the property, covered by the sale certificate, which has passed into the hands of the plaintiff. Enquiry has elicited two facts, namely, first, that there is no property in existence which corresponds to the property described in the schedule to the sale certificate and the decree, and secondly, that if the northern and southern boundaries be interchanged, there is a property of the judgment-debtor which fits in with that description in every other respect to the minutest detail. No legal principle has been brought to our notice which, on these facts, prevents the Court from granting relief as among the decree-holder, the auction-purchaser and the judgment-debtor. What is essentially requisite is the rectification of the boundaries in the schedule to the sale certificate. For this purpose, it is not material that we should go back, behind the decree to the mortgage instrument itself. The clerical error becomes apparent on the result of the local enquiry held on the basis of the boundaries in the sale certificate. The investigation of the proceedings in the suit itself, antecedent to the decree, only furnishes a historical explanation, as it were, how the error arose. But there can be no question that there is an error in the sale certificate, and, in our opinion, the Court has ample authority as a Court of justice, equity and good conscience to mould the relief accordingly as between the original parties or their representatives in interest. In this view, it is needless to consider the scope of the questions which may be properly raised on an application for review of judgment as explained by the Judicial Committee in Chhajju Ram v Neki (40).

The result is that the Rule is discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Evidence Act (1st of 1872), ss 63, 67 to 73—Execution of document, whether can be proved by secondary evidence—Ss 67 to 73, whether deal with secondary evidence.

A certified copy is sufficient secondary evidence under section 63 of the Evidence Act of the existence, condition and contents of a document but not of its execution. [p 307, col 1.]

Sections 67 to 73 of the Evidence Act deal with primary as well as secondary evidence. [ibid.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 10th November 1922.

Dr M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Dr K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Sheikh Karimullah is purchaser of the alleged rights and interest of defendant No. 4 Mital. His allegation was that Mital and others had mortgaged the property to defendant No. 1 Gudar and he desired to redeem that mortgage of 9th May 1917. Another important party defendant in the suit was defendant No. 6 Musammāt Deokali.

In paragraph 10 of the plaint it is stated that defendant No. 6 Musammāt Deokali was made a party though she had no concern in the property because of the allegation of the mortgagee, Gudar, that he had made over possession to her. Defendant No. 7 is a transferee from Musammāt Deokali. It appears that contest lies between Mital and Musammāt Deokali as to the ownership of the property. In the plaint however no relief is claimed specifically against Musammāt Deokali as apart from the mortgage. In paragraph 12 possession is desired on redemption of the mortgage.

A copy of the registered mortgage-deed was produced and the mortgagee Gudar did not produce the original. Gudar denied the evidence of any mortgage. Both the Subordinates Courts have held that the mortgage was not proved because no attesting witness was called for the purpose of proving its execution as laid down in section 68 of the Evidence Act. It is admitted that both the attesting witnesses are alive and no attempt was made to prove that they were not subject to the process of the Court or incapable of giving evidence. The argument of the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant was twofold: (1) that the suit was not based on the mortgage and that, therefore, it was not necessary to prove the document strictly and (2) that when the mortgagee Gudar failed to produce the original document the evidence of the mortgagor Mital and of the scribe of the document was sufficient to prove the document by secondary evidence.

As I have already pointed out the suit is based entirely on the mortgage. The nature of the conflict between Mital and Musammatt Deokali is not even indicated in the plaint. It cannot, therefore, be said that the suit is one for possession by the transferee of an owner against all possible persons who are keeping him out of possession. I am of opinion that the mortgage was required to be strictly proved having regard to the nature of the plaint.

The next argument was that the admission by the mortgagor of having executed the document was sufficient evidence of execution and that the existence, condition and contents of the document were proved by the production of a certified copy of the document. A certified copy is sufficient secondary evidence under section 63 of the Evidence Act, condition and contents of the deed but not of its execution. The ingenious argument was advanced that section 67 and those which follow up to 73 deal with primary evidence and not with secondary evidence. I do not think that such an argument can hold when in section 65 there is no mention of secondary evidence being given of the execution of a document. Section 67 follows the mention of primary and secondary evidence in sections 61-66 and would presumably govern both kinds of evidence. The submission was made that if the mortgagee suppressed the original document and won over the attesting witnesses it would be impossible to prove a deed of mortgage if the provisions of section 68 were insisted upon. This difficulty, however, can be overcome by the application of the provisions of section 71. If the plaintiff had summoned the two attesting witnesses and they denied execution either through collusion or absence of recollection it would have been open to the plaintiff to prove the execution by any other evidence.

In my opinion the two Subordinate Courts were correct in insisting upon the due observation of the provisions of section 68 and refusing to use the mortgage-deed as evidence on non-compliance by the plaintiffs of the terms thereof. I do not think that the present plaint can be turned into a conflict between the plaintiff and Musammatt Deokali, so it will not be a proper course to remand the suit to the Trial Court to decide the question of possession by right of title.

I dismiss this appeal with costs which shall include here fees on the higher scale.

cause of action to contest an alienation of joint family property accrues after the alienation when the purchaser takes possession, and a new cause of action does not accrue upon the subsequent birth of a son in the family [p 309, col 1].

An after-born son does not acquire a fresh cause of action and a fresh period of limitation does not start from the date of his birth. In his case the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned is the date of the transfer, and as he was not born on that date and was under no disability, he cannot obtain the benefit of the provisions of section 6 of the Limitation Act. He can take advantage of any cause of action existing at his birth and sue within the period of limitation, but cannot start a fresh period at his birth. [ibid.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 1st November, 1922.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs (Hindu sons) sued for the setting aside of an alienation by their grand-father, one Ajudhia Singh. Both the Subordinate Courts held that the suit was time-barred. This second appeal is filed in consequence.

The youngest son of Ajudhia Singh was Ram Iqbal and the eldest son of Ram Iqbal is the plaintiff Sikandar Singh. The learned Subordinate Judge of the Trial Court held that when Sikandar Singh was born and also before he was conceived Ram Iqbal had lost his right to question the alienation, being at the time 24 years of age. It was argued on the basis of a slip in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge that Sikandar Singh was conceived before Ram Iqbal's right to sue had become time-barred. In one portion of the judgment he observed.

"Mahabir Singh the next witness said that Ajudhia had died at the age of 60 or 65. This seems correct. He further says that Ram Iqbal was 9 or 10 years old when Ajudhia died, so according to this calculation Ram Iqbal would be 21 years old when Sikandar was born, and this seems correct."

Here 21 is a slip for 24. The learned Judge goes on to observe:

"The fact is that Ram Iqbal is now 32 years old. He was 11 years old when his father died. He was 24 years old when his first son was born."

This 24 is correct because according to the lower Court Ajudhia died in 1901, Ram Iqbal was 11 years old at the time and Sikandar was born in 1914. So on the date of the birth of Sikandar Ram Iqbal would be 24 according to the finding of the Trial Court and not 21. This finding has been upheld by the lower Appellate Court.

The more interesting argument is that even granting that all the sons of Ajudhia Singh and every other member of the joint family at the time of the birth of Sikandar Singh had lost their right to sue for the setting aside of the transfer by reason of limitation, Sikandar Singh, as soon as he was born would acquire the right to bring a suit such as the present.

Various rulings were quoted stating general principles but not dealing exactly with the point of limitation. According to this argument even if the plaintiffs had not sued their great grandchildren could have come to Court to question the title of the then owner of the property on the ground that Ajudhia Singh had transferred the property without the consent of the other members of the joint family and the then owner was not able to prove legal necessity for the transfer. I am not prepared to countenance such a proposition of law, which would offend against every principle of the law of limitation. A Hindu son when he is born in a family is born to all the rights which exist at the time in the family and not to rights which existed in the family a century before. No title derived from a Hindu would be safe under such a contingency.

Adopting the view of law of the lower Courts, if when Sikandar Singh was born there had existed in the family a right to question the transfer on the ground of its being made without the consent of the other co-parceners and without legal necessity Sikandar Singh may have been entitled to bring a suit up to three years after attaining majority even though at the time when he brought the suit a similar suit by older members of the family had been time-barred. The right to sue must, however, be alive at the time of the birth or at the time of the conception of the Hindu son in order to entitle him to such a right. Once every member of a particular Hindu family has lost by efflux of time the right to question an alienation, a son conceived and born subsequent to the loss of the right to sue by family cannot revive a time barred right.

So far I have discussed the facts of the case with reference to the view of law adopted by the lower Courts. My own view of the law on the point is more restricted: it is that a son born in a joint Hindu family acquires by birth interest in ancestral property but does not acquire any interest in any right to sue. The cause of action accrues after an alienation when the purchaser takes possession (section 126, Limitation Act) and a new cause of action does not accrue upon the subsequent birth of a son in the family. This was held as early as 1867 in Raja Ram Tewary v Lachman Prasad (1) and the same principle of law was laid down by the Privy Council in Uqagar Singh v Putam Singh (2). Applying this principle of law, the after-born son does not acquire a fresh cause of action and a fresh period of limitation does not start from the date of his birth. In his case the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned is the date of the transfer and as he was not born on that date and was under no disability he cannot obtain the benefit of the provisions of section 6 of the Limitation Act. He can take advantage of any cause of action existing at his birth and sue within the period of limitation but cannot start a fresh period at his birth.

Confusion of thought arises in the discussion of the present question from mixing it up with two other propositions of law more or less alike.

1. That after born sons have a vested interest co-extensive with that of previously born sons of the family. If A a minor is in existence at the time of the alienation, he can sue within three years of his majority and an after-born son can take advantage of this extension of time. Ramkishore Kedarnath v. Jamarajan Ramrachpal (3).

2. That the minority of one son will save limitation for all sons under section 7 of the Limitation Act. If A, B and C major sons and D minor son were in existence at the time of the alienation, limitation (if it has not expired earlier) will be saved for all until D attained the age of 21.

These propositions of law, however, have no bearing on the inquiry whether section 6 of the Limitation Act is applicable to an after-born son or not. A learned Judge of this Court Mr Justice Daniels has elaborately discussed this question in the judgment of a Bench delivered by him in Oudh [Chokhey Singh v. Hardeo Singh (4)], and arrived at the same conclusion. He has quoted there in support of his view a recent authority of the Punjab High Court [Lachman Das v. Sundar Das (5)].

I dismiss this appeal with costs which shall include fees on the higher scale.

BANESWAR V. AMULYA CHARAN.

Acquiescence is not a question of fact but of legal inference from facts found and it is open, therefore, to the High Court to consider whether the question of acquiescence has been properly decided by the Court of Appeal below. [p. 311, col 1]

Behl Ram v. Kundan Lal, 21 A 496 at p. 504 (P. C.), 1 Bom L R 400, 3 C W N 502, 26 I A 58, 7 Sar P O J 523, 9 Ind Dec (N. S.) 1022 (P. C.) and Ananda Chandra Sen v. Faibati Nath Sen, 4 C L J 198 at pp. 204, 205, relied upon.

Acquiescence is no more than an instance of the law of estoppel by words or by conduct. If a party having an interest to prevent an act being done has full notice of its being done, and acquiesces in it, so as to induce a reasonable belief that he consents to it, and the position of others is altered by their giving credit to his sincerity, he has no more right to challenge the act to their prejudice than he would have had if it had been done by his previous license. But mere acquiescence or absence of interference is not sufficient to create an estoppel [ibid.]

Duke of Leeds v. Earl of Amherst, (1846) 2 Ph. 117, 10 Jur 956, 41 E R 886, 78 R R 47; 16 L J. Ch. 5, referred to.

The vigilance required of and the duty cast upon a co-owner with regard to an infringement of his right is greater than and of a different description from what is expected of a neighbouring owner when he finds an act being done by the other on his own property. [p. 311, col 2].

Mere delay in taking legal proceedings, if the remedy is not barred, is nothing. [ibid.]

The onus of proving acquiescence is on the person who alleges it.

He who seeks equity must do equity, that is to say, the plaintiff in equity must come with perfect propriety of conduct or with clean hands. Fraud or misrepresentation or matters of that description stand in the way of a plaintiff's obtaining an equitable relief by virtue of this principle. It has hardly any application in a case when he has simply tried, without the Court's intervention, to abate a nuisance of which he complains [p. 312, col 1].

Appeal against the decree of the Second Additional District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 20th of September, 1921, reversing that of the Munsif Second Court at Barasat, dated the 15th March, 1920.

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen and Hemendra Chandra Sen, for the Appellant.

Babu Jatindra Mohun Sen Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The two grounds upon which the learned Additional District Judge has reversed the decision of the learned Munsif and dismissed the plaintiff's suit are first, that the delay in instituting the suit leads to the conclusion that he acquiesced in the defendant's acts, and 2nd, that the plaintiff himself has not done equity and so has offended the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity. These grounds, according to the learned Additional District Judge have disintitled the plaintiff to the relief he sought for.

As to the first of these grounds the position is this. The defendant's case was that the rooms were constructed about 1312 B. S. The suit was not instituted till 1325 B. S. "If this be so", says the learned Additional District Judge, "then plaintiff has waited a matter of 13 years before seeking relief and I think he is plainly out of Court." As authorities in support of this view he has relied upon the cases of Duke of Leeds v. Earl of Amherst (1) and Cairncross v. Lormier (2). The learned Munsif had found that the plaintiff's statement that when the rooms were constructed he objected to the direction of the slope of the roof was true. This finding has not been reversed or dissented from by the learned Additional District Judge but he observes that "If these principles, (referring to the principles quoted by him from the two cases cited above) are applied to the present case, I think there can be no doubt that plaintiff's conduct was such as to lead the defendants to believe that he had no objection at the time to the way in which the new rooms were being constructed." It is not clear what conduct was being referred to—whether any conduct relating to the time when the rooms were constructed or the conduct in refraining from instituting the suit earlier or from taking prompt action. Presumably it is the latter, judging from the context. However that may be, no facts have been found which would suggest that the plaintiff stood by and saw the defendant dealing with the property in a manner inconsistent with the plaintiff's right and made no objection while the act was in progress.

BANESWAR V. AMULTA CHARAN.

Nor is it at all established that the plaintiff acquiesced in the act so as to induce a reasonable belief in the defendant that he has consented to it, and there is nothing to show that the position of the defendants was altered by their giving credit to his sincerity. Acquiescence is not a question of fact but of legal inference from facts found and it is open, therefore, to invite this Court to consider whether the question of acquiescence has been properly decided by the Court of Appeal below (Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (3), Per Mookerjee, J., in Ananda Chandra Sen v. Parbati Nath Sen (4)). In De Bussche v. Alt (5) Thesiger L. J., observed that if a person having a right and seeing another person about to commit or in the course of committing an act infringing upon that right stands by in such a manner as really to induce the person committing the act and who might otherwise have abstained from it, to believe that he assents to its being committed, he cannot afterwards be heard to complain of the act. This, as Lord Cottenham said in Duke of Leeds v. Earl of Amherst (1), the case cited by the Court of Appeal below in its judgment, is the proper sense of the term 'acquiescence,' and in that sense may be defined as quiescence under such circumstances as that assent may be reasonably inferred from it, and is no more than an instance of the law of estoppel by words or by conduct. In the case of Cairncross v. Lorimer (2), Lord Campbell enunciated the same principle in these words "Generally speaking, if a party having an interest to prevent an act being done, has full notice of its being done, and acquiesces in it, so as to induce a reasonable belief that he consents to it, and the position of others is altered by their giving credit to his sincerity, he has no more right to challenge the act to their prejudice than he would have had if it had been done by his previous license". Mere quiescence or absence of interference is not sufficient to create an estoppel [Baswantapa v. Ranu (6), Joy Chandra Banerjee v. Sree Nath Chatterjee (7), Uda Begam v. Imam-ud-Din (8), Fatehyab Khan v. Muhammad Yusuf (9), Chintaman Ramchandra v. Dareppa (10), Jaharuddi Mandal v. Debnath Chowdhury (11)]. In the present case, no act or conduct on the part of the plaintiff has been found which could induce the defendant reasonably to believe that he consented to their act, nor any which could reasonably induce them to give credit to his sincerity, nor again any but for which they would have abstained from doing what they did. It should not also be forgotten that the plaintiffs and the defendants are not co-owners but only owners of adjoining properties, and the vigilance required of and the duty cast upon a co-owner with regard to an infringement of his right is certainly greater than and of a different description from what is expected of a neighbouring owner when he finds an act being done by the other on his own property. The only thing that has been proved is delay in coming to Court but mere delay in taking legal proceedings, if the remedy is not barred, is nothing. The onus was entirely on the defendants to prove acquiescence. The Judicial Committee in the case of Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (3) observed as follows:—In order to raise the equitable estoppel which was enforced against the appellants by both the Courts below, it was incumbent upon the respondents to show that the conduct of the owner whether consisting in abstinence from interference or in active intervention, was sufficient to justify the legal inference that they had by plain implication, contracted that the right of tenancy under which the lessees originally obtained possession of the land, should be changed into a perpetual right of occupation". In my opinion the defendant has entirely failed to discharge his onus in the present case. The next ground is based upon the principle, as the Court below puts it "He who seeks equity must do equity". The circumstance, upon which the application of this doctrine is invoked, is that the plaintiff stated in his evidence that he had closed the openings, though that was not put forward as a defence in the written statement. The principle was formerly expressed by the maxim "He who has committed inequity shall not have equity", and relief was refused where a transaction was based on the plaintiff's fraud or misrepresentation, or where the plaintiff sought to enforce a security improperly obtained or where he claimed a remedy for a breach of trust which he had himself procured and whereby he had obtained money. Later it was said that the plaintiff in equity must come with perfect propriety of conduct or with clean hands. Fraud or misrepresentation or matters of that description stand in the way of a plaintiff obtaining an equitable relief by virtue of this principle. It has hardly any application in a case when he has simply tried without the Court's intervention to abate a nuisance of which he complains.

Both the grounds upon which the suit has been dismissed, seem to me to be unsustainable. As no facts were challenged by the respondents in the appeal preferred by them to the Court of Appeal below I do not consider it necessary to send the case down for any further consideration of the facts.

I, therefore, reverse the decree of the learned Additional District Judge and restore that of the learned Munsif with costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Execution first appeal from a decree of the Second Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 9th February 1923.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Appellant.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. Indu Bhusan Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore in the execution department. A suit was brought by one Lalta Prasad against Sri Ganeshji Maharaj, under the management of Shiam Lal and two other defendants for partition of a one-third share and mesne profits for six years, prior to the date of the institution of the suit and subsequent mesne profits up to the date of possession. A preliminary decree was passed on 27th June 1918, for possession and for mesne profits of the past six years and future. The decree-holder obtained possession of his one-third share and took out execution for recovery of mesne profits by sale of the one-third share of the house, belonging to Sri Ganeshji Maharaj. The objections, made on behalf of the endowment, through its manager, so far as we are concerned in this appeal, are two—(1) that interest should not be allowed on the mesne profits from year to year, and (2) that the amount should be recovered from Shiam Lal personally and not from the endowment.

The objector, judgment-debtor, succeeded on the first ground, but in appeal it is further prayed that interest should run from the date of the final decree, i.e., from 22nd January 1919, and not from the date of the preliminary decree, i.e., from 27th June 1918. We have read both the decrees. In the preliminary decree the mesne profits for six years were decreed and only the amount was not ascertained. That amount was subsequently ascertained and mentioned in the final decree to be Rs. 1,995. Both the parties are agreed that interest is payable on this sum, so it is clear that interest must run from the date on which the amount was decreed and not from the date on which it was ascertained. We hold that interest was rightly calculated from the date of the preliminary decree.

The decree was actually passed for recovery of mesne profits from Sri Ganeshji Maharaj. As pointed out by the learned Judge of the lower Court, when such a decree is passed, it is recoverable from endowed property, as held by the Calcutta High Court in Pramada Nath Ray v. Poorna Chandra Ray (1). The ruling of the Privy Council in Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Bahoo (2) was passed on different facts. There the decree was passed against the shebait (manager) of the temple personally and against the profits of the temple. Even there, their Lordships held that the term shebait meant the successive managers of the temple, and not only the person who happened to be the manager at the time of the suit. In the present case, there is a definite decree against the temple. The learned Counsel for the appellant drew our attention to the plaintiff in which it was pleaded that Shiam Lal was really the owner of the one-third share in the house and Sri Ganeshji was merely a fiction. This plea, however, was not admitted by Shiam Lal and he asserted that the property was really owned by the idol. It was so held in the suit.

(2) 21 A 145, 14 B L R 450, 3 Sar. P. C. J. 449, 23 W. R. 253, 3 Suth. 103.

When such was the finding, it cannot be said that the plaintiff desired to recover the mesne profits from Shiam Lal and not from the idol. In the relief claimed by him, he specifically desired relief both against the idol and against Shiam Lal. Execution was rightly ordered by the lower Court against the idol.

The appeal fails and we dismiss it with costs here on the higher scale.

The word "robbery" as used in Risk Note B is synonymous with "theft."

Under the Risk Note B, where a plaintiff depends for his cause of action on wilful neglect on the part of either the Railway administration or any of its servants, he cannot succeed if it is shown that the loss of the goods was due to theft from a running train [p 314, col. 2].

JUDGMENT.—These three connected appeals have been heard together. They relate to claims by different plaintiffs against the G. I. P. Railway Company. In this judgment we refer in particular to the facts of the Second Appeal (No. 1225 of 1922), but the facts of the others are admittedly on all fours with them and the points for decision are the same.

On 26th November 1920 a bale of cloth was delivered to the G. I. P. Railway Company at Victoria Terminus, Bombay, for despatch to Railway Station Yusufpur on the B. and N. W. Railway. The goods were never delivered. It is also admitted that they never reached the B. and N. W. Railway. A Risk Note in form B. was executed in respect of this consignment by one Hari Gobind whom the learned District Judge finds to be the person who delivered the goods to the Railway Company. The learned Judge finds that the loss of the goods was due to theft from a running train, that the guard of the train knew that the theft was being committed but that he is not shown to have been negligent in not stopping the train in order to prevent the theft or recover the goods.

The two questions which have been argued before us are.—

1. Whether the Risk Note was validly executed within the meaning of section 72 of the Indian Railways Act.

2. Whether the Railway Company is protected by it.

As to the former point section 72 provides that the note must be signed by or on behalf of the person sending or the person delivering the goods to the Railway Company. In this case Hari Gobind purported to sign on behalf of the sender R. Ramdeo. The learned Judge finds that he is not proved to have been R. Ramdeo's agent, but he finds that he was the deliverer of the goods to the Railway Company. This is a finding of fact which we must accept and it is sufficient to bring the Note within the terms of section 72.

If the decision of the second issue depended on our being able to accept the learned Judge's view that there was no negligence on the part of the Railway Company's servants we might have difficulty in upholding it. We find, however, that under the terms of the Risk Note the Railway is absolutely protected in case of robbery from a running train, which in this case is proved. It has been held in two cases of this Court, E. I. R. Co. v. Nathumal Behari Lal (1) and G. I. P. Railway Co. v. Bhola Nath Debi Das (2) that as used in Risk Note B the word "robbery" is synonymous with "theft". It has been argued on behalf of the appellants that the Railway is not protected if the robbery was due to negligence on the part of the Railway Company's servants. We think that the form of Risk Note is not capable of this construction. A Risk Note in the first instance holds the Railway Company free from responsibility for any loss or destruction of or damage to the goods from any cause whatever. To this there is an exception, namely, that when loss of a complete consignment is due to one of three causes the Railway Company can be held liable. These three causes are.—

1. Wilful neglect on the part of the Railway Administration.

2. Theft by the servants of the Railway.

3. Wilful neglect of the servants of the Railway.

There is, however, an exception to the exception in the shape of a further proviso which lays down that wilful neglect is not to be held to include fire, robbery from a running train, or any other unforeseen event or accident. Where, therefore, the plaintiff depends for his cause of action on wilful neglect on the part of either the Railway Administration or any of its servants he cannot succeed if it is shown that the loss of the goods was due to theft from a running train. This view of the Risk Note was at least impliedly taken in the second of the cases referred to above, namely, G. I. P. Railway Co., v. Bhola Nath Debi Das (2). It is directly laid down in B. B. and C. I. Railway Company v. Ranchhodlal Chhotatalal (3). The material passage

"In the absence of proof of wilful neglect or theft by the Railway servants the administration is to be held free from responsibility. If, however, neglect or theft by Railway servants is proved the administration will escape liability for loss if proof is given of robbery from a running train."

We think, therefore, that the decision of the lower Court is correct and dismiss all three appeals. In view of the fact that in our opinion there was gross negligence on the part of the G. I. P. Railway Company we allow to that Company no costs of the appeals. The other Railway Companies who have been impleaded in Second Appeals Nos. 1504 and 1507 of 1922 are entitled to their costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Babu Debendra Narayan Bhattacharjee, for the Appellants.

Babus Hemendra Nath Sen, Sarat Kumar Mitra and Narendra Krishna Basu, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is from the judgment of the District Judge of Murshidabad. The appellant is the plaintiff in a rent suit, the respondent No 1 being the tenant and No. 2 a co-sharer landlord. The suit related to an occupancy holding governed by the terms of a kabuliyat executed in 1875. In 1911 four bighas odd was acquired for railway purposes under the Land Acquisition Act, and the compensation money, some Rs. 470, was paid over to the tenant. In 1919 this suit was brought for the rent, for the years 1322 to 1325. The defendant claimed abatement and also pleaded certain payments. The first Court gave effect to both pleas and made a decree in part. The learned District Judge dismissed the appeal. Before us various points have been taken in argument which were not touched in the Courts below. It is argued first of all that having regard to the terms of the kabuliyat no question of abatement can arise at all, because it is expressly provided against. The terms are as follows according to the translation before us.

"Any loss arising from leaving the lands fallow or from floods or drought will be mine, you will not have anything to do with it, nor shall I be entitled to claim abatement of the stipulated rent on any account whatsoever, any such claim will not be entertained,

We think that what is contemplated by those clauses of the kabuliyat is loss arising from the natural causes referred to, or due to the tenants' own default, and that when the clause goes on to provide that abatement cannot be claimed "on any account whatsoever", it must be read as a whole along with what precedes it, and should be taken as meaning that abatement would not be claimable in the case of loss by reason of causes ejusdem generis with those specified. It cannot be taken to include a case where the deficiency is due to compulsory acquisition under the law of a portion of the land. The question has to be decided as a matter of construction of this particular document, but mention may perhaps be made of the case of Waston & Co. v. Nistarini Gupta (1), where a very similar question arose for decision.

It is next contended that under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act it is not permissible for a tenant to set up a claim for abatement in answer to a rent suit, and that having regard to the provisions of section 38 and section 52 of that Act, the only procedure open to him is himself to institute a suit for the purpose of establishing his claim to abatement and a refund of anything already overpaid. The cases under Act X of 1859 show that under the law as then existing such matters could be raised and adjudicated upon in a rent suit. See Deendyal Lal v. Thukroo Koonwar (2), Maharajah Dheraj Mahtab Chand v. Chaitro Coommarree Bibee (3), and Gour Kishore Chunder v. Bonomalee Chowdhury (4). In the case of Siba Kumari Devi v. Bipradas Pal Chowdhury (5) it was held that a tenant could set up such a plea in a rent suit in a case where he had never actually obtained possession of a portion of the land, though it was held that sections 38 and 52 of the Act were not applicable. The same principle is illustrated in Bem Madhab Roy v. Krishna Kamini Gupta (6).

The case of Sukhray Rai v. Ganga Dayal Singh (7) is directly in point, and upholds the principle that abatement may be claimed in a rent suit. By section 52 of the Act a right is conferred upon the tenant to claim abatement for deficiency in area, and I do not think it is possible to say that any thing in the language of section 38 necessarily limits the assertion of that right to the case of a tenant coming forward as plaintiff in a suit instituted specifically for the purpose. It is further argued that the matter ought not to be entertained as there has been no compliance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code in regard to the pleading of set off, but there appears to be no substance in this. The defendant in his written statement definitely claimed a specified amount under the heading of abatement and though it may be that the term 'set off' was not used that is immaterial so long as the matter has been substantially and unmistakeably raised as in the present case.

Then it is contended that there has been no measurement as contemplated by section 52, and without that no claim to abatement can be allowed. The kabuliyat gives the area as 23 bighas 14 kanals 19 gandas of land "described in the schedule below" and the schedule contains the particular area and rent of a large number of smaller plots making up the whole. The acquisition by the Railway related to a portion of two of those plots only amounting to 4 bighas 1 kanal 5 ch. That was the measurement arrived at in the Land Acquisition Proceedings. The learned Munsif found that that amount had been so acquired, and apparently no question of fresh measurement was ever raised by the plaintiff at any stage of the suit in the original Court. The proof so far as it went was unchallenged, and afforded some evidence of measurement of the land.

It is further urged that if the abatement is allowed at all it should be confined to that claimable for the years covered by the suit, and no questions of payment should have been gone into. But as to a matter of set-off there has been no reason suggested why the claim should be so limited, and as to the question of payment, there is no reason why the Munsif should not have gone into the character of the payments as he has done, and, after finding that a specified amount had been wrongly debited against the defendant under the guise of interest, direct that credit should be allowed him in this suit for the amount.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 202—Case referred to Revenue Court—Revenue Court, order of Appeal, where lies

Once a case has been properly referred to the Revenue Court, an appeal from the Revenue Court lies not to Civil Court but to the superior Revenue Court [p. 318, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 21st December 1922.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant;
Mr. B. E. O'Connor, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises under the following circumstances:—

The respondents who are two in number, namely, Jagdish Narain Rai and Musammatt Kesha Kunwar, brought a suit in the Civil Court against the appellant Hirdey Narain Rai for possession and mesne profits on the allegation that the parties were joint owners of the plots in suit and the share of the plaintiffs, namely, the present respondents, was two-thirds. The appellant pleaded that he was, apart from the question of the title being found in the parties, the sole tenant of the entire land in suit, and, therefore, he was not liable to be ejected, his possession being lawful. The respondents' case was that the lands were the khud-kasht of the parties and the entry of the appellant's name as a tenant in the village papers was a fictitious one. In accordance with the provisions of section 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act, the learned Subordinate Judge referred the appellant to the Revenue Court. The suit out of which the present appeal has arisen was accordingly instituted by the appellant in the Revenue Court. The respondents pleaded there that the entry in favour of the appellant as a tenant was fictitious, and that, if there was a tenancy, both the parties were entitled to it. They further took the plea that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The learned Assistant Collector held that he had jurisdiction, the case having been referred to him by the Subordinate Judge. He further held that the appellant was an occupancy tenant of the lands, holding under the entire body of proprietors.

The respondents being dissatisfied with the decree of the Assistant Collector lodged an appeal before the learned District Judge. There it was contended for the appellant that the appeal lay to the Commissioner and not to the District Judge. The learned District Judge held that he had jurisdiction to hear the appeal, and, accordingly, entertained the appeal, and in the result dismissed the suit of the appellant as instituted in the Revenue Court.

In this appeal only one point has been urged, namely the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, and the entertainment of the appeal by the District Judge was entirely against the entire scheme on which section 202 of the Tenancy Act has been based.

I think this contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant is sound. Before proceeding further I may point out the anomaly that would arise by the learned District Judge entertaining the appeal. The original suit before the learned Subordinate Judge is still pending. It will have to be decided

HARISADHAN PATARI v. DINANATH BANERJEE.

(assuming that there was no appeal to this Court) according to the decision of the learned District Judge. Then there would be an appeal to the District Judge. Thus the learned District Judge would be hearing two appeals from different Courts on the same subject.

The learned Counsel for the respondents relied on section 177 (f) of the Tenancy Act and contended that an appeal did lie to the District Judge under the provision of law. But it was with the object of settling questions of jurisdiction that the provisions of Chapter XIV of the Tenancy Act were enacted, and there is no force in this contention.

If we assume, as we must assume for the present, that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in directing the appellant to obtain a declaration from the Revenue Court as to his status as a tenant, the only Court to which an appeal would lie from the decision of the Revenue Court would be a superior Revenue Court, namely, the Court of the Commissioner. This is expressly laid down in section 202 of the Tenancy Act itself. It says in clause (2) that the Civil Court would dispose of the suit in accordance with the final decision of the Revenue Court of first instance or appeal as the case may be. Clearly it was never contemplated that once a case has been properly referred to the Revenue Court an appeal from the Revenue Court would come to the Civil Court.

If, however, it be the case that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in referring the appellant to the Revenue Court, the question can be raised again by way of appeal against the decree that will be passed by the learned Subordinate Judge in accordance with the decision of the Revenue Court. That remedy, if necessary, against a wrong decision of the Civil Court as to the applicability or otherwise of section 202 of the Tenancy Act is still open.

In my opinion the learned District Judge was in error in assuming jurisdiction. I, accordingly, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct the learned District Judge to return the memorandum of appeal (when the record is received in his Court) to the respondents for presentation to the proper Court. The respondents will at all events pay the costs of the appellant in the District Judge's Court and in this Court. Costs in this Court will include Counsel's fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff and arises out of a suit for khas possession after declaration of the plaintiff's title to the land in suit. The plaintiff's case is that the land in suit consists of two plots with an intermediate plot which belonged to defendant No. 1, that the land in suit together with other lands originally belonged to one Dwarik Patari which he held under a registered kabuliyat executed by him in the year 1296 B. S. at a jama of Rs 38 odd, that Dwarik Patari made a gift of the jama lands to the plaintiff in 1318 and that the plaintiff let out the land in suit to one Sadhan Patari who was dispossessed by defendant No. 1 in 1319. The present suit was brought against defendant No. 1 and one Chehiroo as defendant No. 2 to whom the defendant No. 1 let out the lands in 1319. Chehiroo filed a written statement alleging that he held the land originally under Dwarik and that in 1319 he was induced by defendant No. 1 to execute a kabuliyat in his favour, but the land, he said, really belonged to the plaintiff. Defendant No. 1 denied plaintiff's title and the dispossession alleged by him. Defendant No. 1 further alleged that the two plots in dispute together with the intermediate plot really formed one plot and formed part of the jama held by him under the zemindar.

The Munsif raised a number of issues; but the main issues were two, and they were:—

(3) Is the plaintiff's claim barred by limitation? and

(2) Has the plaintiff any title to the land in suit as alleged in the plaint?

The learned Munsif in an elaborate and careful judgment discussed the question of the plaintiff's title and the title of the defendants and found in favour of the plaintiff. He decided the question of limitation also in favour of the plaintiff. Although the learned Munsif found these issues in favour of the plaintiff, he gave him a decree only for declaration of title but refused to give khas possession on the ground that the tenancy of the tenant Sadhan with whom the plaintiff settled the land in 1318 was still subsisting and, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to khas possession of the land. Both parties appealed separately before the Subordinate Judge.

The Subordinate Judge without deciding the question of title which was also in appeal before him by defendant No. 1, decided the case on the question of limitation and dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation. Plaintiff has brought this appeal against that decree and it was contended on his behalf by the learned Vakils who appeared for him that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge was erroneous, because first the questions of title and limitation were so intimately connected that the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment on the question of limitation alone was not based on the whole of the evidence and was, therefore, wrong; secondly, that the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge were based upon a misapprehension of law and facts and were not sufficient for the disposal of the question of limitation; thirdly, it was contended that the learned Munsif in discussing the question of title had referred to an exhibit which was a kobala in favour of the defendant by one Chitra Dasi in which there was a clear admission in the year 1910 that the plaintiff's predecessor Dwarik was the owner of the land in suit which was stated as one of the boundaries of the plots conveyed by the kobala in favour of the defendant. The land in suit was described as Dwarik's land and Patit. The learned Subordinate Judge, it was argued, was in error in not referring at all to that document and thereby excluded very material evidence from his consideration in the determination of the appeal. The learned Vakils who appeared for the respondent, although he frankly admitted that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was not very satisfactory, still contended that there was a finding which shows that the suit was barred by limitation. After hearing the learned Vakils for the parties and after a very careful consideration of the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge I am of opinion that there has not been a proper trial of the case by the Subordinate Judge. I think that the omission of the learned Subordinate Judge to consider the question of title and the evidence adduced by both the parties on that point has very seriously prejudiced the trial in this case. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and this Court also have repeatedly pointed out the desirability in appealable cases, of the Courts pronouncing their opinion on all important points in order to enable the Appellate Courts to dispose of the cases finally and thus avoid delay and expenses of a remand. In this connection it should also be borne in mind that O. XLI, r. 31 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the judgment of the Appellate Court should state the points raised in appeal and the decision upon those points and the reasons for the decision. There is no reason why this important rule should be ordinarily departed from. In the present case the question of limitation was intimately mixed up with the question of title. The evidence is directed against both the points. The judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge gives no indication that he had considered the very important and large body of evidence both oral and documentary which were on the record in support of the cases of the respective parties. If the Appellate Court had considered the evidence and accepted the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff so far as title is concerned, it might well be that he would have taken the same view of the question of possession on behalf of the plaintiff as the learned Munsif did. In discussing the question of title the learned Munsif points out that defendant No. 1 admitted the title of Dwarik in the kebala which I have already mentioned and also that defendant No. 1 became a witness to the Will of Dwarik by which he disposed of the land in suit, as his own property. Defendant No. 1 tried to explain away his conduct with reference to this document, but the learned Munsif refused to accept his explanation and held that defendant No. 1 admitted the title of Dwarik. The learned Subordinate Judge has not referred to this important evidence. It is clear to my mind that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is not based upon the whole of the evidence in the case.

Then the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of limitation is also clearly defective. All that the judgment amounts to is that the plaintiff has failed to prove that he was in possession by receipt of rent within 12 years of the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge does not even say that the defendant was in possession or when his possession really began. The First Court found that the title was with the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, when considering the question of limitation should have assumed that the title was with the plaintiff. In considering the question of possession of land like the land in suit, various matters should be considered. According to the plaint, Dwarik, except for the short period that the land was khas, possessed those lands through tenants of whom Chehiroo was one. The defendant also claimed Chehiroo as his tenant. If Chehiroo was Dwarik's tenant, the mere non-payment of rent by a tenant or non-receipt of rent by the landlord would show that the plaintiff the rightful owner was not in possession. It was essential to consider who was tenant in possession of the land, and also when, if at all, such tenancy was terminated. Then again the land in suit appears to be what is called Bastu land and such lands unfenced as they are in the villages, usually remain vacant and the only act of possession as is usual and as was suggested in the present case, was occasional cultivation by broadcasting of pulses. It was necessary to enquire who was in occupation and on whose behalf. The occasional user by a trespasser of land cannot extinguish the title of the rightful owner, unless the possession of the trespasser is open, is adequate in extent and continuity and so forth. In this connection see the case of Basanta Kumar Roy v. The Secretary of State for India (1). Here the land was described as patni in the Schedule of the plaint and was also described as patit in the conveyance of defendant No. 1 and the plaintiff expressly drew the attention of the Court to this fact by a petition. No notice of this fact was taken by the Subordinate Judge in discussing the question of the plaintiff's possession. It is unnecessary for me to discuss what patit really means in the present case. Possibly it means that when the lands were not in the actual occupation of a tenant no particular use was made of the land by anybody. On these grounds I think that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge on the question of limitation in the circumstances of the present case is not sufficient, or satisfactory. The result is that the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge are set aside and the case is sent back to the lower Appellate Court for a re-trial of the appeal according to law. If the plaintiff is found entitled to succeed, in these circumstances of the case, he should get khas possession. The plaintiff is entitled to the costs of this appeal and the other costs will abide the result.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sec. I, Art. I—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 144—Restitution order—Appeal—Ad valorem Court-fee.

An appeal from an order passed on an application for restitution under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, must be stamped ad valorem under Article I, Schedule I of the Court Fees Act as an appeal from a decree and cannot be filed as an appeal from an order in execution of a decree with a fixed Court-fee stamp.

An order under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, is not an order in execution falling under section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

Reference under section 5 of the Court Fees Act.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.
The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision in this reference is whether an appeal from an order passed on an application for restitution under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code requires to be stamped ad valorem under Article I Schedule I of the Court Fees Act as an appeal from a decree, or can be filed as an appeal from an order in execution on a Court-fee of Rs 2. The suit out of which the reference arises was one claiming a declaration that the plaintiff was an owner in possession of a house which had been sold in execution and bought by the defendant-appellant. The first Court dismissed the suit. In appeal the suit was decreed for a one-third share in the house. The defendant had obtained possession of the entire house under the Trial Court's decree. The order under appeal has granted the plaintiff possession of a one-third in the house by way of restitution. The appellant's case is that the plaintiff could only obtain possession of his one-third share by means of a suit for partition.

The question of law does not admit of any doubt. Orders under sections 47 and 144 are expressly declared to be decrees by section 2 of the Code. In the absence of any provision to the contrary appeals from decrees require to be stamped ad valorem. The fee payable on appeals under section 47 would be ad valorem, but that it has been specially reduced by the Governor in Council by Notification No. 1231/VII of the 11th October 1923 under the powers conferred by section 35 of the Court Fees Act as amended by the Devolution Act of 1920. No similar reduction has been made in the case of appeals under section 144.

In order to claim exemption from an ad valorem fee the objector is compelled to argue that all orders under section 144 are orders in execution falling also under section 47. There was at one time some difference of opinion even in this Court as to whether orders under section 144 were to be treated as orders in execution, and the objector is able to cite one decision, Gokal Prasad v. Ram Devi (1), in his favour, but the opposite view is now generally accepted and has been adopted by this Court in two cases, Jiva Ram v. Nand Ram (2), and Brij Lal v. Damodar Das (3), and by the Patna High Court in an elaborate Full Bench decision in Balmukanda Marwar v. Basanta Kumari Dasi (4). The question has usually arisen with reference to limitation whether an application would be barred if it falls under Art. 181 of the Limitation Act but in time if it can be traced as an application for the execution of a decree under Art. 182. The principle of these decisions is equally applicable to the question of Court fees.

An application under section 144 is no doubt one which carries out the intention of the Appellate Court's decree, but it does not directly execute that decree. What it does is to undo an execution wrongly granted by the Court below. In this case the High Court's decree was a declaratory and could only have been executed in respect of costs. The appellant must, therefore, stamp his appeal ad valorem. As only one-third of the house is really in dispute and not the entire house, he asks leave to amend his valuation so as to correspond with the matter in dispute. He is permitted to do this. The Court fee on the amended valuation (the value of one-third of the house) must be made good within two months of this date, failing which the appeal will be put up for orders of rejection.

It is unlikely that the omission of orders under section 144 from the notification referred to above was due to deliberate intention. The exemption of appeals under section 47 from an ad valorem fee dates back to a time when the Code of 1882 was in force. Under that Code, section 583, an application by way of restitution was treated as a proceeding in execution and there was no need for a separate notification under the section corresponding to the present section 144. It is probable that if the matter is brought to the notice of Government, Government will not consider it desirable to impose an ad valorem fee on a party who is merely asking the Court to right a wrong unintentionally done by the Court itself. I direct that a copy of this judgment be forwarded to Government with the suggestion that the provisions of paragraph (4) of the notification should be extended to appeals from orders under section 144.

Appeal against the order of the Second Additional District Judge, 24 Parganas, dated the 8th of June 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, Fourth Court at Diamond Harbour in the District of 24 Parganas, dated the 26th of May, 1921.

Babu Manmatha Nath Roy, for Respondents Nos. 5 and 6.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order of the Second Additional District Judge of the 24 Parganas confirming the order of the Munsif, Fourth Court, Diamond Harbour, dismissing an application for setting aside a sale in execution of a rent decree. The judgment-debtor applicants, now appellants, with a large number of co-sharers held under the decree-holder Barada Prosad Roy Chowdhury a chak comprising an area of 147 bighas bearing a yearly rental of Rs. 183-12. The said Barada Prosad sued the tenants, the applicants and their co-sharers for arrears of rent and obtained a decree on the 28th August 1917. The decree was in due course put into execution on the 18th January, 1918, and the chak in default being put up to sale was purchased by one Jadu Nath Sarma on the 2nd July 1918. The judgment-debtor Haripada and others then applied to have the sale set aside and assailed both the decree and the sale on various grounds. One of the points for determination was whether the application was barred by limitation, and the finding of the Munsif was that the case was governed by Art. 166 of the Limitation Act, and that the application was time-barred, and he accordingly dismissed it with costs. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge confirmed the decision of the Munsif holding that Art. 166 and not Art. 181 was applicable to the case, and dismissed the appeal with costs. The judgment-debtors Hari Pada Haldar and others then filed the second appeal.

A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondents to the hearing of the appeal, firstly on the ground that in so far as the application was one under section 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, no appeal lies either in this Court or in the Court of first appeal; and secondly that the appeal is not competent by reason of non-joinder of parties, the heirs and legal representatives of one of the respondents No. 10 Annoda Charan Haldar not having been brought on to the record. We do not think it is necessary to go into these matters because we are satisfied that the appeal fails upon the merits. On the merits the sole point for determination is whether the Courts below have rightly held that the application was barred by limitation. The execution sale took place on the 2nd July 1918, and the application for setting aside the sale was made in August 1920 i.e., some two years later. Under Art. 166 the period of limitation is 30 days, whereas under Art. 181 it is three years. If the former is applicable the application was clearly time-barred, while if Art. 181 applies it was within time. In our judgment the Courts below have rightly held that the case is governed by Art. 166. The rulings which have been referred to in support of the contrary view, Chand Monee Dasia v. Santo Monee Dasia (1) and Chandrama Rai v. Maharaja of Dumraon (2) were decided under the Act as it formerly stood before the passing of the present Limitation Act when Art. 166 was restricted to a particular class of applications. That article as now worded is very much wider and is quite general in its terms governing all applications to have an execution sale set aside. Indeed it is arguable having regard to the extremely wide wording of the article that it covers the case of applications made under section 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But, be that as it may, it is clear that an application under section 173, Bengal Tenancy Act, is cognisable under section 47, Code of Civil Procedure [see Chand Monee Dasya v. Santo Monee Dasya (1) relating to section 244 of the Old Civil Procedure Code], and that being so the operation of Art. 166 will be attracted. This view accords moreover with the fitness of things as it is manifestly anomalous that the period of limitation for setting aside a sale under the Bengal Tenancy Act should be so long as three years, whereas under the Code of Civil Procedure it should be only 30 days. As pointed out in Satish Chandra Kanungo v. Nishi Chandra Dutta (3) the policy of the Legislature appears to be that questions arising in execution should be brought before the Courts and decided with the least possible delay. In the present instance nearly two years elapsed before the application was made.

For the reasons stated the appeal in our judgment fails and must be dismissed with costs. Hearing-fee two gold mohurs.

An application is also made under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, in the alternative. Inasmuch as we have disposed of the appeal on the merits it is not necessary to pass any order under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 8th September 1922.

Mr. Mangal Prasad Bhargava, for the Appellants.

Mr. U. S. Bapnai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this case is not one free from difficulty. On the 13th June 1908 Tilak Rai, Ganesh Rai and Mahabir Rai borrowed Rs. 160 from Bhushi Rai, the plaintiff-respondent, and mortgaged with possession certain occupancy plots. There was an agreement that in case the mortgagee was ejected from the occupancy holding or from any portion thereof by any act on the part of the mortgagors or his heirs or legal representatives, he would be entitled to claim possession of the occupancy holding or to recover damages at the rate of 10 maunds per bigha from the date of his ejection, or to recover the entire money due to him with interest at the rate of 2 per cent per mensem from the date of his ejection till the date of realisation from the person and the other property of the mortgagors, including two houses specifically described in the deed. There was a further covenant that the occupancy holding and the two houses aforesaid shall be deemed to be mortgaged and hypothecated for the repayment of the money secured by the mortgage. The occupancy holding in question was situated in Chak Abdulla Khatib alias Mauza Raziapur. The houses in question were situated in Balapur.

GANESH RAI v. BHUSHI RAI.

On the 16th February 1910 a deed of further charge was executed for Rs. 99-15 which provided for the repayment of the money due thereon, including interest, at the time of the repayment of the above mortgage and also mentioned that the occupancy holding and one of the houses shall stand mortgaged and hypothecated for the above amount.

On the 5th October 1910 there was a second deed of further charge executed for Rs. 49-15 couched in almost identical terms, with this difference that the house hypothecated for the repayment of the money due on that deed was the other of the two houses.

The allegation of the plaintiff was that he was placed in possession of the mortgaged holding and that in 1328 Fasli the defendants wrongfully interfered with his possession and removed the bajra crop, which he had sown over the mortgaged land. The plaintiff accordingly sued for a decree maintaining his possession as a mortgagee over the occupancy plots in question with the Arhar crop standing on a portion of it. He further prayed that in case he was found to be out of possession, such possession may be awarded to him. In the alternative he asked for the recovery of the money due on the mortgage and deeds of further charge by the sale of the houses mortgaged. He also claimed the price of the crop, which was alleged to have been sown by him and wrongfully cut away by the defendants.

The defendants contested the claim on various grounds. Their plea was that the mortgage and deeds of further charge were fictitious and without consideration, that they did not give possession to the plaintiff over the disputed plots, that the crops standing thereon had been sown and cut by them, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to get possession of the holding or to bring the mortgaged houses to sale.

The Court of first instance dismissed the claim, holding that as the mortgage of an occupancy holding was illegal, the mortgage of the houses could not be enforced because its enforcement was inter-dependent on the failure of the mortgage of the occupancy holding.

The lower Appellate Court, however, was of opinion that although the mortgage of an occupancy holding was illegal, the mortgagors could not oust the mortgagee by force after he had already obtained possession without repaying the mortgage-money. It then asked the Trial Court to determine whether the plaintiff had obtained possession under the mortgage in question and when he had been dispossessed. The finding of the Court of first instance was that the plaintiff had remained in continuous possession of the mortgaged holding till 1328 Fasli and that he was subsequently ousted by the defendants who took possession of the bajra crop sown by the plaintiff on a portion of the mortgaged holding, worth Rs. 15. The finding of the lower Appellate Court was that the plaintiff had been dispossessed less than six months before the institution of the suit and that on the ground of equity he was entitled to a decree for possession of the occupancy holding unless the mortgagors were willing to repay the mortgage-money. It proceeded accordingly to give the plaintiff a decree for possession but omitted to consider whether the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for damages on account of the crop said to have been cut away by the defendants or whether the other crop which is said to have existed on the date of the suit was still existing on the spot or had been removed.

There can be no question that the mortgage of an occupancy holding was illegal. The only matter which requires consideration is whether in that event the plaintiff is entitled to get back possession except by a suit brought under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act or to sue for the recovery of his money by the sale of the houses. The suit was not brought under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. In fact if it had been brought no appeal from a decree passed in such a suit could have been maintainable. As has been pointed out in Lachhman v. Shambhu Nath (1) where a plaintiff sues for possession on the basis of a title and fails to establish his title, his suit for possession based on title cannot be converted into a suit for possession under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and a decree for possession cannot be granted to him under the latter provision. In Pal Ahir v. Isghar Husain (2) where certain property mortgaged by the defendants, as if it were a fixed rate tenancy, was sold as such and purchased by the plaintiff who remained in possession for a time and afterwards the plaintiff was dispossessed by the defendants, who were found to have been occupancy tenants, it was held that a suit for the recovery of possession by the plaintiff was not maintainable in as much as the holding was an occupancy tenancy, a mortgage or sale of which could not be recognised. It was further held in that case that when a plaintiff is dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law and wishes to take the benefit of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, he ought to institute his suit on that ground alone and not on title so that the nature of the enquiry therein may be limited to the question of the immediate right of each party to possession. The learned District Judge observes that it would amount to encouraging the use of violence, if the Court refuses to give the mortgagee possession in these circumstances. But the mortgagee has his remedy open to him to seek possession irrespective of his title. He did not adopt that remedy and sought to obtain possession on the strength of his title and in the alternative for the recovery of the mortgage-money due on the mortgage and the deeds of further charge. To such a suit section 9 of the Specific Relief Act has no application.

The other points raised in the appeal have not been tried. The appeal is therefore allowed and the case remanded to the lower Appellate Court with a direction to reinstate the appeal under its original number and dispose of it after determining the other points raised in the suit and the appeal in the manner directed by law. Vendor and purchaser—Some interest reserved by vendor in property sold—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 10—Rule against perpetuity—Succession

There is nothing to prevent a vendor from reserving a certain interest in the property comprised in the sale for the benefit of himself and his lineal male descendants without any power of alienation, subject to the reversion of that interest in case there were no male descendants left to enjoy the benefit of that reservation [p 327, col 1]

The reservation of such an interest does not offend against the rule of perpetuity or involve the laying down of a rule of succession varying the ordinary law. On the other hand it merely amounts to the cutting of a certain interest out of the property sold for a limited purpose, and the vendee becomes fully entitled to the whole, when the interest so created dies out [ibid]

Second appeal against a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, dated the 17th November 1922

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to two bighas of nankar land situated in the village Balakmau, which appertained to a 9 pies share belonging to Ram Charan. On the 12th February 1884, Ram Charan sold his zemindari share aforesaid to Sheo Narain, his son-in-law, reserving at the same time the said two bighas of nankar land for his use and for the use of his male descendants (aulad khas) without any power of alienation and free from any liability for the payment of rent subject to the condition that if at any time he had no descendant left the land shall revert to the purchaser.

Ram Charan accordingly remained in possession of the said land during his lifetime. He was succeeded by his son Muazzam Ram, who died in the year 1918 without leaving any issue. The plaintiffs claim to be the nephews of Ram Charan and their contention is that the said two bighas of land had been permanently exempted from the sale and that the covenant restraining alienation and providing for the reversion of the property to the vendee in case Ram Charan had no male descendant left, was invalid. The defendants are the purchasers of the interest of Bindeshri and Rameshar, the nephews and legal representatives of Sheo Narain. The Courts below were of opinion that the reservation made in the sale-deed was absolute and a provision made for the reversion of the land to the vendee in case Ram Charan left no male descendant was void.

There is nothing, however, to prevent the vendor from reserving a certain interest in the property comprised in the sale for the benefit of himself and his lineal male descendants without any power of alienation subject to the reversion of that interest in case there were no male descendants left to enjoy the benefit of that reservation. The intention of the parties to the deed evidently was to have a provision for the maintenance of the vendor and his lineal descendants who were not to be charged any rent for the occupation of the land so long as any such lineal descendants were in existence and to have the rights of the vendee otherwise unaffected. The reservation of such an interest does not offend against the rule of perpetuity or involve the laying down of a rule of succession varying the ordinary law. On the other hand it merely amounts to the cutting of a certain interest out of the property sold for a limited purpose, and the vendee becomes fully entitled to the whole, when the interest so created dies out, as has happened in the present case. The plaintiffs are not the lineal descendants of Ram Charan and are not entitled to the benefit of the reservation made in the instrument of sale. This appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiffs dismissed with costs here and hitherto including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss 95, 98, 100—Common Manager—Suit for rent—Execution of decree—Previous sanction of District Judge, whether necessary.

There is no provision in the Bengal Tenancy Act which requires the previous sanction of the District Judge to be obtained to bring a suit for rent against a Common Manager or to execute a decree obtained in such suit [p 328, col. 1].

Appeal against the order of the Additionat Subordinate Judge, Backergunj, dated the 18th of November 1922, affirming that of the Officiating Munsif, Second Court, Patuakhali, dated the 19th September 1921.

Babu Prokash Chandra Majumdar, for the Appellants.

Babus Sures Chandra Talukdar and Mohendra Kumar Ghose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against the judgment of the Additionat Subordinate Judge of Backergunj confirming an order of the Munsif, Second Court, Patuakhali, dismissing an application for setting aside a sale.

The only point which has been urged before us on behalf of the appellant is that, inasmuch as the decree-holders did not obtain the previous sanction of the District Judge to execute the decree against the Common Manager, the sale held in execution thereof was a nullity, it being contended that the powers of a Common Manager are analogous to those of a Receiver and that the same procedure applies. This argument was advanced in the Courts below and was, we think, rightly rejected. Sections 93 to 100 of the Bengal Tenancy Act relate to the appointment of Common Manager, and there is no provision which requires the previous sanction of the District Judge to be obtained to bring a suit for rent against a Common Manager or to execute a decree obtained in such suit. If it had been the intention of the Legislature to require such sanction it may be presumed that it would have been plainly expressed. We cannot read into the Act something which is not to be found there.

The learned Vakil for the appellants was constrained to admit that he could not find any authority exactly in point in support of his proposition, but he relied upon the case of Nabo Kishore Mandal v. Atul Chandra Chatterjee (1) where it was laid down that a suit for accounts against a Common Manager requires the previous sanction of the District Judge. In the course of the judgment in that case it is said "The manager is, in our opinion, so far as he holds his office and performs his duties under the provisions of the Act, in a position analogous to that of a Receiver appointed by the Court under the provisions of O. XL, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, and is in our opinion entitled to the same protection, for the period during which he exercises his duties within the powers given to him by the Act, as a Receiver appointed by a Civil Court". In the suit for accounts the object was to re-open the accounts filed by the Common Manager from time to time before the District Judge, objections to which had been actually made before and disposed of by the District Judge, and it was, therefore, held that as regards items which in the ordinary course of the management ought to have appeared in the account and which the party was aware at the time were not included in the account or with due enquiry might have discovered were not included in the account, no suit would lie without sanction. The other case in which a similar opinion was expressed is Beni Madhab v. Upendra Chandra (2) which was also an account suit, and the question related to the institution of such a suit.

We are here, however, dealing not with an account suit but with an execution proceeding arising out of a rent-suit. In an account suit there are special reasons why such sanction is necessary. Those reasons do not exist, the decree being merely against the estate of the Common Manager in his capacity as such, and not involving him in any personal capacity. Furthermore, it is to be observed that the decree out of which the execution proceedings arose, was passed against the Common Manager and the Execution Court could not go behind the decree but was bound to execute it.

In our judgment, therefore, the Courts below rightly refused to set aside the sale. The appeal fails and must be dismissed, with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs.

Where a mortgage is made by a certificated guardian of a minor with the sanction of the District Judge recorded under section 31 of the Guardians and Wards Act, that sanction is prima facie evidence that the transaction is justified and is sufficient to relieve the creditor of the necessity of making any inquiry as to its being for legal necessity. [p. 328, col. 1]

BUDDHOO v. SHBO CHARAN.

It is the duty of the Court to which an application is made under section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act for sanction of the sale of minor's property, to satisfy itself by inquiry that the transaction is necessary and is for the minor's benefit, and a creditor is entitled to rely on an order of sanction as evidence that the Court has satisfied itself on this point and that the transaction is a proper one. The mere omission to recite the necessity in an order granting sanction, as required by section 31 (2) of the Guardians and Wards Act, is no more than an irregularity and it does not render the sanction altogether illegal. [p. 329, col. 2]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 9th May 1922.

Dr. Harmandan Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff to enforce a mortgage of a house belonging to the appellant Buddhoo. The appellant impeaches the transfer on the ground that it was made by his father as his guardian without legal necessity. It was also suggested that his father was spendthrift and an immoral person, but this plea has now disappeared. The appellant's father, Bhagwan Das was the certificated guardian of his son, and the mortgage was made with the sanction of the District Judge recorded under section 31 of the Guardians and Wards Act. Both the Courts below have held that this sanction is prima facie evidence that the transaction was justified and that it was sufficient to relieve the creditor of the necessity of making any further enquiry. We think that this view is correct. It is the duty of the Court to which an application is made under section 29 of the Act for sanction of the sale of a minor's property, to satisfy itself by enquiry that the transaction is necessary and is for the minor's benefit, and a creditor is entitled to rely on an order of sanction as evidence that the Court has satisfied itself on this point and that the transaction is a proper one. This view has quite recently been taken by the Madras High Court in Nallaka Venkatasami v. Rajam Virranna (1). It is also in accordance with the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gangapershad Sahu v. Maharani Bibi (2) where they say:—

"Their Lordships think that when an order of the Court has been made authorising the guardian of an infant to raise a loan on the security of the infant's estate, the lender of the money is entitled to trust to that order, and that he is not bound to inquire as to the expediency or necessity of the loan for the benefit of the infant's estate. If any fraud or underhand dealing is brought home to him that would be a different matter; but, apart from any charge of that kind, their Lordships think he is entitled to rest upon the order."

Two other points have been raised by the appellant in argument. The first is that the sanction is not a legal sanction because the necessity for the mortgage was not recited in the order as required by section 31 (2) of the Act, and the other that the reasons given by the plaintiff's father in his original application are not sufficient to justify the transaction.

As to the second point, it is sufficient to say that the question is one which might have involved the taking of evidence, and that it was never raised in either of the Courts below. We, therefore, decline to enter into it. The first question also was not raised in either of the Courts below, and we need not therefore go into it, but in any case we consider that the mere omission to recite the necessity in the order is no more than an irregularity and that it does not render the sanction altogether illegal. In this respect we prefer the view of the Calcutta High Court in Maharaja Sir Rameshwar Singh Bahadur v. Dhanpat Singh (3).

to that taken by the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in Bankay Lal v Swami Dayal (4). Except for the omission to recite the necessity, the order appears on the face of it to have been passed with due care, for the learned Judge has been careful to lay down the condition that the interest on the mortgage to be effected should not exceed 12 per cent. For these reasons we dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court, fees on the higher scale.

An application for re-admitting an appeal dismissed for default should be treated as a miscellaneous matter and the Court should give the applicant an opportunity to show that he was prevented by sufficient cause from being present when the appeal was called on for hearing.

Appeal against an order of the Second Additional District Judge, Dacca, dated the 9th of June 1922.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, for Babu Prokash Chandra Pakrashu, for the Appellant.

Babu Bepin Chandra Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates to an order of the Second Additional District Judge of Dacca passed on the 9th June 1922. On that date it appears that the present appellant had an appeal and a cross-appeal pending in that Court and when the appeals were called on he was absent. The result was that the appeal was dismissed for default and the cross-appeal was decreed ex parte. On the same day an application was made to re-admit the appeal upon which the application was rejected summarily, the learned Judge noting at the time that he had gone to the length of sending a peon to the Bar library to find the Pleader, but neither the Pleader nor the client could be found. We think that in these cases the best course to adopt, and the shortest in the end, is to treat the application as a miscellaneous matter and to give the applicant an opportunity to show that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from being present when the appeal was called on so as to comply with the provisions of O. XLI, r. 19, Civil Procedure Code. In the present case no such opportunity has been given to the appellant. Under the circumstances the appeal must be allowed and the case sent back to the lower Appellate Court to entertain the application for re-admission of the appeal upon the merits and to dispose of it according to law.

We make no order as to costs.

If the starting point is to be calculated, as so many months or so many years from a particular date, that point must be calculated according to the Gregorian calendar. ROSHAN LAL V BASHIR AHMED.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge Allahabad, dated the 19th May 1921.

Mr Gulzar Lal and Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question for determination in this appeal is whether the suit was rightly dismissed by the Court below on the ground of limitation.

The suit was brought on foot of a bond executed on the 10th of July 1908. The principal amount was payable in the course of three years. But it was also stipulated that interest would be paid every six months according to the Hindi calendar and if any much interest (payable every six months) should remain unpaid the mortgagee would be entitled to enforce his bond without waiting for the three years' time. It is common ground that no interest was paid by the mortgagor. It is also common ground that if six months, according to the Hindi calendar, be added to the date of the bond, the starting point of limitation would be some time before the 10th of January 1909, the date on which the suit was actually filed. On the other hand if six months, according to the Gregorian calendar, be taken from the date of the bond as the starting point of limitation, the suit would be just within time. The question is what course should be adopted to find out the starting point of limitation.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has taken his stand on section 25 of the Limitation Act and has referred us to two cases viz Rango Bujari v Babari (1) and Latifunnisa v Dhan Kunwar (2). The Court below has referred to the case of Dwarka Prasad v. Raja Ram (3). We have carefully gone through these cases and are of opinion that it is really a matter of interpretation in every case. The true principle seems to be this. If the starting point is to be calculated, as so many months or so many years from a particular date, that point must be calculated according to the Gregorian calendar. On the other hand, if the starting point is otherwise fixed by the stipulation itself, the Court cannot apply section 25 of the Limitation Act. In the case of South British Fire and Marine Insurance Co v Brojo Nath Shaha (4) their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court had to interpret a policy of insurance and they held that lunar months were meant and not calendar months. It is, therefore, really a matter of interpretation in every case.

Coming to the facts of this case we find in the bond itself the following expressions—

"I, therefore, covenant and give in writing that I shall pay the principal to the said creditor within three years and shall continue to pay interest on the entire amount at 0-14 per cent per mensem according to Hindi months including the intercalary month till the payment of the entire amount due thereunder. If God forbid or if six monthly interest be not paid, the said creditor shall, under all the circumstances, have power to realise the whole of the principal, etc." We have read and re-read the document and we have also consulted the original document in Urdu character. It seems clear to us that the parties meant that interest would be paid every six Hindi months without dividing the year in which there is an intercalary month, into the two periods of six and seven months. This view of the stipulation has been taken by the plaintiff himself in the account appended to the plaint. Their interest has been calculated every six Hindi months. In the first two six months the calculation is from Asarh to Pus and Pus to Asarh. But in the third period which contained apparently an intercalary month, the six months are composed not of seven months Asarh to Pus but exactly six months Asarh to Aghan. The intention, therefore, was that the interest should be payable at the expiry of six months according to the Hindi calendar, that is to say, on a particular date and not at the expiry of "six months" which under section 25

The mere entry of a figure in the khatauni, with the signatures of the landlord, the tenant and the Qanungo cannot be regarded as an agreement to enhance rent duly attested under sections 41 and 97 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Jhansi, dated the 15th of November 1922.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for arrears of rent at the rate of Rs 45 a year for the three years, 1327, 1328 and 1329 Fasli. The defence was that the rate of rent was Rs. 18 only and this had been duly paid. The First Court has found that this defence was false; that the rent recorded until 1325 was Rs. 21-8, that from 1325 onwards Rs 45 has been entered as the rent, and that in the khatauni of 1329 Fasli there appear against the entry of Rs 45 the signatures of the landlord, of one of the tenants and of the Qanungo. This entry it has accepted as an agreement to pay rent at the enhanced rate of Rs. 45 under section 41 of the Tenancy Act and the signature of the Qanungo it has accepted as a sufficient attestation to dispense with the necessity for registration under section 97 of that Act. The lower Appellate Court has dissented from this view and has decreed the suit at the rate of Rs. 21-8, holding that no valid enhancement of rent had taken place.

In appeal two points have been taken, the first that the entry in the khatauni amounts to a valid agreement for the enhancement of the rent under section 41 read with section 97 of the Tenancy Act, the second that even if this is not the case, there is evidence to prove that for the years 1325 and 1326 Fasli rent at the enhanced rate had been paid, and that under section 35 of the Tenancy Act this must be presumed to be the rate payable for the holding.

Section 41 of the Tenancy Act provides that the rent of an occupancy tenant shall be liable to enhancement only by registered agreement or by decree or order of a Revenue Court. Section 97 allows the substitution of the attestation of a Revenue Officer not inferior in rank to a Qanungo for registration subject to such conditions as the Local Government may direct. The Local Government has laid down a certain form of endorsement to be entered on in such an agreement. It is quite clear that the mere entry of a figure in the khatauni with the signatures of the landlord, the tenant and the Qanungo cannot be regarded as an agreement to enhance rent duly attested under these provisions of the Act. There remains the question whether it is proved that the tenants had been paying rent at the enhanced rate for two years previously to the years in suit. In support of this there is the entry in the khatauni, but no other direct evidence. The plaintiff, when examined on oath, deposed that the defendant's brother and predecessor-in-interest had executed a registered kabuliyat under which he had to pay the higher rate. He did not, however, produce this kabuliyat. I am unable to regard the evidence of payment of Rs 45 for the years 1325 and 1326 as adequate. In these circumstances the appeal must fail.

Essentials of doctrine of part performance stated.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Hardoi, dated the 14th February 1923.

Messrs. Niamat Ullah and E. R. Kidwai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, Bisheshwar Nath, Salik Ram, H. K. Ghosh, Ali Zaheer and Raghbir Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is the defendants' appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi, dated the 14th February 1922, in a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents for possession of a one anna share in village Beshar, Pargana Bangar, District Hardoi. The admitted facts are as follows:—The property in suit originally belonged to Madho Singh, Subba Singh and Musammat Shiam Kuar. Under a possessory mortgage it has been in the possession of Ajudhia Prasad, plaintiff No. 1 in the present suit, and others. On the 29th September 1913, the original owners executed ostensibly a deed of mortgage in respect of the property in suit in favour of Murli, Ram Dharan, Meharban Singh and Malrand Singh. Ajudhia Prasad then brought a suit for pre-emption in respect of the transfer of the 29th September 1913 on the ground that the transaction was in reality a sale and that the apparent form of it as a mortgage was merely a cloak assumed with the design of defeating the right of pre-emption. After that suit for pre-emption had proceeded up to a certain stage Debidin, uncle of Ajudhia Prasad, instituted another suit for pre-emption in respect of the same transfer and on the same grounds on which the first suit was founded. The two suits were consolidated and tried together with the result that they were settled by a compromise dated the 8th June 1918 (Exhibit B3) entered into between the two plaintiffs and the transferees. A decree of Court (Exhibit B 4) was framed in terms of the compromise. Under that decree Debidin was given the first right of pre-emption on payment within one month of the entire consideration entered in the deed of the 29th September 1913; in the event of default Ajudhia Prasad was to acquire the property in suit on payment of the same amount and within the like period. The condition of the decree in favour of Debidin was complied with by depositing in Court the money payable to the transferees on the 2nd July 1918.

We now enter into the region of controversy and with a view to elucidate the facts involved in it, we set out the pedigree given at the beginning of the judgment of the Court below.

Ajuddhia Prasad plaintiff No. 1 is the son of Gauri Shankar, a brother of Debidin. The plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are the sons of Shyam Lal, who was the son of another brother of Debidin. The defendants are the sons of Debidin. The substance of the plaintiffs' case is that by the force of certain circumstances arising out of the evidence produced by the defendants in Ajuddhia Prasad's suit for pre-emption that suit was doomed to failure, that with a view to avert this result it was settled between Lala Debidin and the plaintiff No. 1 and the father of the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4, as the manager of his own family, that a benami suit in the name of the said Debidin be filed, that plaintiff No. 1 and the father of plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4 may conduct and prosecute the suit, bear the expenses thereof and pay the purchase money, a decree for which has been passed, that they should become the owners of the decreed pre-empted property and that if God forbid the suit be lost the plaintiff No. 1 and the father of the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4 be held liable for the costs of the opposite party. As regards the costs of the suit assurance was held out by Babu Gaufi Shankar." Vide paragraph 8 of the plaint. At the hearing of the appeal in this Court the statement as to the cause of action of the present suit, as given above was subjected to two alternative constructions by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents. The first construction as developed in the plaint is that the suit for pre-emption instituted in the name of Debidin was in reality a suit by Ajudhya Prasad, that the decree obtained in that suit was the decree in favour of Ajudhya Prasad and that by the force of that decree Ajudhya Prasad became the owner of the property in suit. This view of the plaintiffs' case has found favour with the Court below and the decree of that Court now under appeal is founded on that view. On behalf of the appellants the facts, which form the basis of the decision taken by the learned Subordinate Judge, are not seriously disputed before us. The arguments advanced in support of the appeal were mainly directed to the exposition of the law applicable to those facts.

The second construction which the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents placed before us for acceptance is that prior to the institution of Debidin's suit an agreement was arrived at between Debidin on one hand and Ajudhya Prasad and Shyam Lal on the other to the effect that Debidin would bring a suit for pre-emption in his own right but for the benefit of Ajudhya Prasad and Shyam Lal in consideration of their defraying the expenses of the litigation including the payment of any sum of money which might eventually be decreed in favour of the vendees, that on the success of the suit Ajudhya Prasad and Shyam Lal would be the owners of the pre-empted property and that under the said agreement Debidin's position was in law and in fact that of a trustee or a benamidar for the second party to the agreement.

At the hearing of the appeal the respondents' learned Counsel practically abandoned the position on which he obtained the decree now under appeal and supported it on the ground just now mentioned. The learned Advocate for the appellants strenuously contended that the second position was not open to the respondents. We are unable to accept this contention. When the pleadings are adjudged as a whole they are susceptible of being considered as involving either an inconsistency of facts or two inconsistent aspects of one set of facts. Neither view makes the pleadings open to the charge of being against the rules of procedure. The Court of Civil Procedure of 1908 lays down for the first time definite rules as to the pleadings. Rule 2 of O. VI of that Code is as follows:—"Every pleading shall contain, and contain only, a statement in a concise form, of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, as the case may be, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved." This rule is the same as r. 4 of O. XIX of the Rules of the Supreme Court in England. On the face of it, it does not exclude the pleading of inconsistent facts. All that it requires is a statement of material facts on which a party relies. In the case of Bagot v. Easton (1) Lord Cairns, L. C., observed: "But the Judicature Act has enlarged the liberty of the plaintiff in claiming relief, for it is expressly provided that, subject to certain regulations, alternative relief may be asked and several causes of action may be joined in the same statement of claim." The effect of r. 3 of O. II of the Indian Code of Civil Procedure is the same. In construing r. 4 of O XIX of the Rules of the Supreme Court in England, Lindley, L. J., in re Morgan Owen v Morgan (2) said: "Now I cannot myself construe that order as prohibiting inconsistent pleadings. One sees perfectly well what is meant by it, viz., that each party is to state succinctly and concisely and in a summary form the material facts on which he relies. Now a person may rely upon one set of facts if he can succeed in proving them, and he may rely upon another set of facts if he can succeed in proving them."

Indeed the learned Advocate frankly admitted that the proper view of the circumstances and so much of the evidence as was reliable distinctly led to the inference that Debidin brought the suit in consequence of an agreement between him and Ajudhia Prasad and Shyam Lal to the effect that he could sue and obtain a decree in his own right and subsequently transfer the property acquired under that decree by means of a valid and formal conveyance in consideration of the expenditure incurred by the second party in relation to that suit. Though the matter was in controversy in the Court below and was the subject-matter of an issue it is now admitted that all the expenses of Debidin's suit including the money paid under the decree to the vendees were defrayed by Ajudhia Prasad and Shyam Lal. In conclusion the learned Advocate for the appellants contended on this part of the case that the proper course for the respondents to adopt was to bring a suit for specific performance of the agreement mentioned above with proper pleadings leading to that relief and the present suit not being of that nature should fail. To this argument we will address ourselves later.

At the opening of the appeal the first attack was naturally directed against the foundation of the decision of the Court below. It was argued that the institution of the pre-emption suit fictitiously in the name of Debidin and obtaining a decree from the Court in the same character was a fraud primarily ly on the Court and also on the vendees and the vendors who were made parties to that suit, that the fraud was perpetrated successfully, that consequently the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the property and that the decree of the Court in Debidin's suit operates as a bar to the present suit.

On the first part of this argument, we find no difficulty in forming our own judgment. In this aspect of the case there can be no doubt that Ajudhia Prasad was the real plaintiff who came into Court concealed in the mask of the name of Debidin. If this second suit in the name of Debidin had not been brought by Ajudhia Prasad it is agreed on the pleadings that the first suit would have failed and Ajudhia Prasad would not have acquired the property in suit. It may be that if Ajudhia Prasad had instituted the second suit in his own name it might not have been thrown out at once by the Court and at the worst its trial would have been stayed under section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But on the admitted facts the first suit would have failed if it had been left to run its own course without being interrupted by the second suit and the failure of the first suit would clearly have resulted in the dismissal of the second also by the effect of the rule of res judicata. The fraud on the Court therefore consisted in interrupting the course of law. It is also clear that the fraud came to fruition inasmuch as the two suits were consolidated, tried and disposed of together with the result that each suit was decreed under certain conditions. If this were the only case of the plaintiffs there can be no doubt that the plaintiffs' suit must fail.

It is settled law that where the fraudulent purpose has been effected the maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis applies and the Court will help neither party. On the other hand, where the purpose of fraud is not carried into execution the mere intention to defraud will not deprive the true owner from recovering his property. The authorities on this point are so exhaustively and completely reviewed, if I may say so, by Mookerjee, J., in his judgment in the case of Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rupe Lal Poddar (3) that it is neither possible nor desirable to add to it. Finally the view propounded in the case just now mentioned was affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Chetty (4). In this view of the case it is equally true that the previous decree in the suit for pre-emption brought by Debidin against Ajudhia Prasad and others would operate as a bar to the present suit on the principle that a guilty party would not be permitted to defeat a judgment by showing that in obtaining it he had practised an imposition on the Court—Doe d Roberts v. Roberts (5), Bessey v. Windham (6).

Now we come to the second aspect of the plaintiffs' case as set out in a previous part of this judgment. The first question which arises is 'Has the alleged agreement been proved.' Our answer is in the affirmative. We find on the evidence, which has been accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge as reliable and the veracity of which has not been challenged in appeal before us, that the arrangement was that Debidin should sue for pre-emption for the benefit of Ajudhia Prasad, and Shyam Lal, that they would defray all the expenditure of the suit together with the money that Debidin might be made liable to pay to the transferees under the decree of the Court and that Ajudhia Prasad and Shyam Lal would be the owners of the property recovered under that decree. In this connection specific reference may be made to the statements of plaintiffs' witnesses Bijai Kuar Dat, Har Dayal, Bhairon Prasad, Gauri Shankar, Ram Lal Gupta and finally of Ajudhia Prasad plaintiff No. 1. The recitals in the document of the 3rd July 1918 executed by Debidin also tend in the same direction (Exhibit 31). We do not agree with the learned Advocate for the appellants that the agreement was of an executory nature depending for its consummation upon any subsequent act on the part of Debidin of conveying the decreed property to Ajudhia Prasad and Shyam Lal by means of executing in future a formal deed of conveyance.

We think that the contract as originally settled between these two parties was complete by itself. It is true that in the document executed by Debidin on the 3rd July 1918 he made a promise that he would transfer the decreed property "by means of a gift deed in favour of the said Lala Ajudhia Prasad and Shyam Lal in equal shares." But this was a later and a unilateral promise on the part of Debidin which he did not and could not fulfil before he died on the 19th March 1919. Exhibit 31, therefore, cannot be given the effect of superseding the original and the earlier contract. That contract was clearly binding on the conscience of Debidin and he was a trustee saddled with the obligation of giving effect to it. It is of no consequence that Debidin is called a benamidar in the pleadings and the evidence in the case. In Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (7), Sir George Farwell, in speaking of a benami transaction, said:—"It is quite unobjectionable and has a curious resemblance to the doctrine of our English Law that the trust of the legal estate results to the man who pays the purchase money, and this again follows the analogy of our common law that where a feoffment is made without consideration the use results to the feoffor." Again in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal Singh (8) Mr. Ameer Ali, after quoting the dictum of Sir George Farwell, made the following observations:—"So long, therefore, as a benami transaction does not contravene the provisions of the law the Courts are bound to give it effect. As already observed, the benamidar has no beneficial interest in the property or business that stands in his name, he represents, in fact, the real owner, and so far as their relative legal position is concerned he is a mere trustee for him. The agreement which we have held as proved in the present case does not contravene any provision of law nor do we think it is opposed to public policy as the learned Advocate for the appellants contended. That Debidin was competent in his own right to institute a suit for pre-emption and thereby obtain the property in suit is admitted. His suit, therefore, in pursuance of that agreement was clearly in accordance with law. As regards public policy we prefer to follow the observation of Sir G. Jessel, M. R. in the case of Printing and Numerical Registering Co. v. Sampson (9) "It must not be forgotten that you are not to extend arbitrarily those rules which say that a given contract is void as being against public policy, because if there is one thing which more than another public policy requires it is that men of full age and competent understanding shall have the utmost liberty of contracting, and that their contracts when entered into freely and voluntarily shall be held sacred and shall be enforced by Courts of Justice. Therefore, you have this paramount public policy to consider that you are not lightly to interfere with this freedom of contract."

Now the property in relation to which this contract was made was neither owned nor possessed by Debidin at the time of the contract but in equity as well as in law non-existing property may be made the subject of an agreement though in neither can it be assigned. There is nothing in the laws of this country to prevent the same result from following. Further it is a well-established principle of equity that when the property comes into existence the contract to assign works out as a complete assignment by itself provided the nature of the property is such that its transfer is not forbidden by law. It is so in the present case.

In the case of Tailby v. Official Receiver (10) Lord Macnaghten said:—"Long before Holroyd v. Marshall (11) was determined it was well settled that an assignment of future property for value operates in equity by way of agreement, binding the conscience of the assignor and so binding the property from the moment when the contract becomes capable of being performed, on the principle that equity considers as done that which ought to be done and in accordance with the maxim which Lord Thurlow said he took to be universal, 'that whenever persons agree concerning any particular subject, that, in a Court of Equity, as against the party himself, and any one claiming under him, voluntarily or with notice, raises a trust'." Legard v. Hodges (12). The same principle was stated by Viscount Cave, L. C. in the recent case of Performing Right Society, Limited v. London Theatre of Varieties, Limited (13). With reference to the cases of Holroyd v. Marshall (11) and Tailby v. Official Receiver (10) he said:—"No doubt when a person executes a document purporting to assign property to be afterwards acquired by him, that property on its acquisition passes in equity to the assignee." On these authorities it is clear that the relief for recovery of property on the basis of such an assignment is not a relief for specific performance of a contract. This was explained at some length by Lord Selborne in the case of Wolverhampton and Walsall Ry. v. London and North Western Ry. Co. (14) and was adverted to by Lord Macnaghten in his judgment in the case of Tailby v. Official Receiver (10) already mentioned. His Lordship said:—"Cases of equitable assignment or specific lien, where the consideration has passed, depend on the real meaning of the agreement between the parties. The difficulty, generally speaking, is to ascertain the true scope and effect of the agreement. When that is ascertained you have only to apply the principle that equity considers that done which ought to be done if that principle is applicable under the circumstances of the case. In effectuating an assignment the Court acts independently of the doctrine of specific performance—Western Waggon Co. v. West (15). The argument of the learned Advocate for the appellants, therefore, that the plaintiffs should have claimed the relief of specific performance has no force.

The assignment, however, to be operative must be valid in form. Ex facie, it being oral in the present case, is not valid. To cure this defect recourse is taken to the doctrine of part performance. Lester v. Foxcroft (16) is treated as the leading case on the subject. Lord Selborne, examined the doctrine in detail in the case of Maddison v. Elderson (17) and it was applied by their Lordships of the Privy Council in a case which arose in Bengal—Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (18). The essentials of that doctrine are stated in White and Tudor's to be as follows—

"1. That the acts of part performance must be unequivocally referable to the alleged agreement; in other words, 'part performance, to take a case out of the Statute of Frauds always supposes a completed agreement. There can be no part performance where there is no completed agreement in existence. It must be obligatory, and what is done must be under the terms of the agreement, and by force of the agreement.' Per Lord Brougham in Lady Edward Thynne v. Earl of Glengall (19). And, therefore, part performance of an agreement which is purely a matter of honour, and not a legal obligation, will not give the Court jurisdiction.

"2. The acts must be done by the plaintiff and be such that it would amount to fraud in the defendant to take advantage of the contract, not being in writing, hence the acts must be acquiesced in, or done with the knowledge of other party.

"3. The parol agreement must be of such a character that the Court would be able to decree specific performance thereof if it were in writing.

"4. The parol evidence must prove the agreement."

We are of opinion that the above essentials exist in the present case. We have already held the agreement to be proved. Had it been in writing relief for specific performance of it would be available to the plaintiffs if it were necessary for them to seek such a relief. We have held previously that such a relief is not essential for the success of the plaintiffs' claim. It is equally clear in the circumstances of this case that the defendants would be guilty of fraud in taking advantage of the agreement not being in writing. It has already been found that the agreement was a completed one. What are then the acts done under that agreement which amount to part performance? On the one hand Debidin instituted the suit for pre-emption in his own name and finally obtained a decree from Court. On the other hand Ajudhia Prasad and Shyam Lal paid all the expenditure of the litigation and also the money due under the decree to the vendees. This is all that could be done by the parties under the agreement and they did all that. The plaintiffs' claim, therefore, succeeds on this ground.

The plaintiffs also base their claim on the document of the 3rd July 1918 (Exhibit 31). The defence to this claim was that the said document was executed by Debidin under undue influence. This defence was embodied in issue No. 3 framed by the Court below. The plea of undue influence was abandoned in this Court and the Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents supported the decree of the Court below on the basis of that document also. The document is a testamentary disposition of Debidin in respect of the property in suit in favour of Ajudhia Prasad and Shyam Lal in equal shares. It was argued on behalf of the defendants-appellants that the disposition was ineffective in respect of the share of Shyam Lal who died before the suit. In view of our finding recorded above it is unnecessary to decide these questions.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O VIII, r 6—Set-off—'Ascertained sum', meaning of.

The words 'ascertained sum' used in O VIII, r 6 of the Civil Procedure Code are used to exclude such items as liquidated damages and mesne profits the amount of which is not ascertainable until the Court determines them.

Where a defendant says that there were definite sums of debit and credit between the parties and that on the date of suit a definite known balance, the amount of which is given in the written statement, was due to the defendant from the plaintiff, the sum so claimed is an 'ascertained sum' for which a set-off is allowed.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 20th May 1922.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.
Messrs. Nehal Chand and S. N. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question in this appeal is whether the defendants are entitled to claim a set-off under O. VIII, r. 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Courts below have declined to go into the merits of the set-off claimed on the ground that the sum claimed is not an ascertained sum and, therefore, does not fall within the provisions of this rule.

In the Courts below the question of equitable set-off was also discussed, but in this Court the argument has been confined to the legal set-off provided by rule 6. The suit was one for the balance of the price of castor seed sold by the plaintiff to the defendants. The defence, so far as we are now concerned, with it, substantially was that this transaction formed one of the number of transactions between the parties in which there were payments to be credited on both sides and that on these other transactions on the date of suit a definite sum of Rs. 1126 was due to the defendants from the plaintiff. There were also certain minor ascertained sums as to one of which the claim of set-off has been allowed. If this were a claim for accounts in the sense that the defendants were asking the plaintiff to render an account and the sum due to the defendants could only be known to the latter when the accounts were rendered, there might be great force in the view taken by the Courts below. This, however, is not the nature of the claim. What the defendants say is that there were definite sums of debit and credit between the parties and that on the date of suit a definite known balance, the amount of which is given in the written statement, was due to the defendants from the plaintiff and that this balance is shown in their account books as due on the date of suit. In any ordinary meaning of the term, the sum so claimed is an ascertained sum. The learned Counsel for the respondent has argued that a sum can only be treated as ascertained when it has been either admitted by the plaintiff or decreed by the Court. None of the authorities to which he has referred, supports this proposition, and the case of Edward Dalgleish v. Ramdin Singh Chowdhury (1) definitely contradicts it. The commentators on the Code are also all agreed that the words 'ascertained sum' are used to exclude such items as unliquidated damages and mesne profits the amount of which is not ascertainable until the Court determines them. Here the sum claimed is a definite ascertained amount, and we think that the Courts below were wrong in refusing to go into the defendants' claim. We accordingly set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and remand the case, through the lower Appellate Court to the Court of first instance with directions to enquire into the set-off claimed and to modify its decree accordingly if anything is found to be due to the defendants on account of set-off. The appellants will get their costs of this appeal including in this Court fees on the higher scale. Other costs will abide the result. It will not be open to the parties to re-agitate any question already decided except the questions which arise on the claim of set-off.

Plaintiffs entered into a contract with the defendants for the purchase of certain goods. The contract provided that in the event of a dispute arising between the parties as to quality, etc., it would be referred to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, who would "arrange for survey in accordance with its rules." Plaintiffs took exception to the quality of the goods supplied and the dispute was referred to arbitration, the buyers "leaving the matter in the hands of the Arbitrators either to award cancellation or any other relief as they would deem fit." The Arbitrators made their award as follows: "We have considered the papers, and as buyers, are unwilling to produce the bases required for inspection, their claim cannot be upheld and we award that they pay for and take delivery of the goods in terms of contract." Thereupon the buyers sued, for a declaration that the award was invalid and inoperative.

Held, (1) that it was for the plaintiffs buyers to prove the case which they were alleging before the Arbitrators, namely, that the goods supplied were not in accordance with the contract by reason of their inferior quality; [p. 342, col. 2.]

(2) that as the buyers failed to produce the goods for inspection when called on by the Arbitrators to do so they could not complain of the decision of the Arbitrators that they (the buyers) had not proved their case; [p. 343, col. 1.]

(3) that having come to that conclusion, the Arbitrators were within their jurisdiction in awarding that the buyers should pay for and take delivery of the goods; [p. 343, col. 2.]

(4) that the provision in the deed of reference to the effect that the Chamber should arrange for survey in accordance with its rules did not contemplate that a survey should be the only method of obtaining evidence as regards quality of the goods, or that if a survey was not held there should be no award, [ibid].

(5) that under the circumstances the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief [p. 344, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendants S. & C. Nordlinger against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Buckland.

The suit was brought by the plaintiffs Chandmull Mulchand against the defendants for a declaration that a certain award, dated the 3rd of September 1921, made by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, was invalid and inoperative; and the two grounds upon which the claim was based at the trial in this Court are first, that the award was bad on the face of it and secondly, that the Arbitrators had no jurisdiction to make the award.

The learned Judge held in favour of the plaintiffs on both the points and declared that the award was invalid and inoperative. Against that decision the defendants have appealed.

The award was in the following terms:—

"Contract No. Nil, dated 7th December 1920.

Goods covered by contract. Finished Dhories.

Basis of Sale No. 2226.

Packages available for inspection B/S 116/20, 141/5.

Packages examined.

Complaint—inferior quality and other defects as per buyers' statement, dated 1st March 1921. Award—We have considered the papers and as buyers Messrs. Chandmull Mulchand are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection, their claim cannot be upheld and we award that they pay for and take delivery of the goods in terms of contract.

Buyers to pay cost of this reference, amounting to Rs. 101."

The learned Judge on the first point, namely, whether there was an error of law on the face of the award, said:—this "The contract related to 60 bales. There was a dispute as to quality. The mere fact that the buyers are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection is not by itself a sufficient reason for making an award against them. I do not desire to go further than I should having regard to the strict limitation laid down by the authorities as to what may be considered in a case such as this, but ordinarily, where there is a dispute between a buyer and a seller, with reference to quality, it would be the duty of the seller to prove that the goods were of the quality contracted for."

It is not necessary for me to refer to the authorities because they were fully considered by this Court in the case of U. M. Chaudhury & Co. v. Jiban Krishna Ghose & Sons (1) and because the learned Judge has himself drawn attention to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the Privy Council in Champsey Bharu & Co. v. Jivraj Ballo Spinning and Weaving.

Co. (2) and the narrow limits within which a matter like this has to be considered. The first question which I have to ask myself is whether I am satisfied that the award does show upon the face of it an error in law, and, for the purpose of coming to that conclusion, one is entitled to consider the award itself and any documents incorporated in the award.

It is, therefore, legitimate to consider, in the first place, the buyers' statement, dated the 1st of March 1921. That is referred to in the award as the "complaint." That statement sets out the reasons why the buyers alleged that the goods were inferior in quality to the contract quality. I need not refer to them in detail and the statement concludes in this manner.

"The combined defectiveness in the out-turn has thus made the goods too much unqualified and ought to be cancelled but we leave the matter to the hands of the learned arbitrators either to award cancellation or any other relief as they would deem fit."

Therefore, it is clear, in my judgment, that the buyers were contending that the goods were not in accordance with the contract by reason of their inferior quality and that they left the decision of the question as to quality to the Arbitrators and they further left it to them to say whether the contract should be cancelled or whether any allowance should be made to the buyers in respect of the inferiority in the quality.

It appears to me that it was for the buyers to prove the case which they were alleging before the Arbitrators.

The Arbitrators said in their award: "We have considered the papers and as buyers Messrs. Chandmull Mulchand are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection, their claim cannot be upheld." The learned Counsel for the respondents, as I understood his argument, did not find fault with that.

part of the award because it must be obvious that when the buyers were the complainants and were alleging the inferior quality of the goods and they were asked by the Arbitrators to produce the goods so that they might be inspected by the Arbitrators, and when they failed to produce any of the goods in question, the buyers cannot now complain of the Arbitrators coming to the conclusion that the buyers did not prove their case.

The learned Judge seems to have thought that the Arbitrators had decided against the buyers relying upon the mere fact that the buyers were unwilling to produce the bales. In my judgment, with great respect to the learned Judge, that is not a legitimate inference to be drawn from the terms of the award. The Arbitrators said that they had certain papers. I am not in a position to say what those papers were or to speculate what their contents were. They certainly had some materials before them which were contained in the papers referred to in the award.

But the learned Counsel for the respondents presented a further argument and contended that the second part of the award should not be upheld even though the first part, to which I have already referred, was held to be correct. The second part of the award, to which the learned Counsel referred, was that the buyers should pay for and take delivery of the goods in terms of the contract.

The argument was that the only question that the Arbitrators had to decide was whether the goods were of the contract quality or not; and if they did not decide that, then they ought not to have made the award. I cannot accept that contention. In the first place, the buyers' statement, to which I have referred, makes it clear that the question as to what was to be done with regard to the dhoties was left to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. The Arbitrators were to say whether the goods were in accordance with the contract. If they found that they were not then they were to say whether the contract was to be cancelled or whether any allowance should be made. It seems to me that when the Arbitrators, as they obviously did, came to the conclusion that the complainants did not satisfy them that the goods were not in accordance with the contract quality it follows, as a matter of course, that they should award that the buyers should pay for and take delivery of the goods. In my judgment it was within their jurisdiction so to do. In short, on this part of the case, on the materials which we are entitled to consider upon the question as to whether there was an error of law on the face of the contract, I am by no means satisfied that the Arbitrators have been guilty of an error of law.

The second point depends upon the question of survey. The learned Counsel for the respondents argued that it was a part of the submission that there should be a survey by the Arbitrators and that if no survey took place, there should be no award.

The learned Advocate-General, who appeared for the appellants, on the other hand, argued that no doubt it was contemplated by both parties that there should be a survey and that if there was a survey it should be carried out in a particular manner which was specified by the sellers but that it was not agreed upon by the parties and was not contemplated by the parties that a survey should be the only method of obtaining evidence as regards the quality of the goods. I think that the learned Advocate-General's argument in this respect is correct. The Arbitrators were not merely surveyors. We do not know the names of the gentlemen who acted in this case. I believe that it is the practice of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce not to disclose the names of gentlemen who acted as Arbitrators. But it is clear on a reference to the arbitration and the statement of buyers that it was intended that the gentlemen, who would act in accordance with the Rules of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, should act as Arbitrators and should finally decide the question in dispute between the parties.

JAMBU DASS v. JAI PRAKASH.

One method of deciding as to the quality of the goods was contemplated to be a survey, but in my judgment, it was not contemplated that that should be the only means of arriving at a decision.

I am by no means satisfied that the parties agreed that there should be a survey, and that if a survey were not held, there should be no award. It seems to me that the argument of the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the appellants must be adopted. The result is that in this respect also, with great respect to the learned Judge, I am constrained to come to the conclusion that the Arbitrators acted within their jurisdiction.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the appeal must be allowed, the learned Judge's judgment and decree will be set aside and the suit dismissed with costs in both the Courts, except such costs as have been directed to be paid by the defendants with regard to the amendment of the written statement.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 66, applicability of Section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code applies only, when the plaintiff attempts to assert his secret title as against a certified purchaser. [p. 345, col 1]

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 11th November 1922.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of possession of a share in a house. The plaintiff Jambu Dass and the first two defendants Jai Prakash and Jai Chandan are brothers. A dispute over the ancestral property was referred to arbitration and in 1908 the share now in suit was awarded to the plaintiff by the arbitrator. This award was confirmed by a decree of a Civil Court on the 18th of June 1908. In 1910 the share in suit was sold in execution of a decree to one Kanwal Nain who has been impleaded in the present suit as defendant No. 3. He has not appeared throughout the proceedings and has not contested the plaintiff's claim.

The present suit was instituted on the 14th of June, 1920. The plaintiff's case was that five or six years previously he had permitted his two brothers to live in his part of the house. The purchase at auction by Kanwal Nain was merely benami on his own account. His brothers now refused to surrender possession to him and he accordingly brought the suit to compel them to do so.

The Trial Court held that the suit was barred by limitation. It doubted the plaintiff's story of permission to his brothers to take possession and considered that limitation should be held to run from the date of the private award and not from the date of the decree confirming that award. If the latter is the correct date then in any case the suit was in time by four days.

The lower Appellate Court expressed considerable doubt as to the correctness of the First Court's finding on the subject of limitation pointing out that the only evidence on the point consisted of the two conflicting statements of the plaintiff and one of the defendants. It, however, did not come to a positive decision on the question as it held that section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code barred this suit. This section provides that no suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff. No doubt it would be a complete answer to the suit so far as

CHAIRMAN OF HOWRAH MUNICIPALITY v. HARIPADA ROY.

Kānwal Nain is concerned, but the latter has not chosen to contest the claim. In Saradindu Chakravarti v. Gosta-Behari Pramanick (1) on almost identical facts, where the heirs of the auction-purchaser did not appear and deny the plaintiff's benami purchase, it was held that section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure only applies when the plaintiff attempts to assert his secret title as against a certified purchaser. This view of the law appears to be a correct one and in the circumstances of the present case section 66 is no bar.

The only point which has been strongly urged on behalf of the respondent is that the plaintiff no longer has any subsisting title. On his own showing he had given up possession of the property a year or more before the auction-sale and was not in possession when that took place, and had, therefore, no right to sue at the time when the suit was brought. But the title was in him from the date of the award and unless the defendants' statement is accepted it was under permission from him that the defendants had taken possession. The burden of proving adverse possession was unquestionably on the defendants. The somewhat hesitating finding of the lower Appellate Court is to the effect that they have failed to discharge this burden. They produced no evidence in support of their contention beyond the statement of one of themselves. I agree with the lower Appellate Court. The appeal, therefore, must succeed and the plaintiff will get a decree for recovery of possession of the property in suit with costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

A candidate for election as a Municipal Commissioner has, in view of rule 14 of the Rules framed under section 15 of the Bengal Municipal Act, no right to be present in that part of the polling station where the votes are actually recorded. No such right can be recognised under natural law [p. 346, cols. 1 & 2].

Where rights of candidates or electors are given expressly by Statute, they do not carry with them any rights under natural law not given by statutory law [p. 346, col. 2].

Appeal against a decree of the First Subordinate Judge, Howrah, dated the 30th of June 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court, Howrah, dated the 15th of March 1920.

Babus Ram Chandra Mazumdar and Panchanan Ghose for Babu Manmatha Nath Roy, for the Appellants.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Kanaidhan Dutt, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decision of the First Subordinate Judge of Howrah affirming the decision of the Munsif, Second Court, Howrah. The plaintiff in this case was a candidate for election as Commissioner of the Howrah Municipality. The defendants are the Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of Howrah, the Vice-Chairman and the Presiding Officer appointed to hold the Municipal General Election which was to take place shortly after the suit was instituted. The plaintiff asked for a declaration of his right to be present at the place and time when and where the votes of the voters would be recorded and also that the defendants or any of them had no right to prevent the plaintiff from being present at that place. He further asked that the defendants be restrained from prohibiting the plaintiff to be present at that place.

The Municipal Act applicable in Howrah is Act III of 1884, B. C. Section 15 of that Act gives the Local Government power to lay down rules not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, amongst other matters in respect of the mode of election. Such rules are published in Notification No. 4345 M, dated the 21st November 1896. Also instructions to the Presiding Officer have been drawn up, and this case really turns on the legality of rule 14 of those instructions which is to the following effect: "After getting his ticket the voter will enter the second enclosure where candidates or their agents shall not be permitted to enter this enclosure except to get their own votes recorded." In order to understand the point it is necessary to state the provisions made for the recording of votes. The polling station is divided into three separate enclosures. There is the first general enclosure in which the voters are to be assembled. There is then the further enclosure which is entered through gates and there are Municipal employees sitting at separate tables where tickets with serial numbers of the voters are given to the voters as they apply for them. Under the rules it is the duty of any one objecting on the ground of false personation to go so when the voter applies for his ticket in the enclosure. After the voter has obtained his ticket he enters into the third enclosure and there his vote is recorded by one of the members of the Committee who sit at separate tables.

The whole question is whether the candidate is entitled to be present in that part of the polling station where votes are actually recorded. Both the lower Courts have decided this point in the plaintiff's favour. The First Court based its decision on the ruling in the English case of Clementson v. Mason (1). As the learned Subordinate Judge has rightly pointed out the decision of this

(1) (1875) 10 O. P. 209, 44 L. J. O. P. 171; 32 L. T. 325; 23 W. R. 620.

English case has no application to the facts of the present case. That decision was based on the construction of certain sections of the Ballot Act which is not in force in this country. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, supported the decree on the ground that every person interested like the candidate has a natural right to be present where votes are recorded under the ordinary law. With this we are unable to agree. We cannot agree that the rights of candidates or electors which are rights expressly given by Statute carry with them any rights under natural law not given by statutory law. In order to succeed in this case it is necessary for the plaintiff to show that he has the statutory right to be present at the place where votes are recorded or that the rule forbidding his presence in that particular place is inconsistent with the provisions of the Bengal Municipal Act, III of 1884, B. C. The learned Vakil for the respondent has been unable to satisfy us on either of these points. The candidate as such has a right to be present to take objection where there has been wrongful personation. Also as an elector he has the right to enter the enclosure where votes are recorded in order that his vote may be recorded. But we can find nothing in the Act which suggests that the candidate has the right of himself supervising the recording of the votes. The recording of the votes is supervised by the Presiding Officer and the Committee and there is no reason why the candidates themselves or their agents should necessarily be present to see that the votes are properly recorded. As regards the right of the candidate to object in case of wrongful personation that is fully provided by the rules which have been drawn up as regards the issue of tickets in the second of the enclosures to which the candidate and his agent are not only allowed but specially invited to be present.

We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff has failed in establishing his case and the suit must fail on that ground.

It was also contended that section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is a bar to this suit. But we hold that as the plaintiff asked for further relief in the form of an injunction that section is no bar.

BALDEO PRASAD v. RAM AUTAR.

The result is that the appeal is decreed with costs in all Courts.

Evidence Act, (I of 1872), s. 92, proviso (1)—Bond—Want of consideration, whether can be proved

Under proviso (1) to section 92, Evidence Act, want of consideration for a contract in writing may be proved, even if it is registered

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 9th August 1922.

Mr. Ram Nama Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Two points have been urged in this appeal. It appears that the appellant purchased a bond from one Ghulam Mohi-ud-din and brought the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, on foot of it. The bond was given on the 6th of October 1914 by the father of the respondents. The defence was that there was no consideration for the bond, that it had been agreed between the parties that Ghulam Mohi-ud-din who was the 'landlord' of the executant, would lease out certain lands to the executant and the executant would pay the consideration money of the bond as a premium or nazrana. No such lease having been executed, the bond was without consideration.

The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court found that the allegation of the defendants was correct and dismissed the suit.

In appeal it is contended that it was not open to the respondents, being the representatives of the late executant of the bond, to set up a plea that the bond was executed under circumstances other than those mentioned in the deed itself. This argument is not sound. The plea taken by the respondents was to the effect that there was no consideration for the bond. By proviso (1) of section 92, it is open to a party or his representative to show that there is no consideration for the agreement which may have been reduced into writing and which may have even been registered. The learned Counsel for the appellant takes his stand on the case of Sri Ram v. Firm Sobha Ram Gopal Rai (1). In that case a party sued on an unconditional promissory note given by the opposite party and it was held that the executant of the promissory note could not show that the money was not to be paid on demand, but was meant to be paid under other circumstances. It is not necessary to express any opinion as to the correctness, or otherwise of the ruling, simply because the facts of the two cases are entirely different. In this case, as I have already stated, all that the respondents seek to establish is that there is no consideration for the bond. This they could do, not only under the express provision of law, but also under their Lordships of the Privy Council's ruling reported in the case of Sah Lal Chand v. Indaryut (2). The same view was adopted in this Court in the case of Chuan Bibi v. Basanti Bibi (3).

There is nothing in this appeal and it is hereby dismissed with costs which will include Counsel's fees on the higher scale.

Appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Greaves passed on the 20th March 1923 in the exercise of Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

Messrs. N. Sircar and S. M. Bose, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Langford James and Ameer Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a judgment on admission pronounced by Mr. Justice Greaves under O. XII, r. 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

The suit was instituted on the 7th May 1921 by E. D. Sassoon & Co. against Ebrahim Soleman Saleji & Co. and J. C. Galstaun for recovery of money. The claim so far as Galstaun was concerned, was based on the following letter of guarantee written by him to the plaintiffs on the 6th January 1921:—

“In consideration of your advancing to Ebrahim Soleman Saleji & Co. of No. 1, Amratolla Lane in Calcutta at my request the sum of Rs. 5,00,000 as a loan bearing interest at nine per cent per annum I, the undersigned John Carapiet Galstaun, hereby agree with you as follows:—

1. To make good any default on the part of the said Ebrahim Soleman Saleji & Co. or their successors-in-interest in the payment of the said loan and all interest due thereon.

2. You are to be at liberty without discharging me from liability hereunder to grant time or other indulgence to the said Ebrahim Soleman Saleji & Co. and to treat them in all respects as though I was jointly liable with them as a debtor to you instead of being a surety for them and in order to give full effect to the provisions of this guarantee I hereby waive all suretyship and other rights, inconsistent with such provisions which I otherwise might be entitled to claim and enforce.

3. This guarantee shall not be revocable by notice or by reason of my death but it shall remain in full force until the said sum of Rs. 5,00,000 with interest is repaid to you or until such time as the proposed mortgage for Rs. 10,00,000 secured on certain properties of the said Ebrahim Soleman Saleji & Co. shall be completed.

4. This guarantee shall be enforceable against me notwithstanding the fact that any other securities may be held by you against this loan at the time of any proceedings being taken against me on this guarantee.”

There was an arrangement whereby the plaintiffs were to advance to the first defendant a loan of Rs. 10,00,000, secured on certain properties. The execution of the mortgage, after investigation of title, would of course occupy a certain amount of time, but apparently the first defendant was very anxious to obtain some money as soon as possible, and accordingly before the mortgage was executed or the title investigated, the plaintiff advanced to the first defendant the sum of Rs. 5,00,000 in consideration of this being guaranteed by the second defendant as in fact it was by the letter of the 6th January 1921. The mortgage was never executed and accordingly this suit was commenced.

The written statement of the first defendant was filed on the 23rd August 1921. This was followed by the written statement of the second defendant on the 21st December 1921. The present application, for judgment under O. XII, r. 6 was made on the 23rd February 1923. The plaintiffs rely upon admissions contained in three documents. The first is a letter written on the 26th February 1922 by Galstaun to the plaintiffs; the second is another letter addressed by Galstaun to the plaintiffs on the 15th August 1922; the third is a deposition intermediate in date, namely, a statement made by Galstaun in the course of an examination under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act on the 19th May 1922 in the matter of the insolvency of the first defendant. Mr. Justice Greaves has come to the conclusion that there is no such admission in either of the two letters as would justify a judgment under O. XII, r. 6. He has held, however, that the deposition of Galstaun contained an admission which afforded foundation for such a judgment.

As regards the letters, we agree with Mr. Justice Greaves that they do not contain such admission as would justify a judgment under O. XII, r. 6. In the first letter, Galstaun applied to the plaintiffs for a loan and stated that if the loan were sanctioned, he would allow the plaintiffs to deduct Rs. 5,00,000 on account of Saleji. In the second letter, Galstaun applied to the plaintiffs for another loan and stated that if the loan were arranged, the plaintiffs could deduct Rs. 5,00,000 advanced by them to Saleji. Mr. Justice Greaves has held that neither of these constitutes an unqualified admission of the type contemplated by the rule. We hold with him that they merely amount to this that if the plaintiff agreed to make the requisite advance he was prepared to allow Rs. 5,00,000 to be deducted from the loan on Saleji's account.

We have next to consider the third admission made on the 19th May 1922. In the course of his examination Galstaun was asked with regard to the title-deeds which had been handed over to him.

Q.—How came these to be in your possession?

A.—All these documents were with Morgan & Co. Mr. Thornton Jones of Morgan & Co. had them.

Q.—How did they get them?

A.—Kassuni Ebrahim Saleji deposited the Letters of Administration with me and promised to make over the title-deeds of the property to Morgan & Co.

Q.—Who told you that?

A.—Kassim and Hashim. They wanted a loan of five lacs urgently and they deposited the title-deeds of these properties.

* * * * *

They took the five lacs from E. D. Sassoon & Co. on my guarantee. Kassim deposited the Letters of Administration and undertook to deposit with Messrs. Morgan & Co. the title-deeds of his properties as security.

* * * * *

The loan of ten lacs was never put through; out of five lacs, four and a half lacs were paid to him and the insolvent got Rs. 50,000.

Q.—Did you advance any money?

A.—No, Sassoon advanced the money.

Q.—You were not lending the money?

A.—No, but I was guaranteeing the money.

Q.—Up to now you have had nothing to pay as guarantor?

A.—But I shall have to pay.

This last statement, it was urged before Mr. Justice Greaves, constituted an unqualified admission that he was liable to pay five lacs to the plaintiffs. After a careful consideration of the deposition taken as a whole, we have come to the conclusion that it does not contain an admission of the requisite description.

The written statement of Galstaun makes it abundantly clear that he had in substance taken a two-fold defence; namely, first, that the conduct of the plaintiffs had been such as to absolve him from liability under the guarantee, and secondly that the suit was premature. We are not prepared to construe his statement in the deposition to imply that he had abandoned these defences in their entirety.

This case is in some respects similar to that of Koramall Ramballabh v. Mungial Dalim Chând (1), where reference was made to the observation of Lopes, L. J.,

(1) 54 Ind. Cas. 838; 23 C. W. N. 1017.

in Landergan v. Feast (2): "There must be a clear admission that the money is due and recoverable in the action in which the admission is made. There is no such admission here. The defendant's statement that the action is premature may be untrue, but we cannot go into that." Lindley, L. J., said.—

The first thing necessary is an admission that the sum is due and recoverable in the action, and I can find no such admission here. The affidavit gives the defendant's view that the action was brought too soon." To the same effect are the observations of Fry, L. J., in Hughes v. London, Edinburgh and Glasgow Assurance Co., Ltd. (3), that he held a strong view that final judgment ought not to be signed upon admissions in a pleading or an affidavit, unless the admissions were clear and unequivocal. The observations of Sargant, J., in Ellis v. Allen (4) may also be usefully recalled—"The object of the rule was to enable a party to obtain speedy judgment where the other party has made a plain admission entitling the former to succeed. This applies wherever there is a clear admission of facts in the face of which it is impossible for the party making it to succeed." We must further remember that the power of the Court is discretionary and that its exercise cannot be claimed as a matter of right, Premasuk Das Assaram v. Udayram Gungabux (5), Mellor v. Sidebottom (6), In re Wright Kirke v. North (7) and Gilbert v. Smith (8). We are of opinion that the present case is not one in which judgment on admission should have been pronounced.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the order of Mr Justice Greaves discharged. The appellant is entitled to his costs both here and in the Court below.

Landlord and tenant—Suit for ejectment based on kirayanama—Court-fee paid on one year's rent—Question of title

In a suit for ejectment based on a kirayanama, containing a condition for ejectment; and filed on Court-fee on only one year's rent, without any prayer for a declaration of title, the Court should not go into the question of title and should only determine whether the relation of landlord and tenant exists between the parties [p. 351, col. 1].

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 6th of November 1922.

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Appellant.

Mr. Durga Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit to eject the respondents Mirchi and Banwari from a house which the plaintiff acquired under a sale-deed of the 27th June, 1921. The plaintiff came into Court on the allegation that the house had originally been purchased in execution of a decree by one Hira Lal who had leased it to Mirchi under a kirayanama. The plaintiff bought the house from Hira Lal's heir. He alleged that Mirchi had sublet the house to Banwari whom he also impleaded.

Banwari denied that any relationship of landlord and tenant existed between him and the plaintiff and set up his own title on the ground of adverse possession.

The First Court found that Mirchi had never obtained possession of the house and was, therefore, not a tenant and could not be called upon to pay rent, that Banwari was in occupation as a trespasser but had not acquired an adverse title. The suit was accordingly decreed for possession.

The lower Appellate Court has accepted the finding that Banwari was in possession as a trespasser and has held that as the plaintiff only came to the Court paying Court-fee on one year's rent and founding his suit on the kirayanama the FIRM PEARE LAL-GOPI NATH v. EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CO.

First Court ought not to have gone into the question of title at all, but only determined whether the parties were to one another in the relation of landlord and tenant. A reference has been made to Balandhantam v Perumal Chetti (1).

In appeal it is contended that the question of title was raised by the plaintiff in his plaint and that the Court was competent to decide it. The appellant's Counsel claims that he should have been allowed to make good any deficiency in Court fee in the present suit. This contention cannot be accepted. The plaint makes it perfectly clear that the suit was founded only on the kirayanama which contained a condition for ejectment. The cause of action is said to have arisen at the expiry of one year from the execution of this document. There was no prayer for a declaration of the plaintiff's title and the Court-fee was not the correct one in a suit for title. In addition to the ruling cited by the lower Appellate Court reference may be made to Promotha Nath Ganguly v. Amir-ud-din Sheikh (2). The appeal was properly rejected by the lower Appellate Court and must fail here. The appellant's Counsel desires to withdraw his appeal with permission to file a fresh suit. This is allowed. The appellant will pay the respondents costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Civil revision from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 5th November 1923.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Applicant

Mr. Laddi Prasad Zutshi, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Only one point is decided by the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff, the Firm of Peare Lal-Gopi Nath, had no right to sue the East Indian Railway Company for damages caused on the consignment. The consignment was made from Kidderpore docks to Shikohabad by the Firm of Hemraj-Durga Das. The consignor endorsed the Railway receipt to the plaintiff's firm which took delivery. The plaintiff's firm then brought this suit for price of seven bags, the shortage in the consignment when it arrived at Shikohabad. The learned Judge of the Appellate Court was of opinion that there was no contract between the plaintiff and defendant companies and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to sue. The language of the judgment, however, is in favour of the plaintiff. The learned Judge was of opinion that a carrier's contract is with the person in whom the property in goods is vested at the time the contract of carriage was entered into. The learned Judge did not go further and enquire whether the consignor had transferred all his rights and interest in the contract to the plaintiff. The Bombay case of Dolatham Dwarkadas v. Bombay Baroda & Central India Railway Co. (1) is an authority for the proposition that the title of the consignor can be conveyed to another person by an endorsement on a Railway receipt. In that case one Sukhdin Ramlal consigned 115 bags of wheat from a station on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to Ahmadabad. The goods were consigned by Sukhdin to self and he then endorsed on the Railway receipt delivery to one Naraindas. Naraindas on his side endorsed it in favour of the plaintiff of that suit; Dôlatram. Under these circumstances, a Bench of the Bombay High Court held that the Railway receipt was a mercantile document of title and that the endorsee of such a Railway receipt had sufficient interest in the goods covered by it to maintain an action for damages against the Railway Co. the carrier. If A makes a contract, there can be no doubt that A can pass over the benefit of that contract to a third person. The question here is whether the endorsement of the Railway receipt did pass the benefit of the contract to the endorsee. On the authority of the Bombay case I hold that it did. The learned Counsel for the respondent quoted another Bombay case of the G. I. P. Railway Co. v. Sahab Ram (2). That case, however, was of a consignee of goods and not of a person to whom the benefit of the contract of the consignor was conveyed by the consignor. In my opinion the plaintiff had a right to sue.

As other points have not been determined by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court I set aside his decree and direct that Court to decide the appeal after decision of the other issues. Costs here and hitherto shall abide by the result.

Where rent is wrongfully collected from a tenant by a person other than the landlord, the latter can recover the same from the former in an action on tort, but the tenant is not thereby discharged from his liability to the landlord under the contract.

First appeal from a decree of the District Court, Pegu, in Criminal Regular No. 10 of 1923.

Mr. Keith, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dantra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant is the widow of U Yaw and administratrix of his estate. She alleged that their joint estate included a large area of land in the Pegu District. The defendants had wrongfully collected the rents of the land from their tenants. She sued to recover the rents so collected.

The Additional Judge of the District Court held that on these allegations the plaintiffs had no cause of action against the defendants. Her remedy he considered was against the tenants only.

We are clearly of opinion that he was wrong. No doubt such payment as is alleged would not discharge the tenants from their liability to the plaintiff under their contracts. But the plaintiff's suit against the defendants is based not on contract but on tort, and if they have in fact wrongfully collected money due to the plaintiff she is entitled to recover that money from them. This is the only question that we have to decide.

The order of the District Court rejecting the plaint and the decree of that Court are set aside. The suit is remanded to the District Court with a direction that the plaint is admitted.

The appellant will be given a certificate for the refund of the Court-fee paid on this appeal.

The other costs in this appeal will be costs in the suit and follow its result.

Cotton Duties Act (II of 1896), ss 16, 25 (9)—
Meaning of word "place" in definition of "mill" —Inspector of Cotton Excise—Right of free access to godown—Owner refusing to have locked-up godown opened—Wilful obstruction—Subsequent offer of access, whether condones obstruction

Under section 16 of the Cotton Duties Act, the Inspector of Cotton Excise has a right of free access to the godown of a mill, inasmuch as the definition of the word "mill" in the Act contains the wide word "place", which (supposing the godown is not in the particular building where the machinery is) is wide enough to cover the premises containing accessories to the manufacture of cotton goods in the mill. [p. 358, cols. 1 & 2]

Therefore, if the owner of a mill does not, after due notice, get the locked door of a godown of the mill opened to give access to the Inspector of Cotton Excise, the owner is guilty of wilful obstruction under section 25 (9) of the Cotton Duties Act, the particular purposes for which the Inspector wanted access being immaterial so long as his object was to perform a duty under the Cotton Duties Act. [p. 354, col. 2]

Once access is refused, and thus intentional obstruction is caused, a subsequent offer to give access is not sufficient to condone the obstruction. [p. 355, col. 1]

JUDGMENT.

Shah, Ag. C. J.—This application arises out of proceedings taken by the Inspector of Cotton Excise, Bombay Presidency, against the accused. In the complaint that was lodged on August 3, 1923, before the District Magistrate, the complainant alleged that, on April 14, 1923, he went to the Raja Bahadur Motilal Mills of Poona, of which the accused was the owner, and asked him to give reasonable facilities for the inspection of certain records showing production of mixed cotton and silk goods. At about 9 A. M. when he went there the accused gave instructions to his servants that facilities should be given to the complainant. The complainant waited up to 2 P. M., but he had not been able to get until then the inspection of the records and of the godown which he wanted. When the accused returned at about 2 P. M. he was said to have refused to let him have access to the godown and to the records which he wanted, and accordingly charged him under section 25, clause 9, of the Cotton Duties Act II of 1896. On this the trial proceeded before the First Class Magistrate Mr. Atre to whom the District Magistrate had transferred this complaint. The case assumed somewhat undue proportions partly on account of the line of argument which was adopted on behalf of the accused in the Trial Court. But in the end the Magistrate found that under section 16 of the Cotton Duties Act, the complainant was entitled to have free access to the godown, and also to have inspection of the accounts from the year 1915 up to 1923 which he wanted; that the access to the godown and to the records was refused by the accused. He accordingly found him guilty of having intentionally caused obstruction in the discharge of his duties to the complainant under section 25, clause 9, of the Cotton Duties Act, and sentenced the accused to simple imprisonment till the rising of the Court and a fine of Rs. 1,000.

In appeal the learned Sessions Judge was not prepared to hold it proved as regards the account books from 1915 to 1920 that the Mill Authorities knew where they were and refused to produce them, and as regards the books from 1920 to 1923 he was not prepared to hold that the accounts were not produced. It may be mentioned that the connection of the accused with this Mill commenced in August 1920. The learned Judge, however, was satisfied on the evidence that the accused refused to give access to the godown, and that in doing so, he intentionally caused obstruction to the complainant. Accordingly he con-firmly the conviction and upheld the sentence.

In the application before us the case on behalf of the applicant has been argued on the footing of the findings recorded by the Sessions Judge. We are no longer concerned with the obstruction alleged to have been caused to the complainant as regards the account books, because the learned Judge has so far found in favour of the accused.

We are concerned with the obstruction said to have been caused to the complainant in respect of the godown. As regards that, the facts, which are not in dispute, are these. The godown was locked at the time. Apparently, on April 14, from about 9 A. M. up to 2 P. M. the persons to whom the accused had given instructions to give facilities to the complainant had not done anything to open the godown. When the accused returned at about 2 P. M. to the Mill premises, he is found to have refused any access to this godown to the complainant. His case on that point was that he did not refuse, but that he said that he would write to him later on, suggesting that as he was absent during the morning hours and did not know what had transpired between the complainant and his own men, he wanted time to consider the situation. In support of that he relied upon the letter which he wrote that very afternoon which reached the complainant at about 5-30, in which he offered to open the godown to him. That offer, however, was not availed of later on, and we are not concerned with what happened subsequently. But that letter has been relied upon in the course of the argument as showing that from the beginning there was no intention on his part to cause obstruction. It is further urged before us that as the finding with regard to the refusal to produce the account books is in favour of the accused, really there could not have been any intention on the part of the accused to cause obstruction. It is also urged that this godown is not part of the Mill as defined by the Act, and that, therefore, really the accused would have a right to refuse free access to this part of the building.

As regards this last point, it is clear that it does not seem to have been suggested in either of the Courts below that this godown was not part of the building. Under section 3, sub-clause (6) of the Act "Mill" means any building or place where cotton goods are woven, knitted or otherwise manufactured by machinery moved otherwise than by manual labour, and includes every part of such building or place. It does not appear to have been suggested in this case that this godown was not part of such building or place. The learned Judge has found expressly that the complainant had a right of free access at all reasonable times during the working hours to this particular godown, and in the absence of any indication in the evidence to the contrary the suggestion made before us cannot be accepted. It is sufficient for our purposes in revision that both the lower Courts have found that he had a right of free access at all reasonable times to this godown.

As regards the question whether the act found to have been committed by the accused amounts to intentional obstruction, it seems that it is really a question of fact to be determined with reference to the circumstances of this case. Though several cases have been referred to in the course of the argument, I think that it must depend upon the facts of this case. We have to determine on the proved facts whether the conduct of the accused amounts to an obstruction within the meaning of clause 9 of section 25. As I have already stated, the godown was locked. The requisition of the complainant to have it opened was not complied with in the morning of the 14th; and about 2 o'clock when the accused returned, undoubtedly the complainant insisted upon the opening of the godown. It is not suggested in the case that the accused had not the necessary control over the key, and that he was not in a position to open the godown, if he was minded to do so. If under these circumstances he refused to open the godown, it seems to me that he undoubtedly caused an obstruction to the free access to this godown to which the complainant was entitled. It does not matter as to what the object of the complainant was in asking the accused to open the godown. It has been urged with some insistence that the real thing that the complainant wanted was the account books, and as there is a finding in favour of the accused on that point, there could have been no intention on the part of the accused to cause obstruction. But the obstruction to the free access to the godown did arise in fact, and to me it appears that that obstruction existed no less because the purpose for which it was wanted was not established as alleged by the complainant. The fact appears to have been, as found by the learned Sessions Judge, that the complainant had a suspicion in his mind that the account books were in the godown, and possibly he wanted to get samples of the silk cloth which was manufactured in this Mill. It is possible, on the other hand, that on account of what had transpired between the complainant and the Mill people in the morning, when the accused and the complainant met at about 2 o'clock the interview between them was not exactly pleasant, and on account of mutual distrust and suspicion of each other, both parties possibly behaved in a manner in which they might not have otherwise acted. But whatever the reason may be, the fact remains that the accused refused to open the godown at the time, and it seems to me that it is no answer to say that later on in the afternoon he offered to the complainant to have access to that godown. Undoubtedly he did make such an offer by his letter in the afternoon on the 14th, and to that extent, I think, he acted correctly. But that is not sufficient, in my opinion, to condone the obstruction which he in fact caused at about 2 o'clock when he refused access to the complainant to the godown.

It seems to me, therefore, that the conviction under clause 9 of section 25 of the Cotton Duties Act is correct. Having regard, however, to the findings of the learned Sessions Judge as regards the account books, and to the fact that the complainant really wanted access to the account books, and also to the subsequent conduct of the accused in writing the letter to which I have referred, it seems to me that the sentence is unduly severe. Having regard to these circumstances, I think that the sentence of fine of Rs. 100 would be sufficient to meet the requirements of the case. I would, therefore, reduce the sentence to a fine of Rs. 100 and direct the excess, if paid, to be refunded. We set aside the sentence of imprisonment.

Fawcett, J.—I agree that the conviction of the accused for having intentionally obstructed the complainant in the exercise of his power under the Cotton Duties Act should not be interfered with by this Court on revision.

On the main question the facts found by the lower Court seem to me clearly to show that there was wilful obstruction. The complainant had been trying to get access to this godown for some hours in the morning. He had written several memos to that end addressed to the accused. He did not succeed in getting such access, and at the subsequent interview between the accused and the complainant the accused definitely refused to open the godown. To say that that does not amount to a wilful obstruction under clause 9 of section 25 of the Cotton Duties Act seems to me absurd. The complainant under section 16 had a right of free access, so that no conditions could be attached to it. It was not open to the accused, for instance, to say "you must wait some hours until I fully consider the question," and it is not alleged that the accused was not in a position, if he wanted to, to have had the godown at once opened and the complainant given access to it. The question of the particular purpose for which the complainant wanted such access seems to me immaterial in the circumstances of this case, so long, at any rate, as the object was in connection with the Inspector's duties under the Cotton Duties Act. It may, however, be remarked that it was not an entirely new case set up for the first time by the learned Sessions Judge, that he wanted such access to see if there were any goods in this godown, for the letter of the Inspector, Exhibit 2-B, in fact mentioned his suspicion that there were such goods in the godown. Whether it was to see such goods, or whether it was to see whether any accounts were concealed there, in either case the complainant had a right of access to the godown and undoubtedly the accused, after due notice, declined to give him such access. It is absurd to say that because there was no other overt act, such as a threat or a blow, that therefore there was no intentional obstruction. I may in this connection refer to the case of Gully v. Smith (1) where the question arose whether an owner whose wall had tumbled down on to a road, and who, after due notice, omitted to remove it was guilty of "wilful obstruction" of the highway under a certain Statute. It was held by the Court that he was guilty of such obstruction, and Lord Coleridge in delivering judgment said, among other things—

"To my mind it is clear that, though obstruction may have begun with an act for which the appellant was not responsible, yet if he ought to have removed that which caused the obstruction, and after notice did not do so, that act of leaving it becomes wilful on his part."

In that case there was also a contention that there ought to have been some overt act on his part, but that was overruled by the Court. So here there was obstruction to the complainant's right of free access, namely, the locked door. The accused had notice to remove that obstruction and to give the complainant free access, and he declined to do so, and, therefore, there was wilful obstruction on his part.

As to the point whether section 16 would cover free access to this godown, it seems to me quite clear from the definition of the word "Mill" in this Act that it must do so. That definition contains the wide word "place" which (supposing the godown is not in the particular building where the machinery is) is wide enough to cover the premises containing accessories to the manufacture of cotton goods in the Mill, and the Explanation to section 6 of the Act provides that cotton goods produced in the Mill cover any goods which are issued out of the premises of the Mill. Obviously the Legislature intends the Mill premises to be covered by the word "mill."

(1) (1884) 12 Q. B. D. 121; 53 L. J. M. C. 35; 48 J. P. 209.

As regards the sentence, I agree with my learned brother that in the circumstances the fine should be reduced from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 100.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 307
—Judge disagreeing with Jury—Reference to High Court—High Court, when will interfere.

The real test that has to be applied in a Reference under section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code, when the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the Jury, is to see whether the verdict is so unreasonable that seven reasonable men could not have arrived at that verdict. [p. 359, col. 2]

The High Court will not, therefore, interfere in a case unless it can be said that it was not possible for the Jury to have arrived at the verdict at which they did arrive. [ibid]

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is a Reference by the Sessions Judge of Chittagong. Twenty persons were charged with offences under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code. Four of them 1, 2, 17 and 18 were further charged with offences under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code and there was a further charge under section 149 read with section 302 against all the 20 persons. The trial took place before a Jury between the 10th and the 19th of December, last year, and the Jury by an unanimous verdict found the accused not guilty on the 19th December, giving them, so we understand, the benefit of the doubt. Under the circumstances the Sessions Judge who has disagreed with the unanimous verdict of the Jury has made this Reference to us under the provisions of section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is necessary, therefore, for us to consider the evidence that was before the Jury and the view of the Sessions Judge and also the view of the Jury and after having done so to arrive at our own conclusion upon the case. The facts of the case are succinctly set forth both in the second paragraph of the letter of Reference and also in the charge to the Jury under the heading "prosecution case." I need only deal very shortly with the facts. The prosecution case is that on the 8th of July last year, one Bangshi Dey, a tenant of Prasanna and two other persons, labourers of Prasanna, were transplanting paddy in a large char lying to the west of the village Gahira which was in the possession of Prasanna, and his brother, Hara Kumar and Nishi, brothers of Prasanna, were watching the transplanting of the paddy. Then it is said that a large number of men armed with lathis came from the east and that the five men, Hara Kumar, Nishi, Bangshi and the two labourers ran away towards the west. It is said that near the darga of one Har Chandra Das, who was also a tenant of Prasanna, the five persons who were flying were intercepted by a party of men who were coming from the north-west. The two labourers effected their escape and it is said that the other three were surrounded and that Hara Kumar was struck on the head with a lathi by two of the accused, Azizur Rahman and Golam Kader. According to the prosecution case Hara Kumar fell down as the result of the blows and Bangshi tried to protect him by interposing his body and received a number of blows. The prosecution evidence states that despite this, various other blows were aimed, by various members of the attacking party upon the prostrate body of Hara Kumar. Nishi is also said to have been beaten by the rioters and three other persons who arrived to see what was happening are said to have received injuries and another brother of Prasanna, Nabin, is said to have been struck by the rioters as they were dispersing. Hara Kumar was carried home. The occurrence took place in the evening and at about 9 o'clock in the night Hara Kumar and Nishi were taken in a sampan and information was sent to Prasanna who was in Chittagong where he was employed as a Pleader's clerk. Prasanna left Chittagong on the following morning, that is, on the 9th of July. On his way he met his brothers in the sampan and he took them to a ghat near the thana which is at a place called Anwara. At 2 p. m. next day, the 9th July, the first information was lodged by Prasanna. All the accused were named in that information. On Prasanna lodging the first information a Sub-Inspector went from the thana to the ghat and inspected the injuries of Hara Kumar and Nishi. After this was done Hara Kumar and Nishi were taken to Chittagong where Hara Kumar died of the injuries early in the morning of the 10th. The post mortem examination of Hara Kumar disclosed two wounds on the top of his head and a fracture of the frontal bone in five segments and the view of the Civil Surgeon was that the injuries on the head were sufficient by themselves to cause death. The dispute in respect of which the rioting is said to have taken place arose about the possession of this char.

EMPEROR V. GOLAM KADDER.

Prasanna and his brothers claimed it and Prasanna had recently obtained a decree with regard to certain plots in the char in section 145 proceedings to which Azizur Rahman, one of the accused, was a party. Azizur Rahman had started a title suit in respect of two of these plots and a kabuliyat had been executed by Azizur Rahman and his co-sharers in favour of one Umed Ali and ten others of the accused are said to have executed kabuliyats in favour of Umed Ali in respect of the disputed land. The prosecution's suggestion is that behind Umed Ali was one Khan Saheb Abdul Rahman Dovasha, a well-known merchant of Chittagong and this person is said to have instigated the attack. The defence story is not very clear and apparently the suggestion was that Nishi and Hara Kumar and others, when they were going to break down a hut which had been erected by Umed Ali or Abdul Rahman on the southern extremity of the char, were driven off and beaten by Umed Ali's men. No evidence was called on behalf of the defence and the defence story can only be gathered from the line of cross-examination that was followed with regard to some of the witnesses. A very large body of witnesses were called on behalf of the prosecution, many of whom purported to be eye-witnesses of the occurrence. Amongst them are prosecution witness No. 2, Bacha Mia, prosecution witnesses Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7. The other eye-witnesses are prosecution witnesses Nos. 9, 10, 11, 13 and 16 and in addition to these there are other witnesses who speak to having seen some occurrence from a distance. Most, if not all, of the eye-witnesses identified all the accused though it is true that prosecution witness No. 8 says in the Sessions Court that Azizur Rahman and Golam were not present on the occasion although before the Magistrate he stated that Azizur Rahman and Golam gave the blows. Prosecution witness No. 7 also says that Azizur Rahman was not present. As the learned Judge pointed out to the Jury the majority of the prosecution witnesses were either relatives or tenants or labourers of Prasanna and his brothers. There are one or two or possibly more persons who may be said to be entirely independent but it is not unnatural that a greater number of the prosecution witnesses are connected with Prasanna in one or other of the ways I have mentioned. There is no doubt that reading the evidence as it has been read to us there does seem an almost overwhelming case made out on the part of the prosecution against these accused. What, therefore, we have got to consider is whether the Jury were entirely unreasonable in giving the benefit of the doubt, as they did, to the accused and whether it was impossible for the Jury to arrive at any other conclusion reasonable than that the guilt of the accused had been brought home to them. Various points were urged by the learned Counsel who appeared on behalf of the accused in support of the view that the verdict of the Jury was not an unreasonable verdict and that accordingly we should not interfere with it.

First, he refers to the fact that according to the evidence the assault on Hara Kumar was made by at least 15 people and that yet according to the medical evidence only two blows were found on Hara Kumar's head and one slight abrasion on another portion of his body. Certainly we think that this is a fair comment because on reading the evidence we find that many blows are said to have been rained upon Hara Kumar by some of the accused after he had fallen down as a result of the first two blows. The evidence is that Azizur Rahman and Golam struck him first and that after that no less than 13 persons struck him and yet according to the medical evidence as we have already stated there were only three actual blows, according to the Doctor's view, that can be traced on the person of Hara Kumar. Then again so far as Nishi is concerned it is stated in the evidence that he was struck by no less than 11 people. But if you consider the evidence of the Doctor, so far as Nishi is concerned, you will find that he says that Nishi had a bruise on the eye-lid of the right eye and a contusion on the left fore-arm and further injuries, all of which were slight except the one on the head.

Then it is further urged that there was evidence before the Jury that other persons, as I have already indicated, were injured in the affray and that yet the injuries of none of them were of sufficient gravity to demand examination by a Doctor.

Then it is urged that a certain number of witnesses, five I think it is said, went back to some extent in the Sessions Court upon the evidence that they had given before the Magistrate and emphasis was laid on the fact that prosecution witness No. 25, who had given a long and a coherent story as to the connection of Abdul Rahman Dovasha with the attack before the Magistrate, stated nothing whatsoever with regard to this in his evidence in the Sessions Court.

Then stress is laid on the fact that although there were other brothers of the two injured men who were at the place of the occurrence at the time it happened no information was given at the thana until nearly 24 hours after the occurrence although the thana was only 10 miles away and could be easily reached by a sampan by the river Sangu.

Then some point was made with regard to the exaggerations that are said to have appeared in the evidence with regard to the fact that the accused were armed with daos and kirchis. It is said that reference to this appears in the first information and that it is not borne out by the evidence of the witnesses and reference was also made to the picturesque figure who is said to have appeared with a lathi in one hand and a dao on the other.

Then some point was made with regard to the scene of the occurrence which was placed by the prosecution on Plot No. 2775 which is said to have been a plot which was not claimed by any of the accused.

Further stress is laid on the fact that I have already mentioned that the witnesses were tenants or labourers of Prasanna and that the Judge himself in his letter of reference says that the prosecution witnesses are not free from the charge that some of their evidence was tutored evidence.

Lastly, stress was laid on the point that a considerable number of witnesses were named in the first information including the names of the two chowkidars, none of whom were called at the trial of the case.

It is necessary to see in the light of these suggestions whether we can say that the verdict of the Jury was so unreasonable that seven reasonable men could not have arrived at that verdict, for it seems to us that that is the real test that we have got to apply. We are not able to say that it was not possible for the Jury to have arrived at the verdict at which they have arrived. We have read the evidence and considered it in the light of the criticisms that have been directed against it and we are of opinion that it is full of exaggerations and that it may well be that the Jury taking this view may have said to themselves that it was not safe to convict the accused upon the evidence which was clearly exaggerated, and, therefore, untrustworthy. This being so, it seems to us that we should not be justified in accepting the Reference and interfering with the verdict of not guilty at which the Jury have arrived. The accused are acquitted.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 195, 476, 476A—Application for sanction to prosecute made before amendment of Code—Application kept pending till after its amendment—Pendency of application, whether, rejection of application—Jurisdiction of superior Court to order prosecution—Oaths

RAMDAS VISHNUDAS V. EMPEROR.

Act (X of 1873), s 11—Special oath—Conclusive proof of statement made—Statement can be proved to be false.

An application for sanction to prosecute, filed under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, before the amendment of the Code in 1923, remained pending in the lower Court till sometime after the Code was amended. Then the District Court, to which the lower Court was subordinate, acting under section 476A ordered prosecution under section 476 of the Code.

Held, that, as the pendency of the application for sanction did not mean rejection of the application within the meaning of section 178A, the District Court was competent to order prosecution.

The evidence given under section 11 of the Oaths Act is not conclusive proof of the matter stated, but is conclusive proof of the matter stated as against the person who offers to be bound by the special oath. Therefore, it can be proved that a statement made on a special oath was false, and false to the knowledge of the person making it.

Criminal appeal from an order passed by the District Judge, Sholapur.

FACTS.—The appellant, Ramdas Vishnudas, took a special oath in a civil case, under the Oaths Act (X of 1873). In a subsequent civil case he stated on oath that the previous statement, which he had made on the special oath, was false. Upon this his brother Manmohandas applied to the Subordinate Judge in July 1922 for sanction to prosecute him for perjury. This application remained pending before the Subordinate Judge till March 1924 when the District Judge, acting under section 476A, Criminal Procedure Code, ordered Ramdas Vishnudas' prosecution under section 476 of the Code.

An appeal against this order was preferred to the High Court under section 476-B of the Code.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee, with Mr. V. B. Virkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Two points have been urged in support of this appeal which has been preferred to this Court under section 476-B, Criminal Procedure Code. The first point is that as an application for sanction was made by the brother of the present appellant on July 11, 1922, which has not been disposed of, the District Court, to which that Court would be subordinate within the meaning of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, would not be competent to make an order under section 476-A. It is an admitted fact, however, that the application is not rejected by that Court. It is difficult to understand how that application has remained pending so long. But it being common ground before us that that application is pending, but not rejected, we do not think that there could be any objection to the superior Court taking such action as could be taken by the Court under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code. The pendency of the application cannot mean rejection of the application within the meaning of section 476-A.

The second point urged is that as the first statement which was made by the present appellant on January 26, 1921, on special oath it cannot be shown to be false because of the provision of section 11 of the Indian Oaths Act. That section provides that the evidence so given shall, as against the person who offered to be bound by the special oath, be conclusive proof of the matter stated. The section does not provide that it shall be conclusive proof of the matter stated, but it provides that as against the person, who offers to be bound by the special oath, it will be conclusive proof of the matter stated. Now the complaint is filed by the Court, and it is open to that Court to show, if it can, that that statement was false, and false to the knowledge of the person making it. Whether that Court will be able to establish those propositions must depend upon the evidence which will be available at the trial of the case against the appellant. We express no opinion whatever as to the merits of the complaint at this stage. But section 11 of the Indian Oaths Act does not prevent the Court from attempting to establish that a particular statement made by the appellant was false in fact and false to his knowledge. In other words it is open to the Court to establish that by making that statement the appellant gave false evidence within the meaning of section 193

(2) that the accused did not intend to cause death or to cause such injury as was likely to cause death, [ibid]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 25th April 1924.

Mr Sagar Chand, for Mr. Philip Morton, for the Appellant

Lala Amar Nath Chona, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Khan Mir, appellant, has been convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for ten years under section 304, Part I, Indian Penal Code. His Counsel does not contest the findings of fact arrived at by the learned Sessions Judge but contends that on those findings he should have been convicted under section 326, Indian Penal Code, and awarded a lesser sentence. The facts found may be stated as below.

A dispute arose between the accused and the deceased about drawing water from a tap with the result that they abused each other and then the accused drew his knife and stabbed the deceased with it. The knife pierced the chest wall and cut the heart. Death was due to the wound in the heart. The knife was not produced but two of the eye-witnesses stated that its blade was three or four inches long.

The accused admitted that he stabbed the deceased but pleaded that he did so in self-defence. But the plea of stabbing in self-defence is not pressed now in this Court.

The learned Sessions Judge found that the blow was struck in a sudden fight without premeditation and that there was no reason for thinking that the accused deliberately aimed the blow on the left side, i. e. in the region of the heart. The learned Counsel for the appellant contends that the present case is on all fours with that reported in Ghulam Muhay-ud-din v. Emperor (1) and by reference thereto he argues that the knife whose blade was not more than four inches in length could not be said to be a dangerous weapon and that as the Sessions Judge found that the blow was not deliberately aimed at the region of the heart the accused could not be convicted of culpable homicide but of the offence punishable under section 326, Indian Penal Code. I am of opinion that this contention is quite untenable. Each case is to be decided on its own facts. A knife which actually caused the fatal injury was undoubtedly a dangerous weapon, and as the accused struck in the chest it follows that he knew that the injury was likely to prove fatal even if the knife did not pierce the heart, because if it had penetrated any other part of the chest it would have naturally cut the lung and a wound in the lung also would have probably ended in death. But it cannot be said that he intended to cause death or to cause such injury as was likely to cause death. All that can be said against him is that he gave a stab in the chest knowing that he was likely by that act to cause death. His offence would therefore fall under the second part of section 304, Indian Penal Code and I alter the conviction accordingly and reduce the sentence to rigorous imprisonment for seven years, because the accused and the deceased were both quite youths aged 20 each, and the injury was caused in a sudden scuffle.

Rule 5 Every owner of a house used for human habitation shall, if there be no public privy to which the residents can resort within 150 yards thereof, provide the same with a privy or privies in accordance with the following requirements.

Rule 6 Every person who shall construct a new privy or cess-pool, shall construct the same in such position only as shall be approved in writing by the Managing Committee and in such a way that every cess-pool and night-soil receptacle shall be at a distance of at least five feet from any place used for human habitation, twenty feet from any public road or place of public resort, twenty feet from any kitchen and thirty feet from any well, tank or stream the water of which is used for drinking purposes.

Provided that where the maintenance of any such distance is absolutely impossible the Municipality may, if they think no injury to health is likely to result from the proposed position of a privy, sanction the reduction of such distances down to half those prescribed above.

apply where a privy has been erected without the permission of the Committee. In such a case there is no obligation under the said bye-law on the owner to communicate the fact of the completion of the privy to the Chairman, Managing Committee, nor is he under any obligation not to commence to make use of the privy before obtaining the written order to that effect from the Chairman. The bye-law, as it stands, relates to the privy in respect of which an application has been made under bye-law No 7, and for which permission has been granted under bye-law No 8, and not a privy which has been constructed without permission of the Municipality. [p. 363, col 2, p. 364, col. 1.]

Rule 7 Every person desiring to erect a privy or desiring to repair or rebuild an old privy, shall apply in writing to the Chairman of the Managing Committee for the necessary permission. The application shall be accompanied by a plan showing the dimensions of the privy and the site on which it is to be erected.

Rule 8. On receipt of the application the Managing Committee shall give permission in writing for the erection of the privy subject to the conditions specified in bye-laws 5 and 6. These conditions shall be noted in the written permission and the person receiving the permission shall be bound to prepare the privy in terms of the written permission.

Rule 9 After completion of the privy the owner shall communicate this fact to the Chairman, Managing Committee, and no person shall commence to make use of the privy unless he obtains a written order to that effect from the Chairman, Managing Committee.

Rule 10 Before issuing an order the Chairman shall satisfy himself that the privy has been completed in terms of the written permission given under bye-law 8. In order to satisfy himself the Chairman may himself go or depute any member of the Managing or Sanitary Committee or Secretary to the place where the privy is constructed.

Rule 11. If the Chairman finds that the privy has not been prepared in terms of the written permission, he shall refuse to issue the necessary order to commence the privy unless the owner complies with the terms of the written permission. An appeal shall lie to the President from the order of the Chairman refusing permission to use the privy.

Rule 12 Every owner of a pre-existing privy shall, if so required by a special notice issued by the Municipality in this behalf within six months or within such further reasonable time as may be fixed in such notice, comply to the best of his ability with all reasonable directions given in detail in such notice as regards alterations required to be made in such privy towards bringing it into conformity with the requirements of these bye-laws.

Rule 13 Every person committing any breach of bye-laws 1 and 2, 7, 9 and 12 shall for such offence be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding Rs 25.

BZBKIEL MOSES PENKAR V. EMPEROR.

Criminal application from conviction and sentence recorded by the First Class Magistrate, Kolaba.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The few facts material for the purpose of the present application are these. The applicant applied for permission to build a house and a privy. It appears that there was an old privy on the spot. The Municipality, however, granted permission to build the house, but refused permission to erect a privy. Sometime thereafter, however, the applicant put up the privy in question on the site of the old privy. It has been found now that this was substantially a reconstruction of the privy. The applicant was prosecuted by the Municipality, among other things, for having committed a breach of Bye-law No. 9 of the Bye-laws for Privies framed by the Pen Municipality and sanctioned by the Commissioner, Southern Division.

As regards the other charges the learned Magistrate acquitted the accused. As to the charge relating to the contravening of rule 9 he has been found guilty and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 10.

The accused has now applied to this Court for a revision of the order relating to his conviction under bye-law No. 9. The bye law is in these terms:—

"After the completion of the privy the owner shall communicate this fact to the Chairman, Managing Committee, and no person shall commence to make use of the privy unless he obtains a written order to that effect from the Chairman, Managing Committee."

It appears from rule 7 that every person desiring to erect a privy or desiring to repair or rebuild an old privy shall apply in writing to the Chairman of Managing Committee for the necessary permission.

Rule 8 provides that on receipt of the application the Managing Committee shall give permission in writing for the erection of the privy subject to the conditions specified in bye-laws Nos. 5 and 6.

It may be mentioned that though the applicant made an application to rebuild an old privy, that application was refused. The reason of the refusal was stated in general terms to be that according to the rules of the Municipality the permission could not be granted. Rule 8, however, provides that on receipt of the application the Managing Committee shall give permission in writing for the erection of the privy subject to the conditions specified in bye-laws Nos. 5 and 6. At the time the permission was refused it was not stated that according to the provisions of rule 6, now relied upon, the permission could not be granted as there was not a distance of at least five feet between the building and the proposed privy. It is also found by the learned Magistrate that the Municipality acted contrary to the provisions of rule 8 in refusing permission.

The privy must be taken to have been built without the permission of the Municipality, and the question is whether rule 9 applies to a privy so constructed. We are not concerned now with the question as to whether the Municipality could have pulled down the privy, which was built without the permission of the Municipality.

It is clear, however, that so far as rule 9 is concerned, when it is read with reference to the context, that is, in the light of rules 7 and 8 preceding rule 9 and of rule 10 which follows rule 9, it seems clear that the communication that is required by rule 9 to be made after the completion of the privy relates to a privy with reference to which permission has been granted under rule 8, and not to a privy which has been constructed without the permission of the Municipality. It may be that the rule as framed is defective, and the intention of the framers of the rule was not to exclude from the scope of rule 9 a privy such as we have in this case. But we have to construe the rule as it is framed, and if the original intention has not been sufficiently carried out, it is perfectly open to the Municipality to amend the bye-law. But the bye-law as it stands appears to relate to the privy in respect of which an application has been made under rule 7 and for which permission has been granted under rule 8.

CHIDDA SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Rule 10 makes it clear that before issuing an order the Chairman is to satisfy himself that the privy has been completed in terms of the written permission given under bye-law 8. The Chairman would have no inquiry to make under rule 10, if there was no permission granted by the Municipality with reference to the privy.

On a consideration of the wording of the particular rule, as also of the other connected rules, we are of opinion that rule 9 does not apply to the facts of this case, and that there was no breach on the part of the applicant in not complying with the rule. There was no obligation on the applicant to communicate the fact of the completion of the privy to the Chairman, nor was he under any obligation not to commence to make use of the privy before obtaining the written order to that effect from the Chairman of the Managing Committee.

We make the Rule absolute, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 198 OF 1924.

June 6, 1924.

CHIDDA SINGH—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 236, 237, 238—Charge, alteration of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 34, 325—Conviction under s 325 set aside—Re-trial for offence under ss 34, 235

Where an accused person has been tried for and convicted of an offence under section 325, Penal Code, on the charge that he himself struck blows to another person which resulted in the latter's death, but the witnesses against him are disbelieved by the Court of Appeal and, therefore, his conviction cannot be upheld on that charge, the Court cannot alter the charge and maintain his conviction by reading section 34, Penal Code, with section 325, on the ground that some member of the party of the accused, though not the accused himself, had struck blows to the deceased in pursuance of the common intention of the party, even if there is evidence to this effect on the record, nor can the case be sent back for re-trial, under section 325 read with section 34, as such a course would mean inviting the Court below to believe, on the amended charge the very witnesses who are held by the Appellate Court to have committed deliberate perjury against the accused in stating that he had struck blows to the deceased. [p. 385, cols 1 & 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Meerut, dated the 1st March 1924.

Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case two men Randhira and Sital have been already in a prior case convicted and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment each under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code. The present appellant Chidda Singh was absconding. Six witnesses now in the Sessions Court state that the present appellant was one of the three men, the other two being Randhira and Sital who struck Ram Sarup under a mango tree to which he had retreated at the instance of his son from the threshing floor where the fight began. Five of these six witnesses never named Chidda Singh as striking Ram Sarup under the mango tree in their statements which were recorded under section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code nor in their statements at the first trial of the other two accused. Begraj mentioned him at the first trial but did not mention him in his statement under section 164, Exhibit P, Criminal Procedure Code. The learned Sessions Judge has not relied on these five witnesses but has considered himself justified in relying on Begraj supported by the fact that Chidda Singh absconded and as he says that Chidda Singh was named in the first report. The fact of his absconding can be of very little value. As to the first report it is a purely general statement that such and such people beat such and such people and it is made by one Sagar Mal who says nothing himself and was merely giving a general description of what he had heard from others and even that general description does not attribute to Chidda Singh the particular beating of Ram Sarup, still less the particular beating which took place under the mango tree at which place it is certain the grievous hurt must have been caused which is the subject of the charge. Under these circumstances after hearing both sides at length I am quite certain that I find myself unable to uphold the conviction of Chidda Singh on the belief that he himself struck Ram Sarup the blow (there was only one blow on the head) which eventually proved fatal under the mango tree. It then becomes necessary to consider the charge. Chidda Singh the appellant was specifically charged that he "caused such bodily injury to Ram Sarup which resulted in the man's death and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 325, Indian Penal Code." Finding that I cannot uphold the conviction on the ground that Chidda Singh himself caused the injury the question is whether at this stage I can alter the charge.

It is urged on behalf of the Crown that there was common intention on the part of the several accused to beat the several members of the other party and that, therefore, a conviction could properly be arrived at with the aid of section 34 of the Indian Penal Code. This course appears to involve the following difficulties:—

Firstly, I cannot alter a charge except under the authority given by some section of the Criminal Procedure Code. The sections which would have to be considered are 236, 237 and 238. It is not urged, and cannot be urged, that sections 236 and 238 are applicable to a case of this description, and as regards section 237 the provision in that is prefaced by the words "in the case mentioned in section 236". It is clear to me, therefore, that there is no section which will justify me in altering the charge and proceeding now to a conviction on that charge. It would really mean convicting the accused by bringing in two new facts which he was never asked in any way at all to meet in the lower Court. Those two new facts being

(1) not that he himself but somebody else of his companions struck the accused;

(2) that blow was struck in pursuance of a common intention.

I might be inclined to hold that the evidence on the record certainly indicates that those two points might be held to be established; but that would not justify me in altering the charge and proceeding here to a conviction without giving the accused a definite opportunity of meeting them. The last question then is, ought I to set aside the conviction and send the case back for a re-trial on an amended charge of section 325, Indian Penal Code, in reference to the blow inflicted by Sital and Randhira read with section 34. It appears to me that I ought not to do this. In the first place the accused has stood his trial once. That is, however, not a conclusive reason for not sending the case back. The conclusive reason is that I am acquitting him here on the charge of section 325, Indian Penal Code, based on the allegation that he inflicted the blow himself and am acquitting him on that charge not on any technical ground but because I hold that the witnesses in now attributing to him a personal part have clearly interpolated his name. To send the case back would mean inviting the Court below to believe on the amended charge the very witnesses whom I have held here to have in effect committed deliberate perjury. This would be very undesirable.

For the above reasons I allow the appeal of Chidda Singh; set aside his conviction and sentence, and direct that he be forthwith released.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V. of 1898), ss. 85,

KHALBAL v. MUHAMMAD YUSUF.

561A—Application for restoration of attached property two years after attachment—Inherent jurisdiction of High Court—Proper remedy—Application to Government

If an application for the restoration of property attached under section 88, Criminal Procedure Code, is not made within two years, as prescribed by section 89 of the Code, the High Court has no jurisdiction, under section 561A of the Code, to order the restoration of property, as such an order, if made, would conflict with section 89. The proper remedy is an application to Government.

Criminal application against an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, First Class at Dharwar, confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge, Dharwar.

Mr H. B. Gumaste, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner before us made an application to the Magistrate for the restoration of certain property which was attached under section 88, Criminal Procedure Code. The facts relating to this attachment have been stated in the petition, and the case of the petitioner was that as he was absent from the village, he did not know anything about the attachment until he came back to the village about the time he made the application in 1923. Under section 89, Criminal Procedure Code, it is clear that the application for the restoration of property has to be made within two years from the date of the attachment. In the present case the attachment was so far back as 1918 and the present application was made in 1923. The learned Magistrate rejected the application having regard to the provisions of section 89, Criminal Procedure Code. In appeal the learned Sessions Judge upheld that order.

In support of the application to this Court it is urged that we should exercise our inherent powers to secure the ends of justice under section 561 A, Criminal Procedure Code. We do not think that we could make any order which would conflict with the provisions of section 89, Criminal Procedure Code, in the exercise of our inherent powers to which a reference has been made. The order made by the Magistrate appears to be correct. As the application has not been made within two years from the date of the attachment, the Court has no jurisdiction to make the order which the applicant wants for the restoration of the property.

It is clear that his proper remedy is to apply to Government at whose disposal property is at present according to law. If the Government are satisfied that the allegations by the petitioner are correct and that the justice of the case requires that the property should be restored to him, the Government may allow a restoration of the property to the applicant; but we cannot help him, nor can we make any recommendation to the Government as to the merits of his application. We discharge the Rule.

Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859), s. 2—Failure to perform contract—Complaint, when must be made—Second Class Magistrate, jurisdiction of—Period of grace, whether should be allowed—Court, discretion of

A complaint with regard to a workman's default must be brought within three months of the neglect to perform the contract [p. 367, col. 1.]

An Honorary Magistrate of the Second Class has jurisdiction to try a case under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act [ibid.]

Some period of grace should be allowed to the accused for making the repayment before sending him to Jail [ibid.]

It is within the discretion of the Magistrate to fix the length of the period [p. 367, col. 2.]

Criminal Reference made by the District Magistrate, Hamirpur.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference by the District Magistrate of Hamirpur recommending this Court to set aside the conviction and sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment passed against Khalbal under section 2 of RAM BAHAL SINGH v. RANG BAHADUR SINGH.

Act XIII. of 1859. He recommends this on two grounds:—

(1) That the complaint was not brought within three months of the neglect to perform the contract as required by the Amending Act XII of 1920, and

(2) That the Trying Magistrate being a Magistrate of the Second Class only had no jurisdiction to try the case.

As regards the first point the date of agreement was the 2nd of June 1922 and the money paid Rs. 114 was paid on the 7th of June, 1922. Work to the value of Rs. 40 was done in June and July 1922 and it should have been completed within one year of the date of agreement, i. e. before June 7th, 1923, as appears from the statement of the complainant. The accused neglected to do any further work after July 1922. In reference to this the Trying Magistrate explains that he overlooked the Amending Act XII of 1920, because he is not supplied with copies of such Acts and when he sent for Act XII of 1920 from the library of the District Magistrate he was not supplied with a copy of the Amending Act, XII of 1920. It is very reasonable explanation on his part and I consider that he was in no way to blame for the oversight. At the same time the defect is one which goes to the root of his order and on that ground alone the order must be set aside.

As to the second point the learned Honorary Magistrate respectfully points out that the District Magistrate is in error in holding that he had no jurisdiction to try the case. He refers to the end of Schedule III of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the last entry and the penultimate entry in which an offence punishable under a law other than the Penal Code with imprisonment, for less than one year is triable by any Magistrate and less than three years by any Magistrate of the Second Class or by a more Senior Magistrate, etc. The learned Honorary Magistrate does not, therefore, appear on this ground to have committed any error in trying the accused. A third point that I notice myself is that the learned Honorary Magistrate having convicted the accused has ordered him to pay or in default to go to Jail for three months. It seems to me clear that under section 2 of Act XIII of 1859 as amended by Act 1920 the Magistrate should have ordered him to re-pay "within such period" as he, the Magistrate, thought fit. It is clear that some period of grace, which period is in the discretion of the Magistrate, was intended to be allowed to the accused. For this oversight the learned Honorary Magistrate is again not to be blamed as the provision occurs in Act XII of 1920 of which he had no copy. For the reason that the complaint was not made within three months of the accused's default I set aside the order. The accused having been released on his own bond under the orders of the District Magistrate need not surrender and his bond is discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 145, 146—Court, duty of—Collection of evidence as to possession—Attachment of property.

Under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate should be extremely reluctant to attach the property in dispute and it is his duty to collect information about possession whether false or true and to sift it before making use of section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, as an order under this section is almost the same as an act of confiscation. Application against an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Dinapur.

JUDGMENT.—These are petitions preferred both by the first and the second parties in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code which has been decided by the learned Sub-Divisional Officer of Dinapore. The property in dispute is 6.43 acres. It is the first party's case that they purchased quite recently from one Saudagar whose name was entered in the Record of Rights as the raiyat in respect of this area. The second party claim to have purchased from Mr. Jugeshwar Prasad, a Pleader of the Patna District Court. Both parties are co-sharers in the village. But it is the case of the second party that the land is zerai belonging to his vendor's takhta, and it is the case of the first party that the land was the raiyati land of Saudagar, his vendor. There has been some litigation, and some years ago Mr. Jugeshwar Prasad brought a suit against Saudagar Singh claiming a declaration that the entry in the Record of Rights was incorrect. In that suit Saudagar Singh filed a petition admitting that he had nothing to do with the land. Of recent years the predecessor of the first party has as co-sharer been obtaining decrees against Saudagar for rent and, as I said before, had purchased the holding from Saudagar last year. Now the Magistrate calls this a most complicated case and after reviewing some of the arguments of the parties as to possibility of their claim he states that "in view of the conflicting documentary evidence and the extreme paucity of oral evidence as to possession (all the witnesses on both sides admitting that they know no details of possession worthy of note) it is quite impossible to come to any decision as to who is in possession of the disputed land."

RAM BAHAL SINGH V. RANG BAHADUR SINGH.

Thereupon the Magistrate passed an order in accordance with section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Now, I am not satisfied that this order is one that has faithfully followed the spirit of the law. In my opinion it should be held as a very important principle in cases under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, that a Magistrate should be extremely reluctant to attach the property in dispute. It is quite intelligible that he might be in a position to say with confidence that he was unable to satisfy himself as to the possession of the parties in cases where the land is jungle or waste. But where, as here, there is land admittedly subject year by year and season by season to cultivation, it appears to me that the Magistrate is only admitting his own weakness when he states that he cannot come to a decision. He has before him two parties quite ready with information. The information may be true or false, but it is his duty to collect information and sift it. After all, the order under section 146 is almost the same as an act of confiscation and, therefore, the Magistrate should naturally be reluctant to make use of that section. Much of what I have said as regards the duty of a Magistrate to collect and sift the evidence before proceeding to attachment under section 146 is inspired by what I have seen on the record of this particular case. I am not satisfied that the Magistrate is accurate when he states that the witnesses on both sides have admitted that they know no details of possession worthy of note. Had such an occurrence taken place this case would be indeed an unusual one, but I consider this sweeping statement to be a misdescription of the oral evidence. It has been pointed out to me that the oral evidence does contain specific statements as to possession, and in the arguments of the parties it has been emphasized that the treatment accorded to their oral evidence is not in conformity with the provisions of section 145 (4) of the Code. The Magistrate has not considered the effect of the evidence and he has not taken such further evidence, if any, as is necessary. It is clear here that before proceeding to seize the property he could have and should have offered to take further evidence, if further evidence was necessary for a decision. I, therefore, set aside the order passed under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code in this case. The case will proceed to further hearing.

Chandrasekhar Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the added defendants in a suit for arrears of rent.

The plaintiff instituted this suit on the 16th April, 1919, against the tenant-defendant for recovery of rent for the period between the 18th October, 1916, and the 13th April, 1919. His allegation was that the tenant held under him an area of one kani seven gandas of land at an annual rent of Rs. 43-11-8. The defendant filed his written statement on the 17th July, 1919, and urged, amongst other pleas, that the plaintiff alone was not competent to maintain the suit as he was in effect a fractional landlord. The Court thereupon adjourned the case till the 7th August, 1919. On that date, the plaintiff applied for time to add certain persons as defendants. The adjournment was granted, and on the 28th October, 1919, at the instance of the plaintiff, the present appellants were added as defendants. The plaint, however, was not amended as contemplated by O. I. r. 10, sub-r. (4) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and as it now stands, it does not disclose a cause of action against the added defendants. Notice was served upon the added defendants who entered appearance and on the 16th
January, 1920, filed their written statement. They denied that the plaintiff had any cause of action against them for the arrears claimed and asserted that they were his co-sharers. They further repudiated the transaction which, it was alleged, had taken place between the plaintiff and their predecessor-in-interest. On these pleadings, no issues were framed. The Court proceeded to try the suit as between the plaintiff on the one hand and the defendants on the other, and, on the 23rd February, 1920, pronounced judgment in favour of the plaintiff to the extent of one-half of the claim. The Trial Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had established his title only to a half share of the property in dispute and that the other half share was held by the added defendants who were described as pro forma defendants, that is, defendants against whom no relief was claimed. The plaintiff was dissatisfied with this decision and appealed to the Subordinate Judge. The lower Appellate Court then proceeded to receive additional evidence in the shape of petitions of compromise, dated the 11th April 1918, which had forced the foundation of the consent decree dated the 22nd April, 1919, in a previous litigation between the parties instituted on the 19th April, 1917; these petitions of compromise were deemed essential for the elucidation of the terms of the consent-decree. The Subordinate Judge ultimately allowed the appeal and decreed the claim in full. He came to the conclusion that the transactions between the plaintiff and the added defendants, which were impeached by the latter, must be treated as operative till they had been cancelled in a suit properly framed for that purpose. The added defendants have now appealed to this Court and have contested the propriety of the decision of the Subordinate Judge principally upon two grounds, namely, first, that they were entitled to impeach the validity of the transactions whereon the plaintiff relied, by way of defence without recourse to a regular suit; and secondly, that the transactions were manifestly inoperative as against the infants concerned, who were but could not, under the Muhammadan Law, be validly represented by their mother as their guardian. We are of opinion that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge cannot be supported.

It is plain that the effect of the addition of the appellants as defendants has been to transform a simple rent-suit into a complex title-suit. This course was rightly condemned by Field, J., in the case of Lodai Mollah v. Kally Dass Roy (1). To guard against possible misapprehension, we must state at the outset that it cannot be affirmed as a broad proposition of law that a question of title may not be incidentally investigated in a suit for arrears of rent. Where the tenant-defendant disputes the extent of the title of the plaintiff to the arrears demanded, it is incumbent on the Court to determine the point before the claim is allowed or disallowed. This view is supported by the decision in Rahimannessa Bibi v. Mahadeb Das Mal (2). But, subject to this reservation parties should not be added in a suit for rent so as to alter its nature and scope and to transform it into a suit for determination of a complicated question of title to land.

We are further of opinion that the Subordinate Judge fell into a manifest error when he held that the added defendants were not competent to assail in their defence the validity of the transactions whereon the plaintiff relied. The plaintiff was admittedly the original owner of the land in suit. His case is that on the 7th February, 1906, he transferred one-half of his interest in the property to the predecessors-in-interest of the added defendants. The true nature of this transaction is in controversy. The plaintiff maintains that the transfer was a mortgage in the disguise of a conveyance. The defendants maintain that the transaction was in essence as in form an out and out sale. Apart from this, the plaintiff maintains that the mortgage has been re-paid and that on the 7th and 11th January, 1918, he obtained from the defendants two deeds of release which recite that the mortgage has been satisfied so as to re-vest the full title in himself. The defendants urge that inasmuch as the original transfer was by way of a conveyance, the title could not be re-vested in the plaintiff by a deed of release and that a reconveyance was the only effective means for a re-transfer of the title, as ruled in Oodoy Koowur v. Ladoo (3), Jadu Nath Poddar v. Ruplal Poddar (4), Dharam Chand Boud v. Manji Shahn (5), Narak Lal v. Thagoo Lal (6), and Mathura Mohan Saha

v. Ram Kumar Saha (7). The defendants further maintain that the deeds of release, in so far as they were executed by the mother of the infants concerned as their guardian, are not valid, because as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Imam Bandi v. Mutsaddi (8) and Mata Din v. Ahmed Ali (9), the mother was not in the eye of law clothed with authority as de facto guardian to transfer the interest of the infants. It is with regard to this question that the Subordinate Judge has held that the added defendants could impeach the validity of the deeds of release only in a separate suit specially framed for that purpose. His view is opposed to the decision in Dwijendra Mohan Sarma v. Monorama Dasi (10) which applied the rule enunciated in Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co. v. Rebati Kumar (11), Hem Chandra v. Lalit Mohan Kar (12) and Mansaram Das v. Ahmad Hosain (13). It is an elementary proposition that if the plaintiff relies upon a transaction in support of his title, the defendant is entitled to impeach its validity by way of defence to the claim and is not bound to have recourse to a separate suit for that purpose. This renders obvious the impropriety of the addition of the defendants as parties to this litigation. The deeds of release affect not merely the property whereof the rent is in dispute in this suit, but other properties as well, so that if they are set aside, other transactions will be re-opened and possibly an order for restitution on equitable terms required. It would not be right and proper to investigate questions of this description in a suit instituted ostensibly for the recovery of arrears of rent alleged to be due to the plaintiff from the tenant-defendant.

There is thus no escape from the conclusion that the added defendants should not have been brought on the record under O I, r 10, sub-r. (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. That sub-rule provides that the Court may, at any stage of the proceeding, either upon or without the application of either party, and on such terms as may appear, to the Court to be just, order that the name of any person, who ought to have been joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit, be added. This provision confers a discretion upon the Court, and that discretion must be exercised in view of the special circumstances of the particular litigation; subject, however, to the general rule that parties cannot be added so as to alter the nature of the suit. Oh Ling Tee v. Awkinfee (14) and Hingu Lal v. Baldeo Ram (15). It is further plain that a person may be added as a party to a suit, only in two cases, first, when he ought to have been joined and has not been so joined, or, secondly, when without his presence the question in the suit cannot be completely decided. McCheane v. Gyles (16) and Moser v. Marsden (17). In this connection reference may be made to the decisions in Kishen Parshad v. Har Narayan Singh (18), Gurunaya v. Dattatraya (19) and Sabdurall v. Sadasive Supde (20) which illustrate the distinction between a proper party and a necessary party. In the case before us, the added defendants were neither proper parties nor necessary parties. The plaint as framed did not disclose a cause of action against them. There was no allegation that they had prior to the suit set up a claim to realise rent from the tenant-defendant, much less that they had actually intercepted the rent payable by him. We are accordingly of opinion that these defendants should not have been added as parties to the suit: the consequence of their presence has in fact been to convert a simple suit for rent into a complicated title-suit, involving numerous questions of law and fact, such as—Was the original transfer a mortgage or a sale, was a reconveyance necessary to re-vest title in the original owner, could a release operate as a reconveyance, could a Muhammadan mother act as de facto guardian and validly alienate the estate of her children and could a release by her be set aside except on equitable terms?

The result is that this appeal is a low- and the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside. The added defendants will be discharged from the suit and their names will be removed from the record. The case will be remanded to the Court of first instance to be tried as a suit for rent between the original plaintiff and the original defendant. In order to determine whether the plaintiff is entitled to the entire rent or only a share thereof the Court will investigate incidentally the extent of the title of the plaintiff in the land, and how far he has been in actual enjoyment of his right in the immediately preceding years. We are constrained to remand the case to the Court of first instance, because, after the added defendants were brought on the record, the original defendant ceased to take an interest in the controversy; it was to him immaterial whether the rent in arrear was decreed in favour of the plaintiff alone or in favour of the plaintiff jointly with the added defendants. Now that the added defendants have been removed from the record, the original defendant must be allowed an opportunity to contest the claim of the plaintiff. Each party will bear his own costs in all the Courts up to this stage.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 14th of September, 1922.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. St. C. Thompson, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the Additional Judge of Gorakhpur modifying a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of that District. The facts of the case are that one Achhaibar died leaving a widow Musammat Gulzari and two daughters Musammat Lanji and Musammat Batka. Musammat Gulzari succeeded to her husband's estate which consisted of shares in two villages Katarua and Baldiha. She executed a deed of gift in respect of the Katarua property in favour of her two daughters in equal shares and their names were entered accordingly in the revenue papers.

The share in Mauza Baldiha had been mortgaged by Achhaibar. After the death of their mother the two daughters redeemed this mortgage, paying equal shares of the mortgage-money. On the 15th August, 1918, Musammāt Lanji died, and after some litigation in the Revenue Courts the name of her daughter-in-law, Musammāt Sitman, was recorded as proprietor of half the property in both the villages. The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by Musammāt Batka against Musammāt Sitman for recovery of possession of one-half the property in both Katarua and Baldiha and for meane profits.

The plaintiff's case was that on the death of her sister Musammāt Lanji she was the only surviving heir of her father Achhaibar. The defence so far as Mauza Katarua was concerned was that the plaintiff had consented to the deed of gift executed by their mother under which each daughter had obtained a half share in the property, and was now debarred, from bringing a suit with regard to it. The Baldiha property had been redeemed by the two daughters jointly, mutation had been effected in the names of their sons against their respective shares and the plaintiff was not entitled now to disturb this family arrangement. The First Court held that the plaintiff's consent implied by her taking the share of the property conveyed to her under the deed of gift did not amount to such a ratification of the transfer as would debar her from suing as soon as the succession opened. He, therefore, found that as the plaintiff had failed to prove that the share of the mortgage-money for Baldiha had been paid out of the profits by Musammāt Lanji the plaintiff was bound to re-pay it to her and on doing this was entitled to a decree.

On appeal, the learned Additional District Judge held on the authority of Mahabir Prasad Singh v. Mata Prasad (1) that the plaintiff had consented to execution of the deed of gift and was estopped from subsequently challenging it. The finding of the First Court with regard to the property in Mauza Baldiha was not disputed in that appeal.

(1) 63 Ind. Cas 721, 19 A. L. J. 709, 3 U. P. L. R. A. 131, 44 A. 44, (1922) A. I. R. (A.) 397.

The present appeal relates only to the Katarua property though there is a cross-objection with regard to Mauza Baldiha. It is contended that the deed of gift executed by Musammāt Gulzari could only have the effect of accelerating the vesting of the estate in her daughters and could confer no absolute title on them. Musammāt Gulzari had only a life-interest in the property and could give no better title than she herself possessed. It is conceded that if the plaintiff had taken part in the execution of the deed she might have been debarred from challenging it, but the mere fact that she took under it the share which would have come to her in any case when her mother died, does not preclude her from asserting her right to the whole property now.

The deed of gift purports to convey the property in Mauza Katarua which had belonged to the donor's husband Achhaibar to her daughters in equal shares "as heirs according to the Shastras". It is admitted that they at once entered into possession and obtained mutation. The question is whether this conduct is tantamount to such a consent as would operate to estop the plaintiff from claiming the whole property on her sister's death. The ruling quoted by the learned Judge and a later Full Bench decision of this Court in Fateh Singh v. Rukmini Dewanjī Maharaj (2) have both affirmed the principle that a reversioner in whose favour the succession has opened cannot be permitted to challenge the validity of a transfer by a limited Hindu owner when before her death he has elected to hold the transfer good. It seems to me that in the present case the plaintiff by her conduct in taking her half share of the property and obtaining mutation in respect of it clearly indicated her approval of the entire deed of gift and cannot now be allowed to treat it as a nullity.

One argument addressed to this Court was to the effect that the defendant-respondent, Musammāt Sitman, has no locus standi in the case as she is not an heir.

of her mother-in-law. This argument proceeded on the assumption that *Musamm*at Sitman's husband had predeceased his mother *Musamm*at Lanji. No definite allegation to this effect was made in the plaint, while in the written statement there is a clear assertion that *Musamm*at Sitman's husband became the owner of the property by right of inheritance on his mother's death. No issue was framed on the point, and it does not appear to have been raised in either of the Courts below. This plea cannot be taken now.

No plea as to the property in Mauza Baldiha was taken in the memorandum of appeal to the Court below and it does not appear from the judgment of that Court that the Subordinate Judge's finding on the point was disputed before him. In these circumstances the respondent is not entitled to contest this finding in second appeal. The result is that the appeal and cross-objection are both dismissed with costs including in this Court, costs on the higher scale.

ORIGINAL CIVIL APPLICATION.

July 7, 1924

Present.—Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose

In re JATINDRA MOHAN SEN GUPTA—PETITIONER.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 45, provisos (a) to (e).—Writ of mandamus—High Court, discretion of.—Writ, whether can be granted ex debito justitiae.—Application for writ, contents of.—Remedy, whether summary.—Property in proviso (a), meaning of.—“Franchise”, what includes.—Legislative Councils, procedure of.—President, powers of.—Writ, whether can be issued to President to exercise his powers in particular way.—Judiciary, whether can interfere with Legislature.—English practice.—Justice, denial of.—Question of law or fact.

The jurisdiction of the High Court to make orders under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act is entirely discretionary and in dealing with an application under Chapter VIII of the Act, the principles applicable to a writ of mandamus should be followed [p. 378, col. 1].

Board of Examiners v Probst Chandra Roy, 18 Ind. Cas. 527, 40 O. 588, 17 O. L. J. 351, 17 C. W. N. 1225 and Mamindra Chandra Nandi v Provas Chandra Mitter, 79 Ind. Cas. 1042, 51 O. 279 at p. 202, 30 C. L. J. 58, relied on.

The writ of mandamus is a high prerogative writ and is granted to amplify justice and to preserve a right where there is no specific legal remedy. Therefore, it cannot be demanded ex debito justitiae but, issues only in the discretion of the Court [p. 378, col. 2].

Reg v Garland, (1870) 5 Q. B. 269 at p. 272, 39 L. J. Q. B. 86, 22 L. T. 160, 18 W. R. 429 and Reg v. All Saints, Wigan, Churchwardens, (1876) 1 A. C. 611 at p. 620, 35 L. T. 331, 25 W. R. 128, referred to.

In the case of a writ of mandamus, the rights to be enforced must be of a public nature affecting the public at large and also those which although of a public nature specially affect the rights of individuals, and the person applying must show that he has a real and special interest in the subject-matter and a specific legal right to enforce [ibid].

Reg v Lewisham Union, (1897) 1 Q. B. 498, 66 L. J. Q. B. 403, 76 L. T. 324, 45 W. R. 346, 61 J. P. 151, referred to.

There must be a sufficient demand to perform, the act sought to be enforced and a refusal to perform it. It is not necessary that the word “refuse” or some equivalent of it, should be used but there should be enough to show that the party withholds compliance and distinctly determines not to do what is required of him. There must also be a possibility of effective enforcement of the writ which will not issue if alternative remedies or remedy are or is open to the applicant. [p. 379, col. 1].

An applicant for a writ of mandamus must fulfil all the conditions laid down in provisos (a) to (e) of section 45 of the Specific Relief Act. These conditions are cumulative and all of them must be fulfilled [ibid].

The Court in such cases is invested with very large powers and the remedy is of a summary nature and coercive in its character and it is elementary that the wider the power, the greater must be the caution with which the power is exercised [ibid].

Where, therefore, a member of the Bengal Legislative Council applied to the High Court for the issue of a writ of mandamus against the President of the Council ordering him to decide and to disallow a motion about the estimates to be presented to the Council for a supplementary or additional grant on account of the salaries of Ministers, when such grants had been on a previous occasion disallowed by the Council and the petitioner as a member of the Council had exercised his motion in favour of disallowing the motion, and further prayed that his property, franchise and personal right as a member of the said Council and otherwise, would be injured if the President was not directed to decide on the lines indicated above.

Idid, (1) that as the applicant paid revenue from which Ministers drew their salaries along with thousand others, a denial of his prayer, did not cause such injury to his property, as was contemplated by proviso (a) to section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, [p. 379, col. 2].

(2) that the word “franchise” in the proviso did not include the right to vote in the Legislative Council though in its electoral sense it denoted

both the right of voting at elections and the qualifications upon which that right was based; [p 379, col 2, p 380, col 1]

(3) that if the applicant's notions of what was legal or illegal under the Rules and Standing Orders, were hurt, that did not mean that his 'personal rights' had been injured [p 380, col 2].

Whether there has been a denial of justice or not, is a mixed question of law and fact [ibid].

Application under section 45, Specific Relief Act, for issue of writ of mandamus against the President, Bengal Legislative Council, to decide and to disallow a motion regarding Minister's salaries, to be introduced in the Council.

Messrs. N. N. Sircar and S. C. Bose, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. S. R. Das (Advocate-General), and B. L. Mitter, (Standing Counsel), for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) for an order directing the Hon'ble Mr H. E. A. Cotton, the President of the Bengal Legislative Council, to decide on the admissibility of a certain motion, being item No. 6 in the list of business to be brought forward at the Session of the Bengal Legislative Council, which commences to-day at 3 P.M., and to disallow the said motion and to forbear putting the same at the said Session of the Bengal Legislative Council, and for such further or other order as to this Court may seem fit and proper, and for an order that the said Mr. Cotton and the other respondents do pay the costs of and incidental to this application. The other respondents are the Hon'ble Mr. A. K. Fazlul Huq and the Hon'ble Mr. A. K. Ghuznavi, being the Ministers in charge of the Departments of Education and Agriculture of the Government of Bengal. The Hon'ble Mr. Donald, who is member of the Executive Council of His Excellency the Governor of Bengal in charge of the Finance Department, was served with notice of this application under Rule 5 of Chapter XXIX of the Rules of this Court (Hatch's Rules, page 356), as it appeared from the list of business circulated to the members of the Bengal Legislative Council that it was he who is to move a supplementary demand for a grant of Rs. 1,71,000 for expenditure under the head-11 General Administration (Transferred) on account of the salaries of the Ministers.

This application was brought on before me on Thursday last, when, in view of the urgency of the matter, I directed that it should be renewed before me on Friday morning on notice to the respondents and to the said Mr. Donald. This was done and I heard at length on Friday the learned Counsel for the applicant and the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the respondents. The arguments were not concluded till after 4 P.M. on Friday and I then stated that I would deliver judgment at the earliest possible moment, namely, at 11 o'clock this morning.

The facts which have given rise to the present application are as follows:—At the last Session of the Bengal Legislative Council on the 18th day of March 1924, a statement of the estimated annual expenditure and revenue of the Presidency of Bengal for the year 1924-25, commonly called the "Budget," was presented and in connection therewith a separate demand for grant on account of the salaries of the Ministers was made under section 72-D sub-clause 2 of the Government of India Act. The said demand was for a sum of Rs. 2,20,000 under the head "22 (e) General Administration—Ministers (Transferred)." At the said last session of the Bengal Legislative Council, to wit, on March 24th, 1924, the said demand for grant on account of the salaries of the Ministers was, on the motion of Maulvi Mohamed Nurul Huq Chowdhuri, a member of the said Bengal Legislative Council, rejected by the said Council, as appears from the official report of the proceedings of the said Council held on March 24th. Although the said demand for grant on account of the salaries of the Ministers was rejected by the said Council, the Ministers have continued to remain in office, and are in office now. On or about June 30th, 1924, the applicant received a printed list of business to be brought forward at the Session of the Bengal Legislative Council which commences to-day, signed by Mr. J. Bartley

JATINDRA MOHAN SEN GUPTA, In re.

Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal and Secretary to the Bengal Legislative Council. The said printed list included an item, being item No. 6, which ran as follows.

"Supplementary Demands for grants.

—22—General Administration (Transferred). The Hon'ble Mr. J. Donald to move that a sum of Rs. 1,71,000 be granted for expenditure under the head 22—General Administration (Transferred)—on account of the salaries of the Ministers."

The applicant states that no estimate can be presented to the Bengal Legislative Council at the forthcoming session for a supplementary or additional grant on account of the salaries of the Minister under Rule 94 of the Bengal Legislative Council Rules and Standing Orders (See page 266 of the Bengal Legislative Council Manual, 1924) The said Rule runs as follows:—

"(1) An estimate shall be presented to the Council for a supplementary or additional grant when (i) the amount voted in the Budget of a grant is found to be insufficient for the purposes of the current year; or (ii) a need arises during the current year for expenditure for which the vote of the Council is necessary upon some new service not contemplated in the Budget for that year. (2) Supplementary or additional estimates shall be dealt with in the same way by the Council as if they were demands for grants."

The applicant further states that he has been since November, 1923, and is, a member of the Bengal Legislative Council; that he is the owner of immoveable properties in the District of Chittagong for which he pays Government revenue, and that he has also been assessed for payment of income-tax on the income derived from the exercise of his profession as an Advocate of this Court. He states also that he wrote, addressed and sent a letter to Mr. Cotton on July 2nd, 1924, drawing his attention to the facts hereinbefore recited and contending that no estimate could be presented to the Bengal Legislative Council for a supplementary or additional grant on account of the salaries of the Ministers in the events which had happened. The applicant went on to add the following:—"As President of the Council it is incumbent on you to decide on the admissibility of a motion and you have authority to disallow a motion even though such a motion appears in the list of business. I contend that there can be no doubt whatsoever that the motion of the Hon'ble Mr. J. Donald, which is item No. 6 in the said printed list of business, does not comply with the Bengal Legislative Council Rules and Standing Orders and should, therefore, be disallowed. I, therefore, call upon you to decide on the admissibility of the said motion of the Hon'ble Mr. J. Donald and to delete item No. 6 from the said printed list of business and to forbear from putting that motion before the Session of the Council commencing on Monday July 7th, 1924. Unless I hear from you in reply by 11 o'clock to-morrow, I shall assume that you refuse to decide the question of the admissibility of the said motion, or to disallow the said motion or to delete it from the said printed list of business, and I shall take such steps as I may be advised." The applicant states that the said letter was delivered at the office of Mr. Cotton and that he also telegraphed to Mr. Cotton, who was then at Darjeeling, the substance of the said letter.

The applicant goes on to add that notwithstanding the demand made on Mr. Cotton, the latter has declined to decide on the admissibility of the said motion or to disallow the same or to move at all in the matter and has denied to him the justice, which he alleges he was and is entitled to. Lastly, he states that his property franchise and personal right as a member of the said Council and otherwise would be injured, unless Mr. Cotton is directed to decide on the lines indicated above, that he has no other specific or adequate legal remedy in the matter, and that the remedy he prays for will be complete.

Mr. Sircar, who appeared in support of the application, made it clear to me at a very early stage of his vigorous address that his contention was that item No. 6 on the said agenda paper was hit by rule 94 of the said Rules and Standing Orders and that, therefore, Mr. Cotton had no power of jurisdiction to include the said item in the said agenda and that in the events which had happened the applicant was entitled to ask the Court to direct Mr. Cotton to forbear from putting the said item No. 6 before the Bengal Legislative Council for its consideration or, in other words, to ask the Court to direct Mr. Cotton to delete the said item from the said agenda. Mr. Sircar stated that although his first prayer was for an order directing Mr. Cotton to decide on the admissibility of the said motion, being item No. 6 in the said agenda, his principal prayer was that Mr. Cotton should be directed to delete the said item as being an item which was hit by rule 94.

As regards the right of the applicant to an order under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, Mr. Sircar pointed out that his client paid Government revenue, which was an essential part of the fund out of which the Ministers were to be paid their salaries, and that the money which was taken from his client could only be used for legitimate purposes as provided for by law. In the second place, Mr. Sircar contended that having regard to the fact that at the last Session of the Bengal Legislative Council his client had exercised his right to vote and had voted against the grant of salaries to the Ministers, he would be injured so far as his said right, which according to him was "franchise," was concerned. In the third place the applicant's contention was that he, as a member of the Council, had a right to see that the business of the Council was conducted according to the provisions of law.

In answer to these contentions, the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the respondents, submitted the following points for my consideration:

(a) That no Court has ever granted a writ of Mandamus in the form asked for by the applicant, and that the applicant was not entitled to any order directing Mr. Cotton to decide the question of the admissibility of the said motion in a particular manner. (b) That Parliament in passing the Government of India Act and in constituting Legislative Council thereunder, had kept in view the English constitutional principle, namely, that the Legislature was supreme and that neither the judiciary, nor the executive should interfere in any way, with the conduct of business in the Legislative Councils. (c) That it has not been shown that the demand for justice made by the applicant has been refused by Mr. Cotton. (d) That the applicant has not shown that he has some interest in the matter other than such as may belong to the community at large in the question now being debated, it being clear that the "personal right" injury which the Courts aim at preventing or remedying, is a right personal to the individual seeking the remedy and not merely such a right in rem, as every member of a society has independently of any act of his own. (e) That rule 94 of the Rules and Standing Orders was not exhaustive, and that having regard to rules 21, 38 and 39 of the said Rules and Standing Orders, taken along with the provisions of section 72-D of the Government of India Act, Mr. Cotton had sufficient authority to include the said item No. 6 in the agenda paper.

Before I proceed further I desire to observe that after the conclusion of the arguments in this matter on Friday evening, it was brought to my notice that there had been filed on the date a suit in this Court against the present respondents by certain persons named Kumar Shanker Roy Chaudhuri and Kiran Sanker Roy Chaudhuri on behalf of themselves and all other persons paying revenue or taxes allocated under the Government of India Act to the Government of Bengal as sources of provincial revenue, praying for a declaration that the motion contained in item No. 6 in the said agenda paper is incompetent and illegal and ultra vires, and that it cannot in any way affect the rights of the said plaintiffs and of the other persons for whom they are suing; and further praying for a declaration that the two Ministers are not must be a sufficient demand to perform the act sought to be enforced and a refusal to perform it. It is not indeed necessary that the word 'refuse' or any equivalent to it should be used, but that there should be enough to show that the party withholds compliance and distinctly determines not to do what is required of him. There must also be the possibility of effective enforcement of the writ and the writ will not issue if alternative remedies or remedy are and is open to the applicant.

These being the principles applicable to a writ of mandamus, let us turn to section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, which in India embodies these principles. Five conditions are laid down in the section, being provisos (a) to (e), which the applicant invoking the jurisdiction must satisfy. These conditions are cumulative and all of them must be fulfilled. The Court is invested with very large powers, and the remedy is of a summary nature and coercive in its character. And it is elementary that the wider the power, the greater must be the caution with which the power is exercised.

In view of the importance of the questions raised on this application, I have very anxiously considered the facts to which my attention has been drawn in order to determine if and how far the applicant has succeeded in bringing his case within the purview of section 45 of the Specific Relief Act. In doing this I am relieved of the necessity of considering the questions raised in proviso (c), (d), and (e), because no argument was raised in respect thereof. Provisos (a) and (b) prescribe the ambit of controversy in this case. Proviso (a) requires that the applicant must be some person whose property, 'franchise' or 'personal right' would be injured by the forbearing or doing (as the case may be) of this specific act to be done or forborne. Proviso (b) lays down that the applicant must also show that such doing or forbearing is, under any law for the time being in force, clearly incumbent on the respondents.

Has the applicant here shown that his "property" or "franchise" or "personal right" would be injured? As to injury to property, it has been stated before me that the applicant pays Government revenue in respect of his immoveable properties in the District of Chittagong, and that the money so paid by him being part of the fund out of which the salaries of Ministers are met, his "property" would be injured, if in pursuance of Mr. Donald's motion, the supplementary demand for grant is acceded to by the Bengal Legislative Council. I am clearly of opinion that what has been shown by the applicant in this connection is insufficient to make him a competent relator. The applicant pays Government revenue, it is true, but he pays it along with thousands of other people, a fact of which I am entitled to take judicial notice. This by itself cannot, in my opinion, constitute such "injury" to the applicant's "property" as the proviso contemplates.

Next, let us see whether his "franchise" would be injured. "What is the franchise" which the applicant claims? He contends that having regard to the fact that he was one of those, who at the last Session of the Bengal Legislative Council had succeeded by their votes in turning down the demand for grant for Ministers' salaries, the effect of the said vote of the Council in which the applicant had participated would be entirely nullified, if Mr. Cotton is not directed to delete the said item No. 6, or to forbear from putting the same before the Council. I am not at all sure that the word 'franchise' includes the right to vote in the Legislative Council. The right to vote at the election for Parliament or for the Indian Legislative Assembly, or for the various Provincial Legislative Councils is certainly a franchise, but I know of no instance where the word has been held to include the power to vote on matters coming before a Legislative body. The term 'franchise' is defined by Blackstone, following older authorities as a royal privilege or a Branch of the King's prerogative in the hands of the subject. It is also said to be synonymous with the term 'liberty' though the latter is usually applied to the class of franchises conferring immunity of jurisdiction. Franchises are of various kinds and an excellent account of their origin will be found in Pollock and Maitland's History of English Law. The term 'franchise' in its electoral sense denotes both the right of voting at elections and the qualifications upon which that right is based.

But assume I am wrong in the construction, I am putting on the word 'franchise.' But has there been any 'injury' to the applicant's 'franchise' such as it is? The 'injury to franchise' must be some act interfering with the exercise of the applicant's franchise, namely, his right to vote. How can I say that there will be interference with the applicant's franchise, or right to vote, by Mr. Cotton putting before the Legislative Council for its consideration the motion of Mr. Donald? I am entitled to assume that the proceedings of the Council will be conducted in accordance with the traditions of the Houses of Parliament and that there will be no interference with the rights and privileges of the members of the Council. No question of any injury to the 'franchise' or right exercised in the past can be gone into by me on this application, nor is it possible for me to foreshadow what may happen in the future, nor am I satisfied that even in the event of Mr. Donald's present motion being accepted by the Bengal Legislative Council, there will accrue of a certainty, injury to the applicant's franchise in the manner suggested by him.

Let us next see if there will be any injury to the applicant's personal right? What is personal right? He says that it is his undoubted right to see that the business of the Bengal Legislative Council is conducted in accordance with the provisions of the law. This right the applicant enjoys along with 139 other members of the Legislative Council, the present strength of the Council being 140. Can I say that the applicant has shown to my satisfaction any special circumstances within the meaning of the rule laid down in the case of In the matter of A. Rasul (6). The answer to my mind is in the negative.

(6) 24 Ind. Cas. 404, 41 C. 518, 18 C. W. N. 430.

It seems to me clear, therefore, that there is no injury threatened to the present applicant. The applicant seeks for a direction of Mr. Cotton to disallow or delete from the agenda item No. 6 or to forbear from putting the same before the Council. Suppose Mr. Cotton is not so directed. What follows? How would the applicant be heard? Except that it will hurt the applicant's notions of what is legal or illegal under the Rules and Standing Orders, except that it will offend against his view that the motion in question is ultra vires. I cannot see what injury will be caused to the applicant's property, franchise and personal right within the meaning of the section.

The conclusion, therefore, I come to on an examination of the applicant's contentions under the head 'proviso (a), is that the applicant has failed to satisfy the requirements of the Statute.

There is another ground upon which the application must fail. The applicant has, no doubt, made his demand of justice but I am not satisfied that there has been any denial thereof. I have already said that it is not necessary that the word 'refuse' or any equivalent to it should have been used, and I accept the applicant's contention that refusal may be inferred from conduct. The facts and the dates I have set out negative, to my mind, the argument that Mr. Cotton has been guilty of conduct which shows that he has distinctly determined not to do what has been required of him. Whether there has been a denial of justice or not, is a mixed question of law and fact, and taking into consideration the entire facts and circumstances of the case, and being not unmindful of the grounds of urgency urged on behalf of the applicant, I hold that there has been no denial of justice on the part of Mr. Cotton.

In view of what I have said above, I must reserve for the present any discussion of the merits of the applicant's case as bearing on proviso (b) of section 45, or of the intensely interesting questions of constitutional law and procedure suggested by learned Counsel on both sides. At a proper time and on a proper occasion I shall not fail to express my opinion thereon.

The result, therefore, is that this application fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Rangoon Rent Act (Bur. Act II of 1920), ss 2 (c), 10 (1) and (5)—Daily tenant—Verbal agreement—Transferee for value—Tenant, whether 'landlord'—Ejection of sub-tenant—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss 105, 106, 107.

A daily tenant under a verbal agreement holds a lease of the premises within the meaning of sections 105, 106 and 107 of the Transfer of Property Act and all leases for whatever term are transfers for value provided the rent is payable. [p 332, col 1]

A lease is a limited transfer of the premises yet it is a transfer thereof and if the rent is payable the lessee is a transferee for value within the meaning of section 10 (5) of Rangoon Rent Act, and is entitled to the benefit of proviso to section 10 (1) of the Act. [ibid.]

Where premises are occupied for the purposes of a person's business they are occupied by the person himself even though they are in the actual occupation of his workmen. [p 332, col 2]

First appeal from a decree of the High Court on the Original Side in Civil Regular No. 528 of 1922.

Mr. Sen, for the Appellant

Mr. Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit to eject a tenant and its decision turns mainly on the construction of certain provisions of the Rangoon Rent Act (Burma Act II of 1920) as amended by Burma Act I of 1922.

The plaintiff is tenant of eight rooms in Fraser Street, Rangoon, under a verbal agreement and on a daily rent. He has been the tenant for 16 years or more and for the last six years or more the defendant has been his sub-tenant of one of the rooms, also on a daily rent and under a verbal agreement.

The relevant provisions of the Rent Act are:—

1. Section 2 (c), the definition of "landlord" for the purposes of the Act generally. This definition specifically includes "a tenant who sub-lets any premises" and it is admitted that the plaintiff is a "landlord" within this definition.

2. Section 10 (1), which restricts the right of a landlord to eject his tenant but in the proviso allows him to do so "where the premises are reasonably and bona fide required by the landlord for occupation by himself."

3. Section 10 (5), which reads as follows:—"For the purposes of this section, notwithstanding anything contained in clause (c) of section 2, the term 'landlord' shall not include any person who has become landlord otherwise than by a bona fide transfer thereof for value or by the devolution of the premises upon him under a testamentary disposition or intestacy, or a settlement made before the first day of April 1918."

The plaintiff is a tailor employing a number of men and he claimed that owing to expansion of his business he had to employ additional men and that he required the room occupied by the defendant as a work-room for these additional men. The learned Judge on the Original Side found that the plaintiff had established this claim and that he did "reasonably and bona fide require the premises for occupation by himself." But he held that the agreement under which the plaintiff held the premises was not a bona fide transfer of the premises to him for value and the plaintiff was, therefore, not entitled to the benefit of the proviso to section 10 (1). Accordingly dismissed the suit.

The learned Judge held apparently, that a lease is a transfer of the premises but said that in this case there was no lease and found himself unable to hold "that a right of occupying a room for 24 hours on payment of a rent of Rs. 7 a day can be construed as a bona fide transfer of the premises for value."

SIVADAS MUKERJEE v. SURENDRA NATH CHATTERJEE.

It may be noted that the bona fides of the transaction is not in question.

I am of opinion that the decision was wrong. Having regard to the terms of sections 105, 106 and 107 of the Transfer of Property Act, I think it must be held that the plaintiff has a lease of the premises. And if any lease, say a lease for a term of years, is a transfer of the premises for value, I think that all leases, for whatever term, are equally transfers for value, provided, of course, that rent is payable, as in this case it is.

Mr. Das, for the respondent, does not really contest this proposition. He argues that a lease is not a transfer of the premises, but merely a transfer of a right to enjoy them. He contends that the word "thereof" in section 10 (5) must mean "of the premises" and, though as it stands the word is grammatically meaningless. I agree with him that it cannot possibly mean anything else. But I hold that though a lease is a limited transfer of the premises yet it is a transfer thereof and that a lessee is a transferee for value within the meaning of section 10 (5) and is, therefore, entitled to the benefit of the proviso to section 10 (1).

Mr. Das supports the decision on other grounds also. He contends, first, that the plaintiff has not proved that he reasonably and bona fide requires the room for the purposes of his business. He lays much stress on the fact that the plaintiff did not produce his books, which according to the evidence would have proved his employment of additional men. No doubt these books might have strengthened the plaintiff's case, or might, on the other hand, have broken it down. But the plaintiff was not called upon to produce them and I do not think we can draw any inference adverse to them. Without them there is on the record evidence sufficient, if believed, to prove the contention. The learned Judge who heard the witnesses has believed them and I see no sufficient ground for differing from his finding.

Mr. Das further contends that if the plaintiff does require the room for the occupation of his journeymen that is not "occupation by himself" within the meaning of the proviso to section 10 (1). To allow this contention would, I think, be to place too restricted a meaning on the words. A person occupying residential premises also occupies the kitchen and servants' quarters attached thereto though he in person may never enter them. Occupation of the dwelling house necessarily involves occupation of the necessary offices. The Act applies equally to business premises and where premises are occupied for the purposes of a person's business they are occupied by that person himself even though he may himself only occasionally enter any particular part of them.

I would, therefore, set aside the judgment and decree of the Court below and give judgment for the plaintiff as claimed with costs in both Courts.

The respondent is allowed time until the 15th April, 1924, to vacate the premises.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application made under sections 151 and 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure for amendment of the judgment of this Court in Appeal from Original Decree, No. 23 of 1920.

Section 151 presumes the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court. Section 152 authorises the Court to correct clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgments, decrees or orders or errors arising therein from any accidental slip or omission. This may be done by the Court either of its own motion or on the application of any of the parties. Section 153 provides that the Court may, at any time, and on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it may think fit, amend any defect or error in any proceeding in a suit and all necessary amendments shall be made for the purpose of determining the real question or issue raised by or depending on such proceeding. We have no doubt that in the events which have happened it is open to us to give necessary directions under one or other of these provisions of the Code.

The history of this litigation is set out in our judgment which has been reported; Surendra Nath Chatterjee v. Sivadas Mookerjee (1). We were called upon to consider in the appeal the question whether the Will executed by Rai

(1) 69 Ind. Cas. 887, 35 C. L. J. 468, (1022) A. I. R. (C.) 182.

Bahadur Krishna Mohan Mookerjee on the 24th June, 1916, and a codicil had been revoked and cancelled. The Trial Court came to the conclusion the Will as also the codicil had been revoked. On appeal we held that the Will had been revoked but that the codicil was in full operation. Our views were summarised in the following passage of our judgment: "Our conclusion is that the second Will executed on the 24th June, 1916, was revoked by the testator on the 14th April, 1918, by the execution of the deed of gift and also by tearing; but that the codicil was not revoked either in law or in fact." After this statement of our conclusion we proceeded to add as follows. "the result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the District Judge set aside. We direct that Probate be issued to the appellant in respect of the codicil dated the 24th June 1916." Our attention has now been drawn to the fact that as the Will was revoked, the provision for the appointment of executors disappeared. Consequently, no Probate could be granted in respect of the codicil which did not embody a provision for the appointment of executors. This escaped the notice of the Court and our judgment must accordingly be amended. We direct that the judgment be amended by the substitution of the words "Letters of Administration" for word 'Probate.'

We have been pressed to hold, however, that if Letters of Administration are issued instead of a Probate, the Letters of Administration should be issued in favour of the petitioner Sivadas Mukherjee alone, who is one of the sons of the testator. We have anxiously considered whether we should accede to this prayer and we have with some reluctance come to the conclusion that we should not grant the application. The testator left two sons, Kedarnath Mukherjee, and Sivdas Mukherjee, as also a grandson by a daughter named Surendra Nath Chatterjee. By his Will, he had appointed all these persons as executors; and if we had not held that the Will had been revoked, the Probate would have issued, in the normal course of events, to these three persons as executors. Probate, however, cannot be granted in the events which have happened, and the Court is called upon to consider who should be appointed administrator. The rule for the appointment of an administrator is formulated in section 41 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, which is in the following terms: "When a person has died intestate, or, leaving a Will of which there is no executor willing and competent to act, or, where the executor is, at the time of the death of such person, resident out of the Province, and it appears to the Court to be necessary or convenient to appoint some person to administer the estate or any part thereof other than the person who, under ordinary circumstances, would be entitled to a grant of administration, the Judge may, in his discretion, having regard to consanguinity, amount of interest, the safety of the estate and probability that it will be properly administered, appoint such person as he thinks fit to be administrator." It will be observed that one of the elements to be taken into consideration is consanguinity, judged by this test, a claim by either of the sons of the testator is entitled to preference over that of the grandson by daughter. There are, however, other elements which must be taken into consideration, such as safety of the estate and the probability that it will be properly administered. The principle which underlies this statutory provision was formulated by Sir John Nicholl in the case of Earl of Warwick v Greville (2): "The selection rests with the discretion of the Court; that discretion, however, is not to be arbitrarily or capriciously assumed, but to be a legal discretion governed by principle and sanctioned by practice, in exercising it, the Court is not to be guided by the wishes or feelings of parties, but is to look to the benefit of the estate and to that of all the persons interested in the distribution of the property. The first duty of the Court then is to place it in the hands of that person who is likely best to convert it to the advantage of those who have claims, either in paying the creditors, or in making distribution; the primary object is the interest of the property." Now, in the case before us, there is no room for doubt that Sivadas Mukherjee is in involved circumstances and that his creditors have already taken proceedings against him for the realisation of their dues. Kedar-nath Mukherjee has expressed no desire to act as an administrator and the Court would be reluctant to force administration upon an unwilling person. In these circumstances, Surendra Nath Chatterjee, the grandson, is obviously the person who should be entrusted with the administration of the estate. He has expressed his readiness to furnish security to the satisfaction of the Court in accordance with section 78 of the Probate and Administration Act which provides that "every person to whom any grant of Letters of Administration is committed, and, if the Judge so direct, any person to whom Probate is granted, shall give a bond to the Judge of the District Court, to enure for the benefit of the Judge for the time being, with one or more surety or sureties, engaging for the due collection, getting in and administering the estate of the deceased, which bond shall be in such form as the Judge from time to time by any general or special order directs."

We direct accordingly that Letters of Administration with copy of the codicil annexed be issued to Surendra Nath Chatterjee and that he do furnish security to the extent of Rs. 2,000 (two thousand) with two sureties for Rs. 1,000 each. His first duty will be to distribute the assets amongst the legatees in terms of the codicil of the 24th June, 1916, and to provide for the performance of Devashaba in accordance with the first clause thereof. Our attention has been drawn to a scheme of Devashaba which was prepared by the testator on the 24th June, 1916. This was not incorporated in the codicil and consequently we cannot include it in the grant. But, for the sake of convenience, the scheme as framed by the testator, may, for the present, be adopted as the scheme for the management of the Devasheba subject, however, to this reservation that if the scheme in any respect contravenes the provisions of the codicil, the scheme must to that extent be modified.

The result is that our original judgment is amended by the substitution of the words 'Letters of Administration' for 'Probate' and Surendra Nath Chatterjee is appointed administrator on the terms and conditions mentioned. The decree based on the judgment will be amended accordingly. Each party will pay his own costs of these proceedings. The administrator will be entitled to take his costs out of the estate. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur. Let the Probate already issued be amended by the District Judge so that it may be read as Letters of Administration instead of Probate. The administrator will act under the direction of the District Judge.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 4th December, 1922.

Mr. S. D. Sinha, for the Appellants.

Dr. K. N. Kaiju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to a mango tree standing on the border or near the boundary of an occupancy plot No. 492 khassra occupied by the defendants. The plaintiff is the zamindar of the village. The tree recently died up and fell down. The plaintiff thereupon sought to appropriate the fallen wood. The defendants interfered. The plaintiff accordingly filed the present suit for an injunction to restrain the defendants from interfering with the appropriation by the plaintiff of the fallen wood of the said tree, or if the wood has meanwhile been removed, for the recovery of Rs 18 on account of the value of the same. The Courts below decreed the claim, holding that according to the general custom the zamindar was entitled to the wood of the said tree. A copy of the wajib-ul-arz of the village was produced, which describes the rights of grove-holders but says nothing in particular about the rights either of the zamindar or of the tenant to the fallen wood or dried timber of the stray trees standing on the occupancy holding. As pointed out in Harbans Lal v. Maharaja of Benares (1) the trees on a holding partake of the nature of the holding and in the absence of a contract or custom to the contrary a tenant has the same rights in respect of them as he has in the holding. The plaintiff does not allege that the tree in question had been planted by him. The defendants asserted that they had planted it, but they failed to prove their allegation. The tree in question must, therefore, be deemed to have been a self-sown tree growing on the occupancy holding; and a tenant is as much entitled to the fruits or to the fallen wood of such a tree as he is to the produce of the land. In Nathan v. Kamla Kuar (2) it was held that a zamindar claiming a right to the fallen wood of self-sown trees, which had been growing on an occupancy holding, must prove some custom or contract, by which he is entitled to take such wood. The plaintiff in this case has failed to establish that he has any such right. This appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiff is dismissed with costs here and hitherto.

The scheme and policy of the land laws of Bengal is to originally divide persons having interest in agricultural land into two classes, viz., those in actual occupation or cultivating tenants and those entitled to rent from such tenants. There may be several degrees of rent-receivers, but there is one class of cultivating tenants who are called *raiya*s [p 388, col 1]

In theory the raiya is supposed to be in actual occupation of the land and actually cultivating it. By virtue of this character, the raiya is permitted to acquire a right of occupancy, or the right to remain in occupation of the land [ibid]

Though he is allowed to sub-let in the eye of law, the raiya is the actual occupant of the land, occupying it through his lessee, as by sub-letting he does not become a middleman. [p 388, col 2]

The Bengal Tenancy Act, however, has been less favourable to an under-raiya and has taken away his right of acquiring a right of occupancy under any condition except by local usage or custom. He is no better than a tenant-at-will with no tangible interest in the land except that of holding it till the end of the agricultural year [ibid]

Babus Amarendra Nath Bose and Nanda Gopal Bannerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession of a raiya holding, and for a declaration that the plaintiff's right thereto was not affected by the decree in Rent Suit No. 418 of 1915, or the sale thereof under that decree. The appellant purchased the raiya in execution of the said rent-decree for the sum of Rs. 540.

The plaintiff rested his claim to the land on a two-fold basis. He claimed it as the nishkar land of one Tincowrie Mukerji which he had purchased at a road-cess execution sale, and also alternatively by virtue of private purchase from one Tushtu Das, who held a korfa tenancy of the disputed lands under the defendants, Mustaphis. The Trial Court found that the plaintiff had failed to establish either claim, and dismissed the suit with costs to the contesting defendant. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge of Hughly confirmed the finding of the Munsif so far as it related to the lakheraj title, but allowed the appeal so far as the plaintiff's right by purchase from Tushtu Das was concerned, and the suit was remanded to the Court of first instance for a finding whether the notice contemplated by section 158B (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act had been served on the co-sharers.

Against that order of remand there was an appeal to this Court with the result that by consent of the parties the decree of the lower Appellate Court, so far as it related to the effect of the de-defendant's rent-decree and directed that the suit be remanded to the Trial Court to be decided in accordance with the directions therein contained, was set aside. As regards the lakheraj title claimed by the plaintiff the judgment was directed to be treated as final so far as the lower Appellate Court was concerned, and in lieu of the decree and of the portion of the judgment set aside an order was made under r. 25 of O. XLI of the Code of Civil Procedure directing the Trial Court to determine the question whether notices under section 158B (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act were duly served by the respondent on the co-sharer landlords. A direction was made that the Trial Court would be at liberty to take such additional evidence as the parties might wish to adduce on the point and it was ordered that the appeal would remain on the file of the lower Appellate Court which on receipt of the finding of the Court of first instance would dispose of the appeal in the usual way and make a decree embodying the decision already arrived at as regards the lakheraj title claimed by the plaintiff, and the decision which might be ultimately arrived at as regards the effect of the rent-decree. Opinion was expressly reserved upon any questions of law arising between the parties.

In accordance with these directions the case went back to the Trial Court and the learned Munsif recorded a finding that there was no evidence or materials before him to show that any notice under section 158B (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act was served and he accordingly answered the question referred to him in the negative. The appeal then came again before the Subordinate Judge and in the result was partly decreed with proportionate costs the judgment and decree of the Trial Court being confirmed so far as the lakheraj title claimed by the plaintiff was concerned, and the appeal to that extent being dismissed with proportionate costs, but the plaintiff's right as purchaser of Tushtu's under-raiyati right to the extent of a 13-annas 4-pies share of the disputed land was declared, and he was given a decree for recovery of possession of that share jointly with the defendant No. 3 (now appellant), the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance being to that extent set aside. The defendant No. 3 then filed this appeal.

A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondent to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that the defendant No. 3 having obtained all that he could expect to get and not being in any way aggrieved by the decree, the appeal is incompetent. We do not think there is any substance in this contention. The effect of the decree is that the plaintiff will get possession of a 13-annas 4-pies share of the disputed land jointly with the defendant No. 3. Apart from the question raised by the appellant that his share has been wrongly calculated we are of opinion that when a person is compelled to hold land jointly with another who he alleges is not his co-sharer, he can hardly be held to be not aggrieved by the decree. The appellant moreover is forced by the decree to accept the plaintiff as his under-tenant against his will. We hold accordingly that the appeal is competent.

Coming to the merits of the case, the main question involved is, whether the plaintiff as purchaser of the under-raiyati from Tushtu, who held it under the defendants who are occupancy raiyats, can maintain this suit. In other words, is the interest of an under-raiyat transferable in law? The learned Subordinate Judge has observed that "no tangible and satisfactory evidence was given or offered to show that Tushtu's interest was transferable." He has, however, referred to several cases and held that there is no authority for the view that the interest of an under-raiyat is not transferable. He is of opinion apparently that there is no difference as regards transferability between an occupancy right and the right of an under-raiyat. In support of this view he has relied upon section 183, Bengal Tenancy Act, which enacts that an under-raiyat may by custom or usage acquire right of occupancy. He has, therefore, come to the conclusion that the interest of an under-raiyyat is transferable with the consent of the landlord and that consequently none but the landlord can question the validity of the transfer. On the facts of this case he has held that the defendants as purchasers of the under-raiyyati in execution of their decree for rent against Tushtu which, according to him, passed the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, cannot question the transferability of the under-raiyyat or the plaintiff's title by private purchase from Tushtu, but as landlords they are entitled to do so. As one of the defendants, viz., defendant No. 3, the appellant has appeared and contested the suit, he has dismissed it as against him and decreed it as against the other defendants who have not appeared. The learned Vakil for the plaintiff-respondent has adopted the same line of argument and urged that the right of an under-raiyyat is transferable with the consent of the raiyyat.

The scheme and policy of the land laws of Bengal is to originally divide persons having interest in agricultural land into two classes, viz., those in actual occupation or cultivating tenants and those entitled to rent from such tenants. There may be several degrees of rent-receivers, but there is one class of cultivating tenants who are called raiyyats. In theory the raiyyat is supposed to be in actual occupation of the land and actually cultivating it. By virtue of this character, the raiyyat is permitted to acquire a right of occupancy, or the right to remain in occupation of the land. It was found that in every case it was not possible for the raiyyat to cultivate the land himself and he was allowed to cultivate it by hired labourers or by under-tenants: Baboo Dhunpat Singh v. Baboo Goman Singh (1). "He must hold land under cultivation either by himself or others who must take from him under his supervision as a superior cultivator": Ram Mungul Ghose v. Lukhee

Narain Shaha (2) and Karoo Lal Thakoor v. Luchmeeputy Doogur (3). Though he is allowed to sub-let in the eye of law, the raiyyat is the actual occupant of the land, occupying it through his lessee, as by sub-letting he does not become a middleman. Kalee Churn Singh v. Amceerooddin (4). The under-raiyyat accordingly did not stand on a much higher footing than hired labourers and the raiyyat is supposed to be cultivating the land through his under-raiyyat. Such was the status of the under-raiyyat though under the old law he could acquire a right of occupancy in lands sub-let to him otherwise than for a term or from year to year (section 6, Act X of 1859), but ordinarily he could not do so as his sub-lease was generally for a term or from year to year: Domunoolah Sircar v. Mahmoodie Nushyo (5). The Bengal Tenancy Act, however, has been less favourable to an under-raiyyat and has taken away his right of acquiring a right of occupancy under any condition except by local usage or custom. He is no better than a tenant-at-will with no tangible interest in the land except that of holding it till the end of the agricultural year. When it was held under the old law, which was more partial to the under-raiyyat, that his interest is not saleable, there is less reason to suppose that it is so under the Bengal Tenancy Act. There is ample authority for the view that the right of an under-raiyyat is not transferable: Akhil Chandra Biswas v. Husain Ali (6), Amirunnessa v. Jinnat Ali (7) and Bishambhar Mandal v. Nasarat Ali (8). See also Yakub Ali v. Mea Jan (9) and Gopal Mondal v. Tapai Sankhari (10). It is now settled law that the interest of an under-raiyat is not heritable: Arip Mondal v. Ram Ratan Mandal (11), Jamini Sundari v. Rajendra Nath (12) and Meher Ali v. Kalai Khalasi (13). It may not be wrong to say that one of the ordinary incidents of a transferable interest is its heritability. It has again been held that an under-raiyat cannot maintain a suit for possession based upon title but can recover possession on the strength of his previous possession. Banka Behary v. Raj Chandra Pal (14) and Gour Mandal v. Balaram Manji (15). It is not necessary for us to consider how far these decisions can be supported, as according to the view consistently held by this Court, mere previous possession, unless perfected into adverse possession, cannot form the foundation of a suit for recovery of possession. But these cases show that the right of an under-raiyat is so unsubstantial that it gives him no title to recover possession even from a trespasser.

For the view that the right of an under-raiyat is transferable with the consent of the superior holder, the raiyat, reliance has been placed on the case of Bonomali v. Koylash (16). The head-note of the case is not quite consistent with the decision for one of the learned Judges, Jackson, J., in the course of his judgment observed: "I would only add that I never heard before that the question as to the possibility of selling a korfa tenant's right could be raised, and it appears to me to be contrary to the nature of things that such a thing could happen." It is worthy of note that this was the view held of the law before the Bengal Tenancy Act. Garth, O. J., confined his decision to the facts of that case, which was a suit against the raiyat. That decision, moreover, does not support the respondent's contention that an under-raiyati is transferable with the consent of the raiyat. According to the head-note, it lays down the contrary proposition that it is not transferable without the consent of the raiyat. If it is not transferable without the consent of the raiyat, it does not necessarily or logically follow that it is transferable with his consent. The reason is that the transfer of an interest, which is not transferable in law, may be binding on various legal grounds on a person having the right to challenge the validity of the transfer. It is attempted in this connection to establish an analogy between an occupancy right and the interest of an under-raiyat. As has been observed in Amrunnessa v. Jinnat Ali (7), every right is not transferable and as remarked in Akhil Chandra Biswas v. Husqin Ali (6), an under-raiyati is not ipso facto transferable. In the Special Bench case of Chandra Benode v. Alla Bux (17), it was held on a reference to several sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the law recognised the transferability of an occupancy right though subject to certain qualifications. In the case of an under-raiyati, the Bengal Tenancy Act is not only silent regarding its transferability, but affords sufficient indications to the contrary. It is contended that as an under-raiyat may by custom acquire a right of occupancy, he should be placed, so far as the present question is concerned, on the same footing, as an occupancy raiyat. We are unable to discover how this provision will help to place an under-raiyat, who has not acquired a right of occupancy by custom on the same level with an occupancy raiyat. Besides, if it is loosely said that the interest of an under-raiyat is transferable with the consent of his landlord, it may not necessarily indicate the transferability of such an interest. It may signify that the landlord is willing to accept the transferee as his tenant in lieu of the old tenant, practically a case of fresh settlement.

But conceding the correctness of this proposition of law which has found favour with the learned lower Court and has been strenuously maintained by the learned Vakil for the respondent, it is difficult to see how it can be applied to the facts of this case. The plaintiff purchased the under-*raiya*ti in 1911, while the defendants purchased it at an auction-sale in 1916. It is not the plaintiff's case, nor is there any evidence or finding that the defendants consented to the sale to the plaintiff. But it is argued that the conduct of some of the defendants in not appearing in the suit and contesting the plaintiff's claim is tantamount to consent. We fail to appreciate the logic of this argument. Even if express consent were given by some of the defendants long after the plaintiff's purchase, it could not be said that the sale to the plaintiff was with the landlord's consent; at most it might amount to recognition of the plaintiff by the non-contesting defendants. But this theory too cannot be sustained on the facts of this case. The rent-suit was brought to which all the defendants including the absent defendants were parties against Tushtu, thus negating any suggestion that they ever consented to the transfer by Tushtu to the plaintiff, or that they ever recognised the plaintiff as their tenant or the transfer to him. Moreover, it is the plaintiff's case that he was dispossessed by defendants Nos. 1 and 3.

Lastly, it is attempted to invoke the principle of estoppel. It is said that, as the defendants themselves purchased the under-*raiya*ti in execution of their decree, they are estopped from denying the transferability of the under-*raiya*ti. The law of estoppel is contained in section 115 of the Evidence Act. It is not the plaintiff's case that he was misled by any act or word of the defendants in purchasing the under-*raiya*ti. Subsequent conduct or word cannot operate as estoppel: Asmat-un-nessa v. Harendra Lal (18). But it is submitted that the question of transferability of the under-*raiya*ti does not arise in this case between the plaintiff who is a purchaser from the under-*raiya*ti and the defendants who are purchasers of the same under-*raiya*ti in execution of a decree. In support of this contention reliance has been placed on the case of Ayenkdin v. Sirish Chandra (19). That case has no bearing on the present question as it related to an occupancy right transferable with the consent of the landlord. It was discussed and distinguished in Asmat-un-nessa v. Harendra Lal (18). The authority of Lala Deosaran v. Bateswar Mondal (20) has been rightly questioned by the learned Subordinate Judge in view of the decision in Kanchan Mandar v. Kamala Prosad Chowdhury (21). We agree with the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge that the defendant in the capacity of landlord is entitled to question the validity of the sale of the under-*raiya*ti to the plaintiff. In this view of the matter the learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the plaintiff's suit to the extent of the share of the defendant No. 3. The logical result of his findings is that the under-*raiya*ti in this case is not transferable, and that the defendant No. 3 as a landlord is entitled to question the plaintiff's right as purchaser from Tushtu. We think that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in these findings and there being no cross-appeal by the plaintiff they must be taken to be correct. The only point on which we differ from the Court below is its view that an under-*raiya*ti is transferable with the consent of the superior holder, and that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 not having contested the suit the plaintiff is entitled (it is not stated upon what specific ground) to a decree to the extent of the interest of those defendants in the holding. The present suit is for declaration of title and recovery of possession. In our opinion the plaintiff has failed to prove his title and is therefore not entitled to any relief. In view of the opinion we have formed on the question of plaintiff's title, it is not necessary to consider the other points urged by the appellant.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate

Madras Local Boards Act (V of 1884), s. 73—
Licensee to tap trees under Inamdar v/ "tenant"— Liability to pay land-cess

A licensee under the holder of an inam in a zemindari for a period of years of the right to tap trees in this inam lands is not a "tenant" within the meaning of section 73 of the Madras Local Boards Act so as to render him liable to his licensor for the land-cess payable by the latter under the Act.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Vizagapatam, in Small Cause Suit No. 242 of 1922.

Mr. B. Satyanarayana, for the Petitioner

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this case is whether a licensee under the holder of a Dharimalla inam, in a zemindari, for a period of ten years with a right to tap date trees is a tenant within the meaning of section 73 of the Madras Act V of 1884, so as to be liable to his licensor for the land-cess payable by the latter under the Act. The plaintiff is an intermediate landholder and had under decree Exhibit B to pay Rs. 131-2-6 to his landlord as land-cess for Faslis 1324 to 1326 plus costs of suit and he seeks to recover half of that sum from the licensees the defendants.

The word "tenant" in the Act is defined to include all persons who occupy lands under a landholder. This definition is not illuminating, and considerations of the meaning of the word as used in other enactments do not afford much assistance either. It has no doubt been held e. g., that the ryotwari holder of a tree patta is an occupier of land within the meaning of section 6 of the Madras Forest Act (see Reference under section 39 of the Madras Forest Act (1). It would be unsafe to infer from that that a licensee of the right to tap date trees in a zemindari inam is a tenant within the meaning of the definition in Act V of 1884.

I think the question has to be looked at from a different point of view. The tax which plaintiff has to pay to the zemindar is a "tax on the annual rent value of land." It is calculated under section 64 (3) of the Act "on the annual rent payable to the land-holder by his tenants", and the landholder is bound to furnish the Collector under section 65, with a statement of the annual rent value of the lands occupied by his tenants or by himself. The word "rent" is not defined in the Act, and it is not clear whether or not it is intended to mean only the rent payable by an estate tenant as defined in the Madras Estates Land Act. I think it may be taken that the Local Boards Act does not contemplate any radical difference between the method of calculation of the rent value on ryotwari land and of the rent value of land held under any other tenure. Now on the case of ryotwari lands it is clear that the rent value is based on the assessment payable to Government for the land. Every one knows what that is, and I do not think it could be seriously argued that, if a ryotwari holder leased out date trees on his holding for tapping, the amount of that lease could be taken into account for the purpose of calculating the rent value of the land under section 64 (1) of the Act. A ryotwari holder is bound so long as he holds the land and therefore so long as he holds the right to lease out the trees upon it to pay the assessment on the land. It is that and not the lease amount on which the tax will have to be calculated.

I do not see why any different principle should be applied to lands in an estate. The lease of trees on these lands does not abolish the rent payable on the lands to the land-holder and it is not suggested in this case that the land rent has been abolished. It is asserted that the lands are uncultivable, but only because of a tradition that people who cultivate them do not prosper. The assessed land rate then still remains to provide the basis on which the tax leviable under this Act shall be calculated and the tax can be calculated legally on nothing else. If, as a matter of fact, the tax has been calculated on any other basis then the landholder himself will have to take action to have the mistake rectified.

It follows then that the amount payable under a license for tapping date trees on land which is already subject to land rent is not a proper basis for calculation of the rent value of the land, and is not "rent" as used in section 64 of the Act. Even if a licensee be, in a manner of speaking, the tenant of the licensor, the latter cannot recover from the tenant anything not taken legally from him by the Collector and, as set out above, the Collector cannot to my mind, legally collect from the landholder as tax under section 64 of the Act any tax based on the amount of the license.

I, therefore, agree with the District Munsif that the suit must fail and dismiss the revision petition with costs.

In a suit for possession the fact that there was a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, that there was an inquiry into the matter and that there was a decision adverse to the allegations of the plaintiff, is a relevant fact and is admissible in evidence on general principles as well as under section 13 of the Evidence Act [p 394, col 1.]

In order to establish title by adverse possession in favour of one co-sharer against another, it must be established by unambiguous evidence that there was a complete ouster to the knowledge of the co-sharer. That is to say, the possession of one co-sharer can be said to be adverse against another only if there is an open denial of title and limitation can run, if at all, only from that date [p 394, col 2.]

FACTS appear from the following judgment of Walmsley, J.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiffs. It arises out of a suit which they brought to establish their exclusive right to a tank and, if necessary, for recovery of possession. The tank admittedly belonged to three brothers and the plaintiffs say that, by descent, by purchase and by partition between the defendants Nos 7 to 17, they acquired 8/9th of the entire interest and also that they acquired a right to the remaining 1/9th by adverse possession against the heirs of Samed Ali who was one of the three sons of one of the original three owners. The learned Munsif decreed the suit finding that, among the defendants, only defendant No. 17 had any interest left and he gave the plaintiffs joint possession with the defendant No. 17 leaving the extent of the said defend ant's share undetermined. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they had acquired title to Samed Ali's share by adverse possession. The defendants Nos. 1 to 6 are the sons of Faiz Ali who bought Samed Ali's share from his grandson. The Judge says that it was the duty of the plaintiffs to prove "an open and notorious ouster and clear adverse possession for more than 12 years" and that he does not find any such evidence on the plaintiffs' side in the record. Rest is a finding of fact and unless it was arrived at by an improper method of reasoning, it is conclusive.

The learned Counsel for the appellants contends that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in referring to the order passed in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. To understand the case, it is necessary to mention that in 1890 the plaintiffs excavated the tank whereupon Samed Ali's sons, the predecessors of the present defendants, brought a suit to recover possession. This suit they did not prosecute. In 1898, there was Record of Rights prepared and neither the name of Samed nor the names of his sons appeared in the record. Then, in 1917, the present defendants' father made his purchases from Samed Ali's grandson and early in 1917 there were proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate after hearing the evidence, said that the second party, that is to say, the present defendants had given better evidence by their possession and his conclusion was that both parties are entitled to joint possession. But judgment is clearly admissible for the purpose of showing that there were proceedings, that the present parties were parties to those proceedings and that a particular result ensued upon those proceedings and I think that that is the manner in which the learned Judge has used the judgment, and, looking at the facts which he has mentioned, I cannot say that he has committed any error in arriving at the conclusion at which he did arrive.

that the plaintiffs had failed to prove twelve years' adverse possession extinguishing the defendants' interest. At the last moment, to save something from the wreckage, the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs asked that, instead of the suit being dismissed altogether, a declaration should be made of the plaintiffs' title. To this, there are two objections. The first is that the plaintiffs did not ask for such a suitable declaration and it does not appear that any injury were to be done to them by refusing to give it and the record is that there is the undetermined share of the defendant No. 17. I think it will be objectionable to pass a decree in the plaintiffs' favour declaring that they have a title to 8/9th of the tank jointly with another man, the defendant No. 17 whose interest is an uncertain quantity. The result is that, in my opinion, the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Mookerjee, J.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Walmsley in a suit for confirmation or recovery of possession of a tank on establishment of exclusive title thereto.

The plaintiffs set up a three-fold title, namely, title by inheritance, title by purchase and title by adverse possession. The Court of first instance held that title was established not in respect of the entire tank but with regard to a share in it; and unable to determine the precise extent of that share, the Court gave the plaintiffs a joint decree along with the seventeenth defendant. On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed this decision and dismissed the suit. That decree has been affirmed by Mr. Justice Walmsley.

The appeal raises three points for consideration, namely, first, whether reliance should have been placed upon the proceedings in a case under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code; secondly, whether the alleged title by adverse possession had been established, and thirdly, whether the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaration of title to an unascertained share.

As regards the first point, it appears that the appellants were the first party in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in 1916. Their case then, as now, was that they were entitled to the exclusive possession of the tank and that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace as the second party (predecessors-in-interest of the defendants) claimed wrongful possession jointly with them. Upon investigation, the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were not in exclusive but in joint possession, and that there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace. On these grounds proceedings were discontinued on the 22nd March, 1917. It is plain that the fact, that there was a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, that there was an inquiry into the matter and that there was a decision adverse to the allegations of the plaintiffs, is a relevant fact, and the Subordinate Judge has properly treated this as evidence. The view of the Subordinate Judge is supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Dinomoni Chowdhurani v. Brojomohini Chowdhurani (1). In that case Lord Lindley pointed out that orders for possession under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code relating to disputes regarding immoveable properties are Police orders made to prevent breaches of the peace and decide no question of title; but such orders are admissible in evidence on general principles as well as under section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act to show the fact that such orders were made. Consequently, the first point must be decided against the appellants.

As regards the second point, the Subordinate Judge held that the alleged title by adverse possession had not been established. The parties are co-owners and in order to establish title by adverse possession in favour of one co-owner against another, it must be established by unambiguous evidence that there was a complete ouster to the knowledge of the co-sharer. This is settled beyond controversy by recent decisions of the Judicial Committee which affirm the principle that the possession of one co-sharer can be said to be adverse against another, only if there is an open denial of title, and limitation can run, if at all, only from that date; see the observations of Lord Macnaghten, in Corea v. Appuhami (2), of Lord Dunedin in Muttunayagam v. Brito (3), of Lord Buckmaster in Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (4), of Viscount Cave in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (5), and of Lord Atkinson in Arab Ali Khan v. Mahmud Ali Khan (6), see also Balaram Guria v. Syama Charan Mondal (7), Jaynarain Sen Ukil v. Suchitra Debya (8), Jaganath Marwari v. Chandni Bibi (9), and Kailas Chandra Nag v. Bijoy Chandra Nag (10). The Subordinate Judge has accurately analysed the evidence to show that it does not support the theory of exclusive possession and complete ouster.

As regards the third point, Mr. Justice Walmsley has correctly held that the plaintiffs cannot claim a decree for declarations of title. The specific title alleged by them has not been established. On the other hand, the difficulty remains that the extent of their share

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff, the defendant and one Subba Konar were sureties for one Muthukrishna

Naidu in respect of two promissory-notes for Rs. 500 each. Subsequently the defendant obtained a hypothecation bond from the principal debtor. Muthukrishna Naidu, for Rs. 3,500. Part of the consideration was an undertaking by the defendant to discharge the promissory-notes for which he and the plaintiff were jointly sureties. Subsequently a suit was filed on these promissory-notes, and decree was obtained and in execution, Rs. 615 was realised from the plaintiff. Meanwhile the defendant obtained a decree on his hypothecation bond and has purchased most of the properties belonging to the mortgagor. The plaintiff's suit is to recover the money which he had to pay on account of the suretyship. The District Munsif decreed the suit on the ground that the defendant having undertaken by the hypothecation bond B-I to discharge the promissory-notes was bound to contribute the money to the plaintiff. The District Judge on appeal has dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that it was based on unfounded representations and arrangements and was misconceived. On the finding that the defendant has received from the principal debtor a counter-security for the liability, which he undertook jointly with the plaintiff, he is liable to bring in for the benefit of the plaintiff and his co-sureties, whatever he has received from that source. This principle is laid down in Steel v. Dixon (1) and it is not suggested that the above facts would not be applicable in this case. In neither of the lower Courts does this particular aspect of the case seem to have been considered although apparently there were the necessary materials for it. It is now argued for the respondent that certain other facts might have been elicited if the parties had known exactly the case they had to meet. In view of the fact that the plaintiff is not very clearly drafted, and does not in terms contain the plea which is taken here, I think it is only fair to the defendant to give him an opportunity of

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss 105, 105A, 106, 107, 108, 109 and 109A—Fair annual rent settled by Revenue Officer—Decision of Revenue Officer, force of—Decree of Civil Court—Decision of Revenue Officer not challenged by way of revision or appeal—Finality of decision—Question decided by Revenue Officer, whether can be re-opened

Where in a proceeding under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, for assessment of fair rent, the tenant contends that he holds the land rent free, and the Revenue Officer assesses an annual rent, by compromise or otherwise, the decision of the Revenue Officer, by virtue of provisions of section 107 (1) of the Act, has the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties, and if it is not challenged by way of a revision or appeal, under sections 108 and 109A of the Act, it operates as a final decree as deciding between the parties, (a) that the tenant holds the land subject to the payment of rent, (ii) that the fair annual rent is that fixed by the Revenue Officer [p. 398, col. 1]

So long as the decision of a Revenue Officer, in proceedings under section 105A, Bengal Tenancy Act, remains in force, effect must be given to it under section 107 of the Act [ibid]

It is not open to defendants to raise by way of defence, under section 109, the very question which was decided by the Revenue Officer under section 105 of the Act. That section does not whittle away the effect of section 107 of the Act, and applies only to cases where no decision has been pronounced by the Revenue Officer concerned. [p. 398, col. 2]

FACTS appear from the following judgment of

Walmsley, J.—This appeal arises out of a rent suit. It is preferred by the defendants. The Record of Rights was prepared in 1912 in which the defendants' holding was shown as liable to settlement of rent and, in another column, there was an entry that it was niskar. The landlord thereupon made an application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of fair rent. The defendants urged that their holding was rent-free. The decision went against them. When the present suit was instituted, the defendants again raised the contention that their tenancy was rent-free. Both the Courts below have held that they are liable to pay rent and have passed a decree for Rs 3-9 as per annum—the sum obtained in the proceedings under section 105. Two points are raised on behalf of the appellants. The first is that the landlord's application under section 105 was made more than two months after the final publication of the Record of Rights and it is said that the order passed in it was in consequence a nullity. The second point is that, in any case, the Courts below have taken a wrong view as to the effect of the order under section 105 in a subsequent suit for rent.

So far as the first point is concerned, the Courts below say that there is no evidence before them to prove that more than two months elapsed before the landlord made his application. The only evidence produced was a certified copy of an order-sheet and that shewed that the first order was passed on the 10th June nearly six months after the final publication. The view apparently taken by the Courts was that the application might have been filed months before any order was recorded in the order-sheet. Whether that view is correct or not, I do not think I should say in second appeal that the Courts below are wrong, in saying that the defendants have failed to prove that the application filed by the landlord was filed out of time. Consequently, I need not go into a discussion of the question whether the order made by the Settlement Officer was, in consequence, a nullity. I would only point out that the defendants not merely contested the case but they introduced in it questions referred to in section 105 of the Tenancy Act.

The next point urged on behalf of the defendants has, in my opinion, much more substance. Both the Courts below refer to the decision in the proceedings under section 105 as binding against the defendants. They do not say so, but it is obvious that they were thinking of the provisions of section 109. In this they are wrong. On several occasions it has been held that section 109 does not preclude a defendant in his defence from raising questions which might not have been raised by the plaintiff in a suit. I do not think it necessary to quote any decision on this point.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed, the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the case remanded to that Court for a re-hearing in order that the Judge may consider whether the evidence proves that the defendants are liable to pay rent and at what rate of rent, if they are liable. In coming to his conclusion, the learned Judge will bear in mind that the judgment in the proceedings under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not conclusive on the matter.

I am asked to direct that the parties should be allowed an opportunity of adducing further evidence. It is a matter on which I express no opinion. It will be for the learned Judge of the Court of Appeal below to decide whether they should be so allowed or not.

Costs will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.

Mookerjee, J.—This is an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Walmsley in a suit for arrears of rent.

The plaintiff-appellant instituted this suit against the defendants-respondents for recovery of arrears of rent due in respect of a tenancy held at Rs. 3-9 per annum. The defendants contended that they were not liable as the tenure was rent-free. This contention was overruled and the suit was decreed by the primary Court. On appeal, the decision was affirmed by the Subordinate Judge. The judgment of the two Courts went against the defendants on the ground that they were bound by a decree in a proceeding under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, and that they had failed to establish what they had asserted, namely, that the decree was made without jurisdiction. On appeal to this Court the defendants urged that they were not precluded by the provisions of section 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, from proving that they held the land rent free. This contention was accepted by Mr. Justice Walmsley and he remanded the case for enquiry whether the evidence proves that the defendants are liable to pay rent, and if so, at what rate. We are of opinion that this order cannot be supported.

It appears that the Record of Rights in this case was finally published on the 16th December, 1912. This record contained an entry to the effect that the defendants held the land without payment of rent, but that the land was liable to be assessed with rent. The landlord thereupon instituted a proceeding under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, for assessment of fair rent. The tenants contended that they held the land rent free. Consequently the question contemplated by section 105A clause (a) arose, namely, whether the land was or was not liable to payment of rent. It thereupon became incumbent upon the Revenue Officer to try and decide that issue and to settle rent under section 105 if he should hold that the land was liable to payment of rent. It is not clear what took place before the Settlement Officer. But this much becomes obvious on an examination of the Record of Rights that on the 15th November, 1913 rent was assessed at the rate of Rs. 3-9 per annum. It has been stated that this order was made by consent of parties; but that is immaterial for our present purpose, because under clause (6) of section 105, where the parties agree amongst themselves, by compromise or otherwise, as to the amount of the fair rent, it is incumbent upon the Revenue Officer to satisfy himself that the amount agreed upon is fair and equitable, and it is only if he is so satisfied that he can record the amount agreed upon as the fair and equitable rent. If he is not so satisfied, he has to settle a fair and equitable rent as provided in sub-sections (4) and (5).

The real question is, what is the effect of such a decision by the Revenue Officer. The answer is furnished by section 107. Sub-section (1) of that section provides that in all proceedings under section 105, section 105A and section 106, the Revenue Officer shall, subject to rules made by the Local Government, adopt the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of suits; and his decision in every such proceeding shall have the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties and, subject to the provisions of sections 108 and 109A, shall be final. Sub-section (2) next provides that a note of all rents settled under section 105 and of all decisions of issues or disputes under section 105A or section 106 shall be made in the Record of Rights finally published under sub-section (2) of section 103A and such note shall be considered as part of the record. This was done in the present case. Section 108 provides for revision of the order of the Revenue Officer and section 109A provides for a first appeal to the Special Judge and a second appeal to the High Court. In the case before us, there is nothing to indicate that the decision of the Revenue Officer was challenged by way of either a first appeal or a second appeal. The decision of the Revenue Officer consequently operated as a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties; and it has the force and effect of a final decree which decides two vital elements of the relationship between the parties; first, that the defendants hold the land subject to the payment of rent; and secondly, that the fair rent payable is Rs. 3-9 annas annually.

But section 109 has been invoked in order to show that it is open to the defendants to raise by way of defence the very question which was decided by the Revenue Officer under section 105. In our opinion section 109 has no application to a case of this description. That section provides that, subject to the provisions for an appeal, a Civil Court shall not entertain any application or suit concerning any matter which is or has already been the subject of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under sections 105 to 108 both inclusive. This does not whittle away the effect of section 107 and applies to cases where no decision has been pronounced by the Revenue Officer concerned. The decision in Rajendra Narain Mazumdar Choudhary v. Sheikh Kalim (1) does not affect the present question and was pronounced under entirely different circumstances; there the objection was sought to be raised by way of defence in a suit instituted before the publication of the Record of Rights. Nor is the matter affected by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Gokul Mandar v. Padmanand Singh (2). It is not necessary for us now to consider whether it is or is not possible for the defendants to get rid of the decision of the Revenue Officer which operates as a final decree. This much is incontrovertible that under section 107, so long as that decree remains in force, effect must be given to it, and if effect is given to it, there is no escape from the conclusion that the claim for rent must be decreed on that basis.

The result is that this appeal is allowed the decree of Mr. Justice Walmsley set Mortgage (English)—Redemption—Post diem interest—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts 147 and 132—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss 58 (d), 76 (h)—Accounts

In a suit for redemption of an English mortgage, in which a definite term is fixed for repayment of the principal and interest, the plaintiffs are bound to pay post diem interest up to the date of redemption, after taking credit for sums which the mortgagee got from the mortgaged property during the period he was in possession, unless the terms of the document show that the intention of the parties was that no interest should be paid subsequent to the date when the mortgage-money became due [p 401, col. 2.]

(Case-law discussed)

The granting of the power of sale in a mortgage is only a remedy which is usually given and the mortgagee is not bound to exercise the power any more than he is bound to sue on the expiry of the due date under the penalty of his losing subsequent interest [p 404, col 1.]

The period of limitation applicable to a suit for redemption or recovery of possession of immoveable property under mortgage is 60 years under Art 148 of the Limitation Act and liability to pay post diem interest is not, therefore, confined to twelve years only under Art 132. [p. 400, col 2.]

The Transfer of Property Act only codifies the general principles of equity and section 76 (a) applies as to the manner in which accounts are to be taken in regard to an English mortgage, executed before and sought to be redeemed after the Act. [p. 404, col 2.]

Mr. I. V. Ramanuja Rao, for the Plaintiffs.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued to redeem the property mentioned in the plaint, which was mortgaged on the 17th of July, 1874, to secure the sum of Rs 8,450 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum. The mortgagee was in possession of the property. A decree was passed on the 2nd of March, 1922, declaring that the plaintiffs are entitled to redeem the mortgage and directing accounts to be taken of the amount due to the defendants for principal and interest, of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property, of the sums paid for rates, taxes and other public charges, of the sums paid by the defendants for the due management of the property, and the sums paid for necessary repairs. The matter was referred to the Official Referee who has submitted a report. Objections have been taken by the plaintiffs but the defendants have filed no objection. The objections pressed before me are that, as there was no provision for payment of interest after July, 1879, the Official Referee was wrong in giving post diem interest at the bond rate and the defendants are only entitled to interest by way of damages at 6 per cent. for six years, and that instead of applying the income received by the mortgagee first in reduction of public charges, repairs and then of the interest payable, the Official Referee has taken an account of each year adding up the total charges and the interest, etc., deducting from the amount so arrived at, the income for the year leaving a balance against the mortgagors and has allowed upon that balance 12 per cent per annum. This is in effect giving compound interest.

The first objection relates to post diem interest and this turns upon the terms of the mortgage. The deed of mortgage recites that the mortgagors grant and convey the property specified in the mortgage to the mortgagee, "to have and to hold the said premises unto and to the use of the mortgagee", his heirs and assigns subject to the following proviso: "provided always that if the said John William Cox, E. W. Cox, J. H. Cox, T. P. Cox and Agnes Isabella Cox, their heirs, executors, administrators, re-representatives or assigns shall pay unto the said Cankoo Iyaloo Naidu, his executors, administrators, representatives or assigns the sum of Rs 8,450 on or before the first day of July, 1879, together with interest for the same in the meantime at the rate of 12 per cent per annum without any deduction, then the said Cankoo Iyaloo Naidu, his heirs or assigns will, upon the request and the cost of the said John William Coxé their or any of their heirs, executors, administrators, representatives or assigns reconvey the hereditaments hereby granted to the use of the said John William Coxé ... their or any of their heirs and assigns or as they, or he shall direct, but if default shall be made in payment of the said sum of Rs 8,450 or the interest thereon in the manner aforesaid, or any part thereof respectively on the first day of July, 1879, it shall be lawful for the said Cankoo Iyaloo Naidu, his executors, administrators, representatives or assigns without any further consent on the part of the said John William Coxé their or any or either of their heirs or assigns to sell the hereditaments hereby granted together or in parcels and either by public auction or private contract with power upon any such sale to make any stipulations as to title or evidence of title or otherwise which the said Cankoo Iyaloo Naidu, his executors, administrators or assigns shall deem proper and also with full power to buy in or rescind any contract for sale of the said premises and to re-sell the same without being responsible for any loss occasioned thereby." The deed goes on to provide that the mortgagee, his executors, administrators, representatives or assigns "shall hold the monies to arise from such sale upon trust in the first place thereout to reimburse himself, for themselves or pay and discharge all the costs and expenses attending, incurred in or about such sale or otherwise in respect of the premises and in the next place to apply such monies in or towards satisfaction of all and singular the monies for the time being, owing on the security of these presents and to pay the surplus (if any) of the said premises unto the said John William Coxé, E. W. Coxé, J. H. Coxé, T P Coxé and Agnes Isabella Coxé, their or any or either of their executors, administrators, representatives or assigns." The deed goes on to state that the mortgagors will pay the mortgagee the sum of Rs 8,450 together with interest for the same in the meantime at the rate of 12 per cent per annum on the first day of July, 1879, without any deduction.

The deed is thus a deed of English mortgage falling within the definition of section 58 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act which runs as follows:—"Where the mortgagor binds himself to repay the mortgage money on a certain date and transfers the mortgage property absolutely to the mortgagee but subject to a proviso that he will re-transfer it to the mortgagor upon payment of the mortgage money as agreed, the transaction is called an English mortgage". In cases of English mortgage the article of Limitation Act which is applicable to suits on the mortgage is Art. 147 which runs as follows:—

"By a mortgagee for foreclosure or sale—60 years—when the money secured by the mortgage becomes due".

The period of limitation prescribed under Art. 148 which relates to suits against mortgagees to redeem or to recover possession of immoveable property mortgaged is also 60 years. Art. 132 which applies to mortgages other than English mortgages provides for a period of twelve years.

If, therefore, the mortgagee's heirs filed a suit against the mortgagor's heirs for the sale of the property, 60 years would be the period of limitation and not twelve years under Art. 132. There is, therefore, no force in the contention of the Vakīl for the plaintiffs that assuming that post diem interest can be granted and it is a charge on the property, interest cannot be given for more than twelve years as the remedies on the mortgage would become barred by that date under Art. 132.

The contention of the Vakīl for the plaintiffs is that the mortgage-money was re-payable on the first of July 1879, that in default, the remedy given to the mortgagee is to sell the property by public auction or private contract, that the preamble to the mortgage shows that there was a previous mortgage which gave the right of sale and the mortgagee was going to exercise that right, that the mortgage in question was executed inter alia to prevent the sale, that part of the consideration was the giving up of the right to bring the property to immediate sale by the mortgagee, that the power of sale is not an ordinary incident attached to every mortgage but an extra power conferred, and that where such a power is conferred it must be taken that the parties provided a remedy to be enforced at once if the mortgage money be not paid. He referred to Chajmal Das v. Brij Bhukan Lal (1), Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (2), Bundesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (3), and Badi Bibi Sahibai v. Sami Pilli (4). It is argued that there is no presumption that post diem interest is to be paid in all cases, that where from the express terms of the document it is clear that post diem interest is not payable, it cannot be granted by the Court except by way of damages for breach of contract, to pay which damages could not form a charge on the property and would be subject to the usual rule of limitation applicable to suits for damages and that it is only when the document is not clear and two views are possible, Courts can follow the rule which gives the lender interest on his money.

The contention for the defendants is that where a person promises to pay on a certain date and fails to do so, there is a presumption that the parties intended that interest which was payable till that date should continue to run till payment that where a power of sale is given a mortgagee exercising it after the date of default would be entitled to retain in his hands interest up till that date even though his remedy by way of a suit on the mortgage may be barred, that the mortgagor who seeks to redeem cannot be in a better position, that so far as limitation is concerned, post diem interest, whether given as interest or damages, should be paid until at least the right to sue on the mortgage is barred and that in the present case the mortgagee is entitled to post diem interest as allowed by the Official Referee and reference has been made to Ghantayya v. Papayya (5), Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh (6), Daudbhai Rambhai v. Daudbhai Allibhai (7), Motan Mal v. Muhammad Bakhsh (8), Dingle v. Coppen (9) and Fisher on Mortgages Chapter IV.

So far as post diem interest is concerned, though there is a conflict of authority as regards the earlier Madras cases, I think the later decisions lean in favour of granting post diem interest unless the terms of the document show that it was the intention of the parties that no interest should be paid subsequent to the date when the mortgage money falls due.

In Chajmal Das v. Brij Bhukan Lal (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council were not prepared to dissent from the view of the High Court that post diem interest was not payable in respect of the mortgage sued on and that damages could be awarded "at the rate which could prima facie be the same as that provided by the bond during the two years although there is no rule of law making the rate necessarily the measure of damages."

In Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (2) the deed of mortgage dated the 17th of January 1880 provided for payment of the principal within one year with interest at Re. 0-1-6 per mensem. The borrower agreed that he would not transfer the mortgaged property until payment of both the principal and interest and that the amount paid should be first credited to the payment of interest and the balance, after that, should go to reduce the principal. A suit was filed in 1891. The defendant contended that interest was not payable after the expiry of one year and that in any event such interest was not chargeable on the property and could not be claimed for more than six years as damages for breach of promise to pay. The Subordinate Judge awarded only one year's interest and held that the claim for interest by way of damages for breach of promise to pay would be barred within six years. The Allahabad High Court affirmed this decree. On appeal their Lordships of the Privy Council reversed the decree of the High Court and held that the mortgagee was entitled to post diem interest at the bond rate and observed: "The provision for applying payments to reduction of interest points strongly to the expectation of the parties that the transaction will not be closed when the fixed day of payment arrives. The construction of the High Court ascribes to the parties an intention that however, payment may be delayed beyond the fixed day, the debt shall carry no interest, that the creditor shall have no remedy provided by contract, but shall be driven to treat the contract as broken and to seek for damages, which lie in the discretion of a Jury or a Court, and are subject to a different law of prescription". They were of opinion that in the contract sued on the words 'the amount' in the clause "that if the mortgagor fails the mortgagee may proceed to realise the amount" obviously meant the amount of principal and interest up to the time of realisation.

In Bundesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (3) the suit was on two deeds of mortgage. The first provided for the repayment of the debt in two years with interest at Rs. 1-8 a month and the second provided that the debt should be repaid on the day when the first loan would become due and at the same rate of interest. Both the mortgages were by conditional sale. The High Court held that post diem interest was not payable under the terms of the documents; but their Lordships of the Privy Council were of opinion that the clause that in default of punctual payment at the end of each year the mortgagees were to be at liberty to treat the unpaid interest as principal and to recover it from the mortgaged property showed that the parties contemplated post diem interest as being chargeable. Both these cases proceeded on the construction of the particular document and I can find no general rule enunciated which would apply to all cases of post diem interest.

In Badri Bibi Sahibul v. Sami Pillai (4) the deed of mortgage was executed in 1875. Interest was to run at 7 percent per annum and the sum was payable on the 30th of October, 1878. It was held by Muthusami Aiyar and Best, J.J., relying on Cook v. Fowler (10), Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomer Singh (11) and Mansab Ali v. Gulab Chand (12) that since the instrument did not provide for interest post diem, any claim in the nature of a claim for such interest could be allowed by way of damages only and was not a charge on the land and that it was barred by limitation.

In Thayar Ammal v. Lakshmi Ammal (13) Best and Subramania Aiyar, J.J., held that post diem interest was only claimable as damages and that it was barred by limitation. The suit was on a mortgage dated 16th February, 1880, and it was filed in 1893. Subramania Aiyar, J., in an elaborate judgment held that where a mortgage document does not provide for post diem interest, the plaintiff can only claim it as damages for withholding the money and that such a claim would be barred under section 116 of the Limitation Act if the suit is filed more than six years after the date when the principal money became payable. The later decisions of Subramania Aiyar, J., which I shall refer to, however, show that the learned Judge changed his views on the question.

In Pedda Subbaraya Chetti v. Ganga Razulungaru (14) the suit was on a mortgage and the principal amount was payable on the 14th of July 1886. The amount secured by the mortgage was arrived at by calculating the principal and interest due on previous loans and the mortgage was expressed to be for securing the payment of that principal together with subsequent interest that may accrue annually. It also provided for compound interest. The learned Judges Shephard and Davies, after referring to the above facts observed: "These provisions are more consistent than otherwise with an intention which in itself is the most probable one when, to use the language of the Judicial Committee, regard is had to the ordinary expectations of persons entering into a mortgage transaction", and post diem interest was allowed.

In Jivanna Pandithar v. Appalu (15) the suit was on a bond executed in December 1881, which provided that interest should be paid every year and that the principal sum should be paid in December 1884. Shephard and Subramania Ayyar, JJ., were of opinion that post diem interest should be allowed on the ground that the stipulation for payment of interest annually showed that it was intended that interest should cease when the principal amount became payable.

In Ghantayya v. Papayya (5) the amount due on the mortgage was payable with interest at 12 per cent. in three annual instalments and on failure of one instalment the whole amount was to become due. There was no provision for post diem interest. It was held by Subramania Ayyar and Moore, JJ., that post diem interest was payable so long as the principal sum was improperly withheld and that it was certainly more reasonable to hold that the promise to pay interest in a document like the one they were considering was a promise to pay interest so long as the principal sum was improperly withheld and it does not raise any legal presumption in such cases but that it was only the adoption of a rule of construction. The learned Judges were of opinion that the decision of the Privy Council in Mathura Das v. Raja Narindra Bahadur (2) supported their view and were disposed to follow the view taken by Trevelyan and Banerjee, JJ., in Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh (6).

In Narasimhayya v. Srinivasayya (16) Sadasiva Aiyar and Spencer, JJ., held that post diem interest was recoverable in case of mortgages where a definite term is fixed in the bond for repayment on the general promise of the debtor to be liable for interest. The learned Judges were of opinion that they were bound by the decision of the Privy Council in Mathura Das v. Raja Narindra Bahadur (2) and Binderi Nark v. Ganga Saran Sahu (3) and by the decisions of the Madras High Court in Ghantayya v. Papayya (5) and Ramanathan Chetty v. Nur Muhammad Narakayar (17) to hold "that post diem interest is payable on the general promise by the debtor to be liable for interest though a definite term is fixed in the bond for re-payment of the principal and interest. If the liability under that general undertaking to pay interest is further extended by another undertaking (which may be called appurtenant to the principal undertaking), to pay interest upon arrears of interest and which further undertaking is found in the same document following the provision to pay interest, it is difficult to hold that the parties intended that only the principal undertaking should apply to the question of the liability for post diem interest and not the appurtenant undertaking also".

In Thailottathil Pokkar v. Ramachandra Shenoy (18) it was held by Sir John Wallis, O. C. J., and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., that post diem interest may be granted by way of damages but that compound interest is not chargeable after the date mentioned in the document.

In Daudbhai Rambhai v. Daudbhai Allibhai (7) a suit was filed in 1882 to redeem a mortgage effected in 1833. There was no period fixed for payment and the First Court decreed interest from the date of the document to the date of redemption. On appeal the District Judge held that interest could only be awarded for a period of six years. In the course of the argument it was contended, that the mortgagee could not claim interest for more than twelve years under Art. 132 of the Limitation Act. Scott and Jardine, JJ., held that interest was payable till the date of redemption.

In Motian Mal v. Mahomed Bakhsh (8) a Full Bench of that Court held that where a mortgage contains no express provision for payment of interest after the due date, there is no presumption one way or the other as to payment of post diem interest, that the determination of the question must depend entirely upon the interpretation of the document that the mortgagee is, however, entitled to damages on account of the failure to pay the debt at the stipulated time, the measure of damages prima facie being the same, as the interest agreed upon and that in cases where the mortgagee is the plaintiff he can sue to recover post diem interest only for the period prescribed by the law of limitation applicable to a suit for compensation for breach of contract but that if the mortgagee is a defendant in an action he is entitled to recover damages for the entire period during which the principal sum remained unpaid.

I am unable to find anything in the mortgage document, now in question which necessarily indicates that the parties did not intend to pay post diem interest. The granting of the power of sale is only a remedy which is usually given, and the mortgagee is not bound to exercise the power any more than he is bound to sue on the expiry of the due date under penalty of his losing subsequent interest.

I think that the plaintiffs who want to redeem the property mortgaged, are bound to pay interest post diem upto the date of redemption, credit of course being given to any sums which the defendants got from the mortgaged property during the period they were in possession.

The next question relates to the manner in which accounts are to be taken. The mortgagee being in possession, section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to the period between 1882, when the Act was passed, and the date of the decree. As regards the period prior to that, the Transfer of Property Act only codifies the general principles of equity in such cases and the same principle would apply. Clause (h) of section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act after providing for the expenses incurred by the mortgagee enacts that the receipts from the mortgaged property after deducting the expenses mentioned in clauses (c) and (d) which relate to taxes and necessary repairs, should be debited against him in reduction of the amount (if any) from time to time due to him on account of interest on the mortgage money and that any surplus should be appropriated towards the reduction of the principal. In the present case, I think accounts are to be taken in the manner prescribed by the section. There is no warrant for compound interest being allowed. The expenses should be deducted from that income of the property which is found by the Official Referee to have accrued and the balance should be appropriated first towards the interest due and if there is any surplus towards the principal.

The report of the Official Referee will be modified and a final decree will be passed in the light of my above observations. The accounts will be taken till this date. Time for redemption four months. In default of redemption the plaintiffs will be foreclosed. Costs reserved.

Jurisdiction of Court—Company—Directors preventing co-Director from acting—Suit for injunction, whether maintainable

A Civil Court can grant an injunction on the application of a Director of a Company restraining his co-Directors from wrongfully excluding him from acting as Director [p 406, col 1]

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Faridpur, dated the 28th February 1923, modifying that of the Munsif, Faridpur, dated the 30th November 1922.

Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar, for the Appellants.

Babus Asitaranjan Ghosh and Subodh Chandra Ray Chowdhry, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by four persons as plaintiffs against defendants Nos. 1 to 5, who are stated to be acting as Directors of the Company which was joined as defendant No. 6 on the ground that one of the plaintiffs had been prevented from acting as Director. The facts shortly stated are that at a meeting of the shareholders of the Company which was held on the 32nd Ashar 1329, the plaintiff No. 2 and defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 were elected Directors. The meeting was subsequently adjourned and the adjourned meeting was held on the 7th Shaban following. On that date on account of certain proceedings which we need not state in detail the election of the Directors held on the previous date was re considered and a new election took place, the result of which was that defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 were elected Directors and plaintiff No. 2 was not elected. There was also some other alteration as regards the election of the Assistant Managing Director. Several issues were framed, but the suit was dismissed by the Munsif on the last issue, that is, on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. The plaintiffs appealed against that decree and the learned Judge on appeal held that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit and remanded the case for the trial of certain issues to the First Court.

The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have appealed to this Court and on their behalf the contention has been made that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit as this. It was also argued that having regard to the facts stated in the judgment of the Court of Appeal below the Court ought not to interfere in this matter.

With regard to the second question, we have only to observe that the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court took the matter into his consideration as a question distinct from one of jurisdiction, and as we understand his judgment he has left the question open for decision by the Trial Court, that is to say, whether having regard to the circumstances of the case the Court will, in the exercise of its proper discretion, grant the relief claimed by the plaintiffs. That discretion is a judicial discretion to be exercised by the Court in consideration of all the circumstances of the case and it is liable to be reviewed on appeal by the Appellate Court. That matter is not properly before us now and we need not express any opinion on the question. The only question that is properly before us is whether the Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that although there is no direct provision in the law that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit it is a matter of internal management of a Company with which the Court has no jurisdiction to interfere, and he cites in support of his contention the case of Mozley v Abston (1) and certain other cases following that case. In that case, however, there were various reasons on which the Lord Chancellor sustained the demurrer of the defendant Company.

and we need not go into the reasons of the judgment in detail. The concluding remark in the judgment shows that the Court did not exercise its equitable jurisdiction on a consideration of the facts of the case. As a matter of fact an injunction may be granted on the application of a Director restraining the plaintiff's co-Directors from wrongfully excluding him from acting as a Director, and we think that there is nothing which can be urged as excluding the jurisdiction of the Court from entertaining the suit. As we have said this question of jurisdiction is quite different from the question whether the Court will exercise its discretionary jurisdiction having regard to the circumstances of a particular case.

We hold that the Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit as framed, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at five gold mohurs.

Let the record be sent down without delay.

Mortgage—Usufructuary mortgage—Suit for redemption—Mortgagor receiving earnest-money and undertaking to execute sale-deed in favour of mortgagee—Parties, intention of—Interest in lieu of profits—Mortgagor, whether liable to render accounts—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 77

A suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage was contested on the ground, among others, that the mortgagee had acquired the equity of redemption. It appeared that the mortgagor executed in favour of the mortgagee a document reciting receipt of earnest-money and stating that the mortgagor would execute a sale-deed in respect of the mortgaged property six months before the expiry of the term of the mortgage. The mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagee shall appropriate the property in lieu of interest and shall bear no claim for interest against the mortgagor who in his turn would have no claim for profits against the mortgagee.

Held, (1) that the intention of the parties was not to effect a transfer of property but merely to contract for such a transfer, [p. 408, col. 1.]

(2) that this contract of sale had no effect on the status of parties and they remained after it, as before, mortgagor and mortgagee, [p. 408, col. 2.]

(3) that section 77 of the Transfer of Property Act applied to the case and the mortgagee was not liable to render accounts to the mortgagor. [p. 410, col. 1.]

Messrs. A. P. Sen and H. K. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Bisheshwar Nath, Lachmi Narain and Hargobind Dayal, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises from a suit for the redemption of a mortgage-deed, dated August 14th, 1881, executed by Kalka Baksh Singh in favour of Balbhaddar Prasad, in lieu of a sum stated to be Rs. 9,000. The suit was contested on various grounds, one of which was that the mortgagee or his predecessor-in-interest, had acquired the equity of redemption. This question still remains to be decided. The learned Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff a decree for redemption, and ordered that an account should be taken in order to ascertain what is due to the defendant for principal and interest on the mortgage-deed in suit, and on a deed of further charge. The defendant appealed on several grounds, but only three of them have been pressed in this Court. The first of these is the one we have already referred to, namely, the plea set forth in grounds Nos. 8 and 9 that the defendant has acquired the equity of redemption. If the appellant is successful in this plea, the suit for redemption will, of course, have to be dismissed.

The mortgage-deed in suit was a usufructuary one executed in 1881, but it appears that there was some delay in putting the mortgagee in possession, as the property mortgaged, the entire village Gaunamau, had previously been mortgaged to one Ram Naram. The appellant's case is that on July 31st 1886, Kalka Baksh, the original mortgagor, executed a document by which he purported to transfer the equity of redemption to the original mortgagee, Balbhaddar Prasad. It may be as well to state that of the plaintiffs in the present suit, only two inherited their rights from the original mortgagor, the plaintiff No. 3, coming in as a transferee of a 14-annas share in these rights from plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, while plaintiff No. 4 bases his claim on a deed of transfer of the right of redemption of the property in suit, originally executed by Kalka Baksh in favour of one Baldeo Baksh in 1895, which had come to him by means of one succession and two sales. None of these people have any personal knowledge of the circumstances in which Kalka Baksh, the original mortgagor, is stated to have transferred his equity of redemption to the mortgagee.

The appellant has pointed in the first place to a document, Exhibit A10, dated July 1st, 1886. This is called by him a contract of sale. The respondents have referred to it as a receipt. It is executed by Kalka Baksh in favour of Balbhaddar Prasad, and the main portion of it is to the following effect:—

"You have paid me Rs. 250 as earnest-money. Now I sell to you for Rs. 19,000 the village Gaunamau, Pargana Maura-wan, which is mortgaged to you with possession under instrument dated 14th August 1881." "I will execute the sale deed in respect of Gaunmau on a stamp paper six months before the 'expiration of the term of the mortgage and get the same registered. If I in any way evade the execution of the sale-deed, you shall be entitled to summon me before the Registrar as well as the Court, and get me to execute the sale-deed. I write this letter instead of a receipt, and stamp it for your satisfaction." This document, it may be mentioned, was registered on 29th November, 1885. It is not suggested that it could operate as a valid deed of transfer of the property. It is argued, however, that it may be held to operate as an assertion by the mortgagee of his title as vendee with the acquiescence of the mortgagor. The following decisions have been referred to in support of the argument that a deed purporting to transfer property, which is not a valid deed of transfer owing to some legal defect, may nevertheless operate as an assertion of title by the transferee and have the effect of setting up adverse possession:—Khedu Rai v. Sheoparsam Rai (1), Mahendra Bahadur Singh v. Chandrapal Singh (2), Varada Pillai v. Jevarathnammal (3), Karnam Kandasami Pillai v. Chinnappa (4), Usman Khan v. Nagalla Dasanna (5), Qadar Baksh v. Mangha Hal (6). In continuation of this line of argument, the learned Counsel for the appellant has pointed to evidence showing that in 1887 one Kedar Nath sued Kalka Baksh for specific performance of a contract of sale in favour of the plaintiff, in respect of the property in suit. This contract between Kalka Baksh and Kedar Nath was made on September the 3rd 1886, and according to the allegations in the plaint the sum of Rs. 724-15 was paid by way of earnest-money by Kedar Nath to Kalka Baksh. Gaya Prasad, son of Balbhaddar Prasad deceased, was made a party to the suit. The plaint contains a reference to the document, numbered Exhibit A 10 in the present suit, but alleges that it was not really executed on 31st July 1886, and could, therefore, not be considered as prior to the plaintiff's contract. The appellant points to the written statements of two defendants, which clearly state that on 31st July 1886, Kalka Baksh had sold village Gaunamau for Rs. 19,000 to

SITLA SAHAI V. DRUM SINGH.

Balbhaddar Prasad. These pleadings are referred to as a second assertion of his title as vendee by the mortgagee, and of acquiescence by the mortgagor-vendor. Reference has also been made to a circumstance of 1895 when Baldeo Baksh Singh, who had acquired the right of redemption of the village in suit in that year, applied to deposit the mortgage-money due to the son of Balbhaddar Prasad under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. This application was opposed by the guardian of Balbhaddar Prasad's son on the ground that the latter was the owner of the right of the equity of redemption. The upshot of the argument is that the mortgagee, or his representatives, had been in possession of the equity of redemption with effect from 31st July 1886, and that his title had matured by July 1898. The objections to this view, which have been noticed by the Subordinate Judge, are based, it is said, only on certain admissions made by Balbhaddar Prasad's descendants; long after that gentleman's title as vendee had matured, to the effect that the rights, possessed by them, were only mortgagee rights, there may be some doubt as to the value of these admissions; but in the view we have taken it is unnecessary to go into that. The decisions which have been enumerated above, which go to show that an equity of redemption may be acquired by a mortgagee through the means of adverse possession, have all arisen from cases in which the intention of the parties was to make a transfer of property. In our opinion, the document of 1886 clearly shows that the intention of the parties was not to effect a transfer of property, but merely to contract for such a transfer. The document itself was not stamped as a transfer of property. It is certainly worded in a loose kind of way, to make it appear as if the mortgagor were actually selling the village. The undertaking, however, is to execute a sale-deed six months before the expiration of the term of the mortgage. The mortgage was not to expire until eight years from the date of execution, i.e., 1889, so in any case it was not contemplated by the parties that the actual transfer of the equity of redemption should take place until three years after the contract of sale was made. There is not a shred of evidence to show that the sale-deed was ever executed, or that the consideration money, apart from Rs. 250 earnest-money, was ever paid. The statements made in the proceedings when Kedar Nath brought his suit in 1887, were apparently collusive and it is noticeable that the document, Exhibit A 10, on which the appellant relies, although it purports to have been executed on July 31st 1886, was not registered until Kalka Baksh had executed the other agreement to sell the equity of redemption to Kedar Nath. In short we have no hesitation in deciding that this contract of sale had no effect on the status of the parties, and that they remained after it, as before mortgagor and mortgagee.

The next point taken in appeal is that the respondents were not entitled to demand an account from the mortgagee appellant. This plea is set forth in the 5th, and to some extent in the 6th, and 13th grounds of appeal. It is claimed for the appellant, that according to the terms of the mortgage-deed, all the profits of the mortgaged property in addition to a sum of Rs 109 a year, as set forth in the 13th clause of the deed, are due to the mortgagee, that he is not under the deed accountable to the mortgagor for anything, that consequently section 77 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to the case, and there is no obligation under section 76 for the mortgagee to render accounts to the mortgagor. In a Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court, Shafi-un-nissa v. Fazalrab (7), it was held that in the absence of an express stipulation therefor, a usufructuary mortgagee is not liable to render accounts to the representatives of the mortgagor in an action for redemption, even where the rents of the property are to be appropriated in lieu of a portion of interest only. The respondents rely on clauses (b), (d), (g) and (h) of section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act. The learned Subordinate Judge.

SITLA SAHAI v. DHUM SINGH.

has, in his judgment, considered the question of whether any interest was fixed on the principal mortgage-money, and he has come to the conclusion that interest was calculated* and that the parties deducted from it the amount of the profits of the village, and finding that the latter fell short of the interest by Rs. 109 agreed that this amount was to be paid annually by the mortgagor in addition to the profits, as recited in the 13th clause of the deed. He deals with the obvious defect that no rate of interest was fixed in the mortgage-deed by pointing out that a rate of interest is mentioned in clauses 5 and 7 of the deed. Clause 5 provides, that if the mortgagee has to advance takan to the tenants, he can recover the amount at the time of redemption, with interest at 14 annas 6 pies per cent per mensem. Clause 9 provides that if the profits of the mortgagee are decreased owing to the increase of revenue cesses or rates, then the mortgagee may demand the deficiency from the mortgagor every year, and if the amount is not made good, it shall be payable at the time of redemption with interest at the above rate. Further reference is made to interest in clause 7 and clause 11. In this connection the Subordinate Judge remarks, "Any how when there can be no doubt that a rate of interest was fixed on the principal money, but the rate is not expressly mentioned, and we find that a uniform rate was fixed on all other items, it is reasonable to conclude that that was the rate of interest on the principal amount also". He has, however, omitted to notice the fact that the preamble to the mortgage-deed contains the clause "the said mortgagees shall now remain in possession of the village mortgaged till the period of mortgage, and after payment of revenue, mal and cesses, salary of patwari and chaukidar and village expenses, shall appropriate to themselves in lieu of interest all income arising out of the said village, neither the mortgagee shall have any claim for interest against me, nor I, the mortgagor any for profits against the mortgagee and his heirs." The series of conditions that follow the preamble merely set forth the various additional liabilities of the mortgagor, and it is laid down in the 8th clause that at the time of redemption the mortgagor or his heirs shall have no claim for mesne profits. In short the deed clearly states that the mortgagee shall appropriate the profits in lieu of interest and shall also receive a sum of Rs. 109 a year in addition. No doubt the deed is an exceedingly hard one from the point of view of the mortgagor, but we have to deal with it as it stands, and it seems perfectly clear to us that section 77 of the Transfer of Property Act will apply. Under the terms of the deed there is nothing for the mortgagee to account for. The plaintiffs-respondents stated in paragraph 2 of the plaint "something in excess is now due to the plaintiffs," and in their prayer for relief, "If after rendition of accounts any sum is found due to the plaintiffs, it may be awarded to the plaintiffs from the defendant." On such vague allegations they base their claim to an account from the mortgagor. Reliance has been placed by the lower Court, and also in arguments before us on a decision of this Court published as Narain Das v. Baij Nath Sahai, (8) in which it was stated "It would require very clear words to induce a Court to put upon a document such a construction as would entitle the mortgagee to claim interest and such portion of the usufruct as might be in excess of it." In that case, however, there was in the deed a stipulated rate of interest, and it was provided that the annual profits of the mortgaged property, which were estimated at a certain fixed amount, would go towards payment of interest at the stipulated rate, and it was held that the mortgagor was entitled to an account from the mortgagee. Clearly that case is by no means parallel to the present one, where there is no stipulated rate of interest and it is expressly stated that the profits shall be taken in lieu of interest. The mortgagee is not claiming interest in this suit at all. The Subordinate Judge in decreeing the suit ordered that an account should be taken as to what will be due to the defendant for principal and interest on the mortgage-deed as well as on the deed of further charge. We consider that this order requires some modification. It is true that it does not appear to contemplate any accounting in favour of the mortgagor, and as we hold that section 77 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to the case, and that the mortgagee is not liable to render accounts to the mortgagor, to this extent the decree of the lower Court is correct. The mortgagee in filing his written statement made several claims in addition to the deficit of the annual sum of Rs. 109, which had to be paid under clause 13 of the deed, and the sum due on the deed of further charge which had to be met. These items relate to alleged loss of profits owing to enhancement of revenue, arrears of rent from tenants, etc., which might or might not have been due under the terms of the mortgage-deed, and which have not been proved. They cannot be proved now, and they must not be considered in the account, which will have to be prepared in the Court below, in order to ascertain the exact sum which must be paid before the mortgage can be redeemed. The learned Counsel for the appellant agrees that the terms of the mortgage-deed were very hard, and that these items might be given up, as in any case they would have to be given up, for want of proof. The only items, therefore, that will have to be considered will be those for the annual payment of Rs. 109 and the sum due on the deed of further charge, both of which carry interest at definite rate.

The plaintiffs have also appealed on the ground that the Subordinate Judge has found that there was failure of consideration of the mortgage to the extent of Rs. 542-4-2. It is perfectly clear both from the recital in the deed itself, and from the endorsement of the Sub-Registrar, that the entire consideration money was paid to the mortgagor.

We have already stated that the property mortgaged was subject to a prior mortgage. The evidence shows that about a year after the execution of the mortgage in suit, both mortgagor and mortgagee sued the prior mortgagee for redemption. Balbhaddar Prasad deposited a sum of Rs. 8,445-8-6 in Court for the credit of the defendant, who contested the suit. When accounts were taken it was found that only Rs. 7,903-4-4 were due to the defendant. The balance of Rs. 542-4-2 was subsequently withdrawn by Balbhaddar Prasad. This is all the evidence there is, and on this the lower Court has held that as this sum was taken by Balbhaddar Prasad, it must be deducted from the consideration money of Rs. 9,000. It is obvious that Balbhaddar Prasad had to withdraw the balance of the money because he had deposited it. The transaction was entirely separate from the payment of Rs. 9,000 to the mortgagor a year previously, and in addition there is no evidence to show that Balbhaddar Prasad kept this sum. In view of the clear evidence that the sum of Rs. 9,000 was paid to the mortgagor, we consider that this reduction should not have been allowed. In connection with this incident, we may deal with the cross-objection filed by the plaintiffs, who claim that in the circumstances given above, the whole sum of Rs. 1,096-11-8, by which the amount paid to the prior mortgagee fell short of the mortgage-money in this suit, should be considered not to have been paid to the mortgagor. We disallow this cross-objection for the same reason that we allow the defendant's appeal as regards the item of Rs. 542-4-2.

There is a further point in which we consider that it would be proper to modify the decree of the lower Court. That decree is in favour of all the plaintiffs. We have remarked earlier in the judgment that there are three sets of plaintiffs, and it appears that the claim of plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 and the claim of plaintiff No. 4, (which is based on a sale of the equity of redemption by Balbhaddar Prasad) are mutually exclusive. It may not be absolutely illegal to give a joint decree to all the plaintiffs in these circumstances, and to leave it to them to settle their claims among themselves, but it might be inconvenient and it might lead to further litigation. We have put it to the learned Counsel who appears for all of them, and he agrees that the decree may be given only to plaintiff No. 4.

Subject to these modifications, therefore, we consider that the judgment and decree of the lower Court should be upheld, and we dismiss the appeal. As the appellant has failed in the substantial portion of his appeal, we order that he pay the costs of the plaintiffs-respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for accounts and is directed against an order of remand made by the learned Additional District Judge of Midnapur.

The facts of the case have been shortly stated as follows in the judgment of the Court of first instance—

"This is a suit for accounts. The plaintiff's case is that the defendant No. 1 was gomastha under the pro forma defendant No. 2 in Mouzas Barkola and Mirzapore and that he executed a security kabuliyat for his work in favour of the pro forma defendant on the 7th Kartik 1306 A. S mortgaging the plaint schedule properties and on the strength of that kabuliyat he did the gomastha work from Kartik 1306 to Magh 1327 A. S., that on the 5th Falgun 1327 A. S, the pro forma defendant No. 2 sold off to plaintiff all his rights in the two mouzas together with his rights to get accounts and papers from defendant No. 1 and to recover from him the sums due thereon, by a registered kobala taking due and proper consideration thereof, that on the basis of the security kabuliyat this defendant No. 1 was to submit all collection papers and explain those and pay off all sums found thereon and he was to be liable for all rents and decretal dues barred by limitation owing to his default and to get 1 rupee 4 annas monthly pay for his work, that the defendant No. 1 submitted and explained his accounts and papers till 1309 A. S to pro forma defendant No. 2 and from 1310 A. S. he submitted no accounts and papers to him except a thoka only of 1327 A. S and as are per hasab given in schedule "ka" of the plaintiff the plaintiff, on the basis of the kobala in his favour, asks for such accounts and papers provisionally valuing his claim at Rs 937-15 annas 18½ gandas. It is also stated in the plaint that after the plaintiff's kobala such accounts and papers were demanded from defendant No. 1 on 11th Falgun 1327 A. S. but no such accounts were submitted."

The learned Munsif on a construction of the deed of sale, held (i) that the plaintiff did not purchase the rights of defendant No. 2 under the mortgage kabulyat executed by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 2, and (ii) that the plaintiff, if he purchased anything at all, purchased the right to sue for accounts, which is unassignable under section 6 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act. In the result he dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge reversed both these findings and remanded the case for determination on the merits which, in the circumstances of this case, must mean for taking accounts from the defendant No. 1.

When the Courts below have differed on the construction of the deed of sale executed by the defendant No. 2 in favour of the plaintiff, it becomes necessary to closely examine the terms thereof. In the heading of the document it is stated, that the sale is in respect of the mouzas belonging to defendant No. 2 together with back rents from tenants for a sum of Rs 720 which is the full consideration for the transfer. In paragraph 2 after a description of the mouzas sold and their appurtenances the following passage appears:—

"And takbul (cash) due to me and my dues from the gomashita together with the right of taking accounts from the gomashita and the right of taking the papers from him"

Paragraph 6 runs thus—"If the thoka or the karcha of the year 1327 filed by the gomashita be not correct, you will make enquiries yourself and will ascertain the correct amount, you will be entitled to realise the said amount together with the amount realised by the gomashita from the date of his kabulyat and the rents which had become time-barred through the negligence of the gomashita together with damages according to your calculation or as will be ascertained by Court from the said gomashita." Reading these clauses together and regard being had to the general tenor of the deed, it seems clear that what the plaintiff purchased was the right to take account from the defendant No. 1 and to recover such sums as might be found to be due from him upon an account being taken. The deed does not specify any consideration for the transfer of this right and the amount recoverable from the defendant No. 1, if any, is uncertain and dependent upon the taking of accounts. Indeed, as the learned Munsif has observed, the suit is for accounts tentatively valued at a certain sum for purposes of jurisdiction and Court-fee. The observations of the learned District Judge on the point seem to be somewhat inconsistent and inaccurate. He says—"The present suit is one to recover sums of money realised on behalf of defendant No. 2 but embezzled by defendant No. 1. In view of the allegation that the respondent has submitted no accounts, it is not possible for the plaintiff to say what precise sum is due until an account is taken. Although the plaintiff has been compelled to sue for accounts his claim is really one for a sum of money received on behalf of defendant No. 2 and misappropriated by defendant No. 1." He further observes that the transfer was not of a mere right to sue but of a right to a specific sum of money which has been embezzled. It seems to me, however, that the transfer was not of a right to a specific sum but of a right to call for accounts, and to recover any sum at present indefinite which may be found to be due on the taking of accounts. The learned Vakil for the respondent has argued on the same lines and contends that what the plaintiff purchased was the right to money due from defendant No. 1 which is an "actionable claim." It is conceded that a right to sue for accounts is not assignable in law but it is maintained that the right to a sum of money found due on the taking of accounts is so assignable. I am unable to accede to the proposition of law thus broadly stated. To so hold would be to encourage an evasion of the law which prohibits the transfer of a right to sue for accounts. One useful test for determining the transferability or otherwise of an inchoate right is whether it can be attached in the execution of a decree. That the right to demand accounts or to an indefinite sum which may or may not be found due on the taking of accounts cannot be attached will not, I think, be disputed.

It has been further argued that section 6, clause (e) declares rights to damages arising from torts to be incapable of transfer, but does not prohibit the transfer of rights or obligations ex contractu. This is not an altogether correct view of the law. Rights arising out of torts are undoubtedly unassignable but there may also be rights arising out of contracts which offend against the rules as formulated in the section. Abu Mahomed v. S. C. Chunder (1). This is indicated by the alteration in section 6 (e) in 1900 by eliminating the words "for compensation for a harm illegally caused," which formed part of the clause before the amendment.

On a proper construction of the document and regard being had to the frame of the suit it seems to me that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain the suit since he has purchased, if anything, a mere right to sue for accounts. A number of cases, English and Indian, have been cited by the learned Vakils on both sides but I do not consider it necessary to refer to them, as none of them is exactly in point and every case must be decided with reference to its own particular facts. Some of the reported cases may, however, be briefly referred to. In Pansulari Venkatasawmi v. Menana Ramachandra Raju (2) it was held that a mere right to recover damages for the negligence of an agent in failing to collect rent is not assignable. There does not seem to be much difference in principle between failure to collect rent and failure to pay rent collected. A claim for mesne profits is not transferable. Shyam Chand Koondru v. The Land

Mortgage Bank of India, Ltd. (3) and Kocharla Seetamma v. Pillala Venkataramanayya (4). The principle followed in these cases is applicable in the present case. The learned Additional District Judge has relied on the case of Madho Das v. Ramji Patak (5). There a sum of money was in the hands of the agent on his principal's account to be spent for certain purposes. It was held that that sum or so much of it as had not been actually spent could be attached in execution of a decree. That case, having regard to its particular facts, is no authority for the view which found favour with the learned Judge. The learned Vakil for the respondent has laid great stress on the case of County Hotel and Wine Co. v. London and North-Western Railway Co. (6). If anything, that case supports the view that we have adopted. There the subject of transfer was an option under a lease and McCordie, J., held that a mere right of litigation cannot be transferred.

In view of the conclusion at which I have arrived above the question whether the plaintiff purchased the right of the defendant No. 2 under the security kabuliyat ceases to be of any importance. I may state, however, that I am unable to agree with the view of the learned Additional District Judge on this point also. The kobala does not mention the transfer of defendant No. 2's right as mortgages, nor does it contain any description of the properties covered by the kabuliyat. The only mention thereof is to be found in a schedule at the end of the document. The learned Judge held on two grounds that the defendant No. 2 transferred his lien on the property mortgaged to him by the defendant No. 1, (1) that that was the intention of the parties and (2) that the mortgage kabuliyat was delivered by defendant No. 2 to the plaintiff at the time of the execution of the kobala. I am unable to accept the learned Judge's reasoning. Where the document is not itself ambiguous, the intention of the parties should not be taken into consideration and the mere delivery of a document of title does not constitute a transfer of the right to the property. There are certain well-recognized rules relating to the mode of transfer of interest in immoveable properties and transfer of such interest can be effected in no other way.

In the above view of the matter the appeal succeeds. The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and those of the First Court restored with costs, three gold mohurs.

Madras Land Encroachment Act (III of 1905), ss. 6, 14—Notice to quit—Possession not disturbed—Limitation, when commences—"Deeming themselves aggrieved by proceedings", what amounts to.

A person who has had notice of eviction from the Government under section 6 of the Madras Land Encroachment Act but continues to remain in undisturbed possession cannot be held to have been evicted so as to render the period of limitation under section 14 of the Act applicable to a suit by him against the Government. Where there are a series of proceedings against the person under the Act, being mere notices without any further attack against his title and enjoyment, it is open to him to choose the last of such proceedings and "deem himself aggrieved" by that and not by the earlier proceedings.

The mere fact that such a person applied to review an earlier notice to quit does not necessarily show that he deemed himself aggrieved by the notice when he does not allege it in his plaint as his cause of action.

JUDGMENT.

S. A. No. 949 of 1921.

Coutts-Trotter, C. J.—In this case the plaintiff was in occupation of some land cultivating it by a tenant. Government claimed that it was their land, and on the 17th of April 1919 they sent her a notice to quit under section 6 of the Land Encroachment Act, III of 1905. Nothing happened for a time. In May 1919 the plaintiff put in a petition for the review of this notice to the Deputy Collector. On the 18th of September 1919 the Deputy Collector dismissed the review petition. On the 2nd of October 1919 an order which amounted practically to a notice to quit went to the plaintiff. On the 22nd of December 1919 the plaintiff filed the present suit for vindicating her alleged rights of ownership in the Civil Court.

The Courts below have declared that suit to be barred by limitation by reason of section 14 of the Act which says: "Nothing contained in this Act shall be held to prevent persons deeming themselves aggrieved by any proceedings under this Act except as hereinbefore provided, from applying to the Civil Courts for redress." (That is what this woman has done). "Provided, that the Civil Courts shall not take cognisance of any suit instituted by such persons for any such cause of action unless such suit shall be instituted within six months from the time at which the cause of action arose." Then followed two Explanations; "The cause of action shall be deemed to have arisen (a) in respect of any assessment or penalty, (that is a provision under another section which I have not dealt with) "on the debt on which such assessment or penalty was levied; (b) in respect of eviction or forfeiture, on the date of eviction or forfeiture." Section 6 contains the machinery for eviction and it is provided that a notice shall be served on the person in occupation requiring him to vacate the land and, if such notice is not obeyed, by removing or deputing a subordinate to remove any person who may refuse to vacate the same the Collector may give effect to it. How in the teeth of that provision any body can venture to argue that a person who has had notice under section 6 and in spite of it remains in undisturbed possession has been evicted from the land, I cannot understand, and I do not think it can fairly be said that any judgment of this Court has gone that length. But the case is put in another and a slightly, I will not say more plausible but a slightly, less unarguable way. It is said that the illustrations contained in the Explanation to section 14 of the Act are not exhaustive and that a person may be aggrieved by proceedings under this Act when those proceedings do not amount to an assessment, penalty, eviction or forfeiture. Assuming that argument to be sound, the plaintiff in this case put forward as the thing, which she deemed to be aggrieved by, not the notice at all which might have been a mere brutum fulmen, which might have resulted in nothing whatever in the future, but by a tangible definite order of the Deputy Collector received by her on the 2nd of October 1919 ordering her to quit. How it can be said that the plaintiff must be deemed to be aggrieved by the earliest stage of the proceedings, when she did not choose to be aggrieved by it, I cannot appreciate. It is argued that though she says she was not aggrieved by the notice she was obviously aggrieved by it because she petitioned the Deputy Collector to withdraw it or to review it. It seems to me that, assuming that to be so, it does not in the least preclude her from saying: "Well, if I was aggrieved by the notice in the sense that I put in a petition against it, that is not what I am questioning in this suit here. I am aggrieved and for the purposes of this suit I am solely aggrieved by the order of the Deputy Collector of the 2nd of October 1919." How anybody can deny her the right to elect as to which stage of the proceedings she should complain against passes my comprehension. In my judgment, the Full Bench decision in Secretary of State v. Illikkal Assam (1) has no bearing on this point whatever because there was a question as to when there had been an infringement of the plaintiff's right; and the plaintiff had a continuous chain of proceedings which began by his actually paying money out of his pocket in answer to a demand. To my mind, the Full Bench decision has no bearing on this point whatever.

The appeal must be allowed and the suit remanded for re-trial. The appellants will have their costs of this appeal and in the lower Appellate Court in any event. The Court-fee will be refunded to the appellants.

S. A. No. 1341 of 1921.

Coutts-Trotter, C. J.—Same judgment as in the connected S. A. No. 949 of 1921. There will be a similar order as to costs and refund of Court-fee.

S. A. No. 949 of 1921.

Ramesam, J.—I entirely agree. Assuming that all the causes of action that may arise under the Act are not exhausted by the Explanation to section 14 and assuming that a declaratory suit filed on account of proceedings taken under the Act also falls under section 14, it is open to the plaintiff to deem herself aggrieved by whichever one of several proceedings taken against her she may choose. In the case in Secretary of State v. Illikkal Assam (1) the plaintiff actually made a payment. In a case where a penal assessment has been paid it may be that it is not open to a plaintiff to say that he does not deem himself aggrieved by that payment, that he can ignore that payment and that he deems himself aggrieved by a later proceeding, because payment of money to another person in token of his proprietorship is practically a loss to himself and a recognition by him of the adverse title of the other. But in a case where there are a series of proceedings, being mere notices without any further attack against the title and enjoyment of the plaintiff, it is open to the plaintiff to choose the last of these things and say that he deems himself aggrieved by this and not by the earlier proceedings. I am aware there are some cases which, though they may not arise under the Act, imply that it is not open to a person seeking a declaration to so choose, but I do not agree with them. In this case, in paragraph 9 of the plaint, the plaintiff has clearly stated that the dismissal of her petition by the Deputy Collector and the communication of the 2nd of October 1919 is the proceeding on which the cause of action arose, which means that she felt herself aggrieved only by this and not by any earlier proceedings, for a declaratory suit. That being so, this second appeal must be allowed and I agree to the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

S. A. No. 1341 of 1921.

Ramesam, J.—I agree. It is contended by the learned Government Pleader, in this case that there is an admission in paragraph 4 of the plaint that the plaintiff deemed himself aggrieved on the 19th of March 1919, but seeing that a declaratory suit is an optional one and not compulsory, the view I take in such matters is that a person, who wishes to file a declaratory suit has the right to say which of several proceedings taken against him (not amounting to adverse possession or enjoyment) is the particular proceeding by which he deems himself aggrieved for the purpose of filing a declaratory suit. In this case, it may be that the plaintiff was aggrieved by several proceedings, but of these she chooses only the proceeding of the 26th of May 1919 as the one by which she felt herself aggrieved for the purpose of filing the declaratory suit and not the earlier proceeding of the 19th of March 1919. That being so, this second appeal is governed by the judgment in S. A. No 949 of 1921.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), ss 35 (a), 36, Sch. I, Art V, cl (c)—Reference to arbitration not stamped—Arbitrators, power of—Procedure—Suit on award—Reference, whether can be challenged—Admission of reference on payment of penalty—Reference to arbitration properly stamped—Refusal of one of several Arbitrators to act—Substitution of another Arbitrator—Document, whether requires stamp

On a reference to arbitration not duly stamped, the Arbitrators can proceed to levy the duty and penalty under section 35 (a) of the Stamp Act, if the defect is brought to their notice, but in the absence of such notice, when once they have taken up their enquiry on the basis of the reference, the admission of the reference, before them can no longer be called in question before them in view of section 36 of the Act [p 417, col. 2].

But when a suit is brought on the award subsequently, the jurisdiction of the Arbitrators can be challenged on the ground that there was no valid reference, and it becomes the duty of the Court to investigate the assertion, who again is entitled, on ascertaining the true facts, to proceed under section 35 (a) of the Stamp Act. [ibid]

Per Suhrawardy, J.—Where on a reference to arbitration duly stamped, one of the Arbitrators declines to act, and another person is substituted in his place by a second document, the latter document is not a reference to arbitration, but a letter of nomination or appointment of the substituted arbitrator. Such a document does not require to be stamped under the Stamp Act [p 418, cols 1 & 2].

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Sixth Court, Dacca, KALI CHARAN V. MANI MOHAN.

dated the 30th of November 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, Fourth Court, Dacca, dated the 13th August 1921.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Kanai Lal Saha, for the Appellant.

Babu Rupendra Coomer Mitter, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—These two appeals arise from two suits. Kali Charan, the appellant, was plaintiff in one suit, and Mani Mohon, the respondent, in the other, and each made the other defendant. The dispute was about a strip of land between their two houses. Kali Charan alleged that the dispute had been referred to Arbitrators and decided in his favour, and he asked to have a decree drawn up in accordance with the award. Mani Mohon asserted that there had not been any valid reference to arbitration and claimed a declaration of his title to the strip of land. He also sought for a declaration of his right of way over an adjoining strip of land.

The Trial Court found in favour of Kali Charan, overruling all Mani Mohon's objections to the reference, and holding with regard to the alleged right of way that such user as had been proved was of a permissive nature.

Mani Mohon appealed and the learned Subordinate Judge endorsed the Munsif's findings about the right of way, but held that the Arbitrators' award could not be made the basis of a decree. On this view he ordered that the cases should be remanded for trial on the merits, and it is against this order of remand in each suit that the appeals are directed.

There is only one point for consideration so far as the award is concerned, and it is this. The parties drew up a reference to Arbitrators and affixed an eight annas stamp. One of the three Arbitrators named in the reference declined to act, and another person was by written agreement appointed in his place. This document did not bear a stamp, and the argument that found favour with the lower Appellate Court was that the absence of a stamp on the later document rendered the whole of the arbitrator's proceedings void and their award invalid. The fact that the Munsif took action under section 35 (a) of the Stamp Act (II of 1899) in his opinion made no difference.

It is urged on behalf of Kali Charan that the learned Judge's view is erroneous. It was suggested that the reference might possibly be treated as coming within clause (c) of section 35, but that argument is not tenable; for it cannot be said that the agreement was effected by correspondence consisting of two or more letters. More emphasis is laid upon the argument that before the Munsif received the reference in evidence he acted under section 35 (a), and that, consequently, the admission cannot again be called in question (section 36). To this argument the answer is that it was the Arbitrators who received the reference in evidence or acted upon it, and that it was only they who could levy the duty and a penalty under section 35 (a).

It appears to me that the proceedings before the Arbitrators and the proceedings in Court must be kept distinct. So far as the Arbitrators are concerned they might have proceeded under section 35 (a) had the defect been brought to their notice: they did not do so, and when once they had taken up their enquiry on the basis of the reference, the admission of the reference by them could no longer be called in question before them (section 36), and Mani Mohon could not have urged before them that they had no authority to make the award.

Then came the suit on the award, and then I think it was open to Mani Mohon to challenge the jurisdiction of the Arbitrators on the ground that there was no valid reference; and it became the duty of the Court to investigate the assertion, and the Court was entitled on ascertaining the true facts to proceed under section 35 (a).

The question has been discussed recently in the case of Rungldl Kalooram v. Kedar Nath Kestiwai (1) and the view taken by the learned Judges was very much in accordance with what I have said above. The earlier decisions that were cited before us hardly afford any help.

(1) 77 Ind. Cas. 845; 27 C.W.N. 512.

SAMSON v. SILVARAN.

I have dealt with the question on the footing that a second stamp was necessary on the document by which the parties agreed to a different Arbitrator: but I feel considerable doubt about that. It is not necessary, however, for one to deal further with that question because in the view I take the Munsif's procedure removed any defect that there may have been in the reference.

My conclusion is that the First Court was right and the Appellate Court was wrong. I, therefore, set aside the orders of remand and direct that the decrees of the First Court be restored with costs in all Courts. The hearing-fee in this Court is assessed at one gold mohur in each case.

The cross-appeals are concluded by the findings of fact and are dismissed without any order as to costs.

Suhrawardy, J.—I am of the same opinion. As an additional reason for the view that we have adopted, I may refer to the article of the Indian Stamp Act which makes it obligatory that a reference to arbitration should be stamped. It is conceded that the stamp required on a document embodying a reference to arbitration is eight annas under Art. V, clause (c) of Schedule I of the Indian Stamp Act (No. 18 of 1899). That Article says that an agreement or a memorandum of an agreement should be stamped with a particular stamp, and in clause (c) it says that where there is no provision otherwise made it must be stamped with a stamp of eight annas. It has also been held that a document authorising an arbitration should be stamped as such, that is, with a stamp of eight annas. It is, therefore, clear that a document which purports to be an agreement to refer a dispute between parties to arbitration should be stamped. That document, in my opinion, is the original document under which the parties agree that the matters in difference between them should be referred to the arbitration of certain persons. Any subsequent variation in the names of the Arbitrators will not be a reference to arbitration but would, in my opinion, be only a substitution of the name of an Arbitrator in place of another or if I may say so, the document asking for the substitution may be called a letter of nomination or appointment for which the Stamp Act does not provide for any stamp. See Ganga Ram Kushaba v. Narayan Babaji (2). In this view of the matter, I think that the letter to which exception has been taken by the Court of Appeal below was not one which required any stamp duty. I agree in the order that the appeals should be allowed with costs.

Civil miscellaneous appeal from an order of the District Court, Yamethin, in C. R. No. 5 of 1923.

Mr. Halkar, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. N. Chari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants were the plaintiffs in a suit pending before an Additional Judge of the District Court of Yamethin, sitting at Pyinmana. It appears that from the 18th December, 1922, consequent on the re-organisation of the Courts, this Judge ceased to sit at Pyinmana and that all cases before him had to go before the District Court at Yamethin, where the District Judge and another Additional Judge sat.

The plaintiffs' case was fixed for the 22nd December and on that date it was called by the Additional District Judge at Yamethin. Neither party appearing the suit was dismissed for default. In the circumstances the Judge would have exercised a sounder discretion had he postponed orders until he had ascertained that the failure to appear was not due to a mistake arising out of the change of venue. But it may be noted that the suit had been adjourned to give the parties time to negotiate a compromise. On the 29th January 1923, the appellant filed an application supported by an affidavit, to re-open the case. This was allowed by the Judge on the 8th February ex parte, without notice to the respondent. Notice for hearing of the suit was then issued. The first notice being unserved a fresh one was issued for the 21st March. On that date the respondent filed an application for review of the order setting aside the dismissal for default.

The Additional District Judge was then very ill and he afterwards died with the result that the application was heard by his successor. The review was allowed and the order setting aside the dismissal of the suit was itself set aside. This order was based on the fact that the application to set aside the dismissal was time-barred under Art. 163, Limitation Act.

It is clear the application was in fact time-barred, and it is also clear that section 5 of the Limitation Act does not apply to such an application and that the Court had the inherent power under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the dismissal of the suit. I do not think that that power extends to a case in which the aggrieved party had had a definite remedy open to him but has failed to resort to it within the time allowed by law and so has lost it.

Moreover, on the petition of the 29th January it does not appear that the appellants are entitled to relief. It is clear from that petition itself and from affidavit annexed to it that the appellants were fully aware that all suits were to be taken up at Yamethin, and that their Pleader was in fact at Yamethin on the 22nd December and attended the Court of the Additional District

Judge. He could very easily have found out by which Judge the suit would be heard and even if he failed to do so before it had been dismissed either he or the appellants themselves could very easily have discovered afterwards that it had been dismissed and have filed the application within the period allowed by law.

It is noticeable that no affidavit by the Pleader himself was filed.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs. Advocate's fee three gold mohurs.

Receiver—Account—Vouchers—Uneconomical management—Objection—Proper course for dissatisfied party

A Receiver should produce vouchers in support of his expenditure. The vouchers will be admitted as evidence of the payment of the sums therein specified, and credit given to the accounting party in the account, unless the other side shows some reasonable ground for impeaching the vouchers, but if any party objects, the affidavit or oral evidence of the person who received the money is required, and if this cannot be had, then proof must be given of his signature to the voucher [p 420, col 1].

Cookes v Cookes, (1863) 11 W R (Eng.) 871, 9 Jur (N S) 813, 3 N R 90, 134 R R 813 and Bingham v. Clanmorris, 1 Moll. 20, relied on.

The question that the management by a Receiver has not been economical does not properly arise when he submits his account in order that it may be passed. In other words, questions with regard to the soundness or prudence of the system of management adopted by a Receiver or charges of wilful default or neglect are not matters that can be disposed of in the shape of exceptions to account [p 420, col 2].

Coomar. Sattya Sankar Ghosal v Ranee Golap-monee Debee, 5 C W-N 223, relied upon.

The proper course open to a party litigant, who is dissatisfied with the mode of management, is to draw up a scheme and to submit it for the orders of the Court. [Ibid.].

Dr Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Heramba Chandra Guha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—These are exceptions to the accounts submitted by the Receiver appointed by this Court in respect of the subject-matter of Appeal from Original Decree No. 234 of 1922. The order was made for the appointment of the Receiver on the 26th March, 1923, and we directed him to submit his accounts every three months. The accounts for the first three months are now before us. There is an abstract statement which shows that the receipts exceeded the expenditure by Rs. 138-5 annas. The account books from which the abstract has been prepared have also been produced. The objections taken to the accounts may be grouped under two categories, namely, first, that the vouchers in support of the expenditure have not been produced; and, secondly, that the management has not been economical.

As regards the first objection, it has not been disputed that the vouchers must be produced. The principles applicable are stated in the well-known work by Daniel on Chancery Practice, 1914, Volume I, page 920. "The account is vouched by the production of the proper vouchers such as receipts. It seems that the vouchers will be admitted as evidence of the payment of the sums therein specified, and credit given to the accounting party in the account, unless the other side shows some reasonable ground for impeaching the vouchers; but if any party objects, the affidavit or oral evidence of the person who received the money is required, and if this cannot be had, then proof must be given of his signature to the voucher."

This is supported by the decisions in Cooks v. Cooks (1) and Bingham v. Clanmorris (2). A similar view was adopted by this Court in the case of Baroda Kanta Sarkar v. Rashman Dasi (3) where it was pointed out that the Receiver must not merely show that he paid certain sums as litigation expenses, but also furnish details of expenditure. The Receiver before us has undertaken to produce the vouchers in the course of a week. When they are produced they will be open to examination by all the parties concerned.

As regards the second objection, we are of opinion that the question does not properly arise when a Receiver submits his account in order that it may be passed. In support of this view reference may be made to the decision of Mr. Justice Sale in the case of Coomar Sattya Sankar Ghosal v. Ranee Golapmonee Debee (4) where it was pointed out that the questions with regard to the soundness or prudence of the system of management adopted by a Receiver or charges of wilful default or neglect are not matters that can be disposed of in the shape of exceptions to account. In the present case, the Receiver states that he has continued the management of the estate in the condition in which it was handed over to him. In these circumstances, the proper course open to a party litigant who is dissatisfied with the mode of management, is to draw up a scheme and to submit it for the orders of the Court.

The matter is adjourned till Friday next.

No order can be made to the prejudice of any person who is interested in a common interest, such as a partnership, without that person or his legal representative being on the record [p 422, col 1].

It is not necessary in every appeal arising out of a suit for partition or dissolution of partnership to have all the parties on the record, especially for the purpose of setting aside a money-decree where no taking of accounts inter se is required and no relief is claimed from the party not on the record. But if the Court of Appeal finds it necessary to have a party on the record, the Court may order him or his legal representative to be joined and may dismiss the appeal if the appellant fails to comply with the order [p 422, col 2].

Messrs. L. A. Govinda Raghava Iyer and E. S. Veera Raghava Iyer, for the Appellants.

Messrs. B. Somayya, and T. R. Arunachala Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought Original Suit No. 48 of 1917 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot to recover Rs. 3,162 as money advanced to a partnership together with interest on profits thereon. The First Court gave him a decree for Rs. 2,845 together with interest on Rs. 1,745 against four defendants. Of these four defendants Nos. 1 and 2 appealed. The third defendant died after the joint appeal by him and the other two defendants had been filed. His legal representative, who was the fourth defendant, did not appeal, and he was not made a party to the appeal of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The District Judge held that the appeal abated because the legal representative of the deceased was not brought on the record within the time allowed by law. In doing so, he seems to have overlooked O. XLI, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, which provides that, where there are more defendants than one in a suit and the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the defendants, any one of the defendants may appeal from the whole decree and thereupon the Appellate Court may reverse the decree in favour of all the defendants. The District Judge relied on the decision in Raj Chunder Sen v. Ganga Das Seal and Rangati Dhur v. Raj Chunder Sen (1) which was a case of an appeal in a partnership suit. The Privy Council held that, as the right to sue did not survive against the other defendants alone and the appeals could not proceed in the absence of a representative of Abhoy Churn Chowdhury, who was one of the partners, the appeals were rightly dismissed by the Calcutta High Court. It appears that in that case Abhoy Churn Chowdhury died, and as the Privy Council observed, accounts had to be taken and there were complicated questions as to the respective relations of the parties inter se which had to be decided. These questions could not be decided without the legal representative of Abhoy Churn Chowdhury being on the record. As frequently occurs in a suit for partition or for dissolution of partnership, the decree provided for payment of sums of money to some of the defendants, and Abhoy Churn Chowdhury as a partner was found to have Rs. 1,740 due to him. The partnership account could not be unsettled and a fresh settlement made without all the parties to whom money had to be paid or who should make contributions, being on the record. In Ranga Srinivasa Chari v. Gnanaprakasa Mudaliar (2) this case has been distinguished as being a ruling on the point that a litigation cannot proceed without representatives of a deceased party to a final and complete adjudication. (2) 30 M 67, 2 M L T 36.

v. Vaithilinga Mudaliar (3) a Bench of this Court set aside a decree, as regards the whole of the plaintiff's claim and not merely in respect of the interest of those appellants whose appeals had not abated, observing that the terms of O. XLI, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, were wide enough to justify such a course. For the respondent it is argued that in every case of a suit for partition or partnership it is necessary to have all the parties on the record and that, if some of them will not join as appellants, they must be made respondents for the purpose of finally settling all the questions at issue. This is too broad a proposition to be accepted. It is common sense and sound law that no order can be made to the prejudice of any person who is interested in a common interest, such as a partnership, without that party or his legal representative being on the record. Under O. XLI, r. 20, if the Court had found that the lower Court's decree could not be varied or reversed without the legal representative of the third defendant being on the record, the Court might have ordered his legal representative to be brought on the record, giving a time for the appellants to bring him on the record, and, if the appellants failed to do so, the Court might have dismissed the appeal. But the District Judge does not put the dismissal of the appeal on that ground. Although the plaint contains an allegation as to the existence of a partnership, the decree that was asked for was for a declaration that the partnership should be dissolved from date of suit, and for the payment of a certain lump sum advanced towards the firm's capital. There was no prayer for taking accounts due to each of the partners. In the written statement the defendants denied that any partnership subsisted. They denied also that the plaintiff paid the sum of Rs. 1,745 at any time to them. If that case is true the defendants had a common interest to have the decree in the plaintiff's favour, which was in the form of a decree for payment of a sum of money by four persons jointly and severally, set aside and no case for taking accounts would arise, that is, on the supposition that no advance was made by the plaintiff and that no partnership agreement with him ever existed. O. XLI, r. 4 lays down the test of the right of some of the defendants to appeal from a decree common to all of them, viz., whether the decree appealed from proceeded on any ground common to all of them. Sri Nath Pal v. Hari Charn Pal (4) quoted by the respondent is a case in which in a partnership suit, where accounts had to be taken and the plaintiff's share had to be determined, one of the respondents was added in time. As I have already pointed out, the present case is one in which one of the defendants did not join as an appellant. If it was necessary to have him on the record as a respondent the Court might have directed him to be joined, but for the purpose of setting aside a decree for money in the plaintiff's favour against several defendants without any taking of accounts inter se it would not be necessary to have a party, from whom the appellants claimed no relief, added. The appellants do not want a decree to be made against the fourth defendant. They do not ask for any interference with his rights. Nothing is due to him under the decree and he thus cannot lose anything by any variation of the decree that may be made in appellant's favour in consequence of this appeal. The setting aside of the money-decree and the dismissal of the plaintiff's whole suit, which the appellants seek to obtain by this appeal is thus not a relief requiring the presence of the third defendant or his legal representative before it can be given. The lower Appellate Court's decree must, therefore, be reversed. This second appeal must be allowed and the first appeal remanded to the lower Appellate Court for fresh hearing and disposal on the merits. The respondent must pay the appellant's costs in this Court. Costs in the lower Court will abide and follow the result. The appellants will get a refund of the Court-fees paid for this appeal.

versusMA SHWE PON—RESPONDENT.Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Co-defendants—Conflict of interest—Rights inter se, decision of—Res judicata.

The decision in a case where there is a conflict of interest between the co-defendants, one of whom actively helps the plaintiff as against the other defendant, and where it is necessary to adjudicate between the defendants inter se to give appropriate relief to the plaintiff, operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the co-defendants [p 424, col. 2]

First appeal against a decree of the District Court, Tharrawaddy, in C. R. No. 51 of 1923.

Messrs. Covasjee and Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Robertson, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Heald, J.—The matters which led to the present dispute have been before the Court many times and may be summarised as follows: There were two claimants to the estate of Shwe Mya and his wife Ma Shwe I, namely, Maung Thwe present appellant, and Tun Pe, who is now dead. Both claimed to be adopted sons and ultimately the Privy Council held both had established their claims and that they were co-heirs. The Chief Court had held that Tun Pe was the sole heir and while the appeal to the Privy Council was pending, Tun Pe, who had been appointed administrator to the estate sold certain lands to the present respondent Ma Shwe Pon. Appellant was in possession of the lands and refused to recognise respondent's title, so respondent filed a suit to recover the lands, and obtained a decree for possession. Before she obtained the decree she had already mortgaged the lands to a Chetty and to Mr. Robertson, who now appears as her Advocate. The Chetty sued on the mortgage and impleaded both respondent and appellant, as well as the second mortgagee. Appellant, who by that time had succeeded to the interest of Tun Pe, pleaded that Tun Pe was not owner of the land, and that in any case the sale was ineffective as having been made pendente lite. The Chief Court held that, because Tun Pe was administrator of the estate at the time when he sold the lands the sale was effective, and a mortgage-decree recognising both the mortgagees was passed. Before the final judgment in the mortgage-suit had been given in the Chief Court, respondent, who had been ousted from possession of the lands, had filed another suit against appellant claiming possession on the strength of the sale of them to her by Tun Pe and mesne profits. Appellant again disputed respondent's title on the ground that transfer by Tun Pe was fraudulent; and that an order for possession which he had obtained in certain miscellaneous proceedings of 1918 barred the suit in being res judicata. He also pleaded that the mortgagees ought to have been made parties to the present suit, and he denied that respondent had any right to the mesne profits. The lower Court held that because the question whether or not the sale by Tun Pe to respondent was fraudulent had been decided between the parties in respondent's first suit against appellant to recover the lands that question was res judicata and appellant could not be allowed to raise it again as a defence in the present suit. It also found that because the mortgagees had been paid off there was no need for them to be joined in the present suit. It held that the order which appellant had obtained in the miscellaneous proceedings was only an interlocutory order which did not finally declare appellant's title to the land, and finding that respondent was owner of the lands, and that, therefore, she was entitled to mesne profits and to interest thereon, it gave her a decree for possession and for Rs. 5,561 with interest thereon from the date of the institution of the suit to the date of realization with costs.

The appellant appeals against that decree on the grounds that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the sale by Tun Pe conferred any title on respondent, that in spite of the decision of the Chief Court he was still entitled to impugn the transfer by Tun Pe, that that transfer was void as having been effected pendente lite and that he was rightfully in possession of the lands as owner.

Respondent filed a cross-objection to the Court's assessment of the mesne profits. Appellant's learned Advocate admitted that all the questions raised in the appeal were decided in the judgment of the Chief Court in the mortgage-suit¹ but he suggested that they were not res judicata because appellant was a party to that suit not in his personal capacity but merely as heir of Tun Pe, and also because that suit was not a suit between him and respondent, but between the Chetty on the one side and him and respondent on the other. I do not think that there is any substance in these suggestions. The substantial issues in the former suit were exactly those which appellant raises in the present suit. Respondent was practically a formal party to the mortgage-suit, she did not deny the mortgage or the Chetty's right to a mortgage-decree. The Chetty as against appellant represented respondent and the matter in dispute was respondent's title. So far as appellant was concerned the decision in that suit finally decided that respondent and not appellant was owner of the lands, and appellant is bound by that decision both in his personal and in his representative capacity. He could not in his representative capacity have raised the issues which he did not raise in that suit because he would have been estopped and it is clear that he actually raised the questions in his personal capacity, the same capacity in which he now desires to raise them again.

I would, therefore, hold that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

The cross-objection has not been pressed though it has not been abandoned.

The matter of interest is in the Court's discretion. I see no reason to think that the lower Court exercised its discretion wrongly.

The question of the amount of mesne profits which should have been decreed for the season 1918-19 has not been argued and I see no reason to hold that the decision of the lower Court was mistaken.

I would, therefore, dismiss the above objection but make no order for costs in respect of it.

Lentaigne, J.—I concur in the judgment of my brother Heald in this case. I am satisfied that the appellant Maung Thwe was made a defendant in the previous mortgage-suit Civil Regular No. 10 of 1919 not merely as an heir of Tun Pe deceased, but also in his personal capacity and this is made clear on a perusal of paragraph 7 of the plaint in that suit. It is also clear that the questions in issue in that suit between Maung Thwe and the other parties were mainly issues which could only arise in his personal capacity. I am satisfied that Ma Shwe Pon and the Chetty were in effect making common cause against Maung Thwe in that suit. Ma Shwe Pon admitted the Chetty's claim against her and against Maung Thwe and that claim was based on Ma Shwe Pon's alleged rights as purchaser of the property both as against Maung Thwe and the exclusion of Maung Thwe. Though she was not taking an active part in the conduct of the case, she knew that the Chetty had a common interest with her and was actively prosecuting her claim and she was justified in allowing him to do so.

The decision in Kandiyil Cheriya Chandu v. The Zamorin of Calicut (1) is authority for the proposition that the previous decision would operate as res judicata if the co-defendant had actively supported the plaintiff in the previous case as against the other defendant; and I see no reason why the same principle should not apply where the active support was limited to filing a written statement admitting the plaintiff's claim and leaving it to the plaintiff to press the claim in which both he and such defendant were jointly interested.

In the case of Ramachandra Narayan v. Narayan Mahadev (2) West, J., pointed out that, "where an adjudication between the defendants is necessary to give the appropriate relief to the plaintiff, there must be such an adjudication—Cottingham v. Earl of Shrewsbury (3), and in such a case the adjudication will be res judicata between the defendants as well as between the plaintiff and the defendants. But for this effect to arise, there must be a conflict of interest amongst the defendants and a judgment defining the real rights and obligations of the defendants inter se. Without necessity the judgment will not be res judicata amongst the defendants, nor will it be res judicata amongst them by mere inference from the fact that they have collectively been defeated in resisting a claim to a share made against them as a group." Though these remarks were obiter, I think that they correctly represent the law and I find they have been adopted by another Judge in a case reported in an unofficial report Sukh Dial v. Bhopi (4). In the previous case in which Maung Thwe and Ma Shwe Pon were defendants, it was necessary that the rights of Maung Thwe and Ma Shwe Pon should be decided inter se to enable the Court to grant the Chetty the decree.

For the above reasons and as it is admitted that all questions raised on this appeal were decided by the Chief Court in that suit against the appellant Maung Thwe, I concur in holding that the present appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—This is a suit upon a foreign judgment of the Colombo Court against the first defendant. The first defendant and his brother who were trading in partnership executed a power-of-attorney to one Sheikh Abdul Rahiman under which he was empowered to sue in the Courts of Ceylon and to appear before any Court or Courts of Justice either as plaintiff or defendant etc. The power is, a very wide one and gives the agent very full powers to represent the principals. Under the provisions of that power, Abdul Rahiman appointed one Abdul Guddus as his sub-agent during his absence from Ceylon. A suit was filed in 1915 on four promissory notes against Abdul Rahiman and Abdul Guddus, but upon their pleading that they were merely agents of first defendant's firm, another suit was brought against the first defendant. Notice of the suit was served on Abdul Guddus as first defendant's agent and the judgment on which the present suit is based was passed in his absence.

The first question for consideration is whether the first defendant had submitted to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court, and on this point I must agree with the learned District Judge that he did so by executing the power-of-attorney in favour of Abdul Rahiman empowering the latter to conduct litigation in the Ceylon Courts, namely, in a place where the agent was conducting business for his principals, and it is clearly a contract binding him to appear in those Courts and amounts to submission to the jurisdiction of those Courts. In this connection I would refer to the case reported as Ramanathan Chettyar v. Kalimuthu Pillay (1).

The next question raised for the respondent is that the foreign judgment sued on was not one obtained on the merits. Ordinarily, a judgment delivered ex parte is deemed to be one on the merits, but it is contended here that in summary suits similar to those provided for by O. XXXVII of the Civil Procedure Code an ex parte judgment cannot be deemed to be one passed on the merits. Reliance is placed on the case reported as Perum Viswanatha Reddi v. Keymer (2) the decision in which was confirmed by the Privy Council in Keymer v. Viswanatham Reddi (3). In that case a defence had been put in, but it was ordered to be struck out because of defendant's failure to answer interrogatories. The decision given in these circumstances was held to be one not on the merits. There are no doubt some observations in the judgment of this Court which would go to show that a foreign judgment passed in default of appearance is not a decree on the merits, and two cases are therein referred to as supporting this proposition. One of these is The Delta (4) and the other is The Challenge and the Due d'Armale (5). In the first of these cases, the foreign judgments had not been delivered when the suit was filed in England and also it was held that the evidence of the French and Italian Advocates examined left it doubtful whether the foreign judgment in that case would have, even in France, or Italy, the force of res judicata. In the second case it appears that the defendants had not submitted to jurisdiction. In the judgment of the Privy Council which is reported as Keymer v. Viswanatham Reddi (3) their Lordships in referring to the question under section 13 (b), Civil Procedure Code, state that that section refers to "those cases where for one reason or another the controversy raised in the action has not in fact been the subject of direct adjudication by the Court." From this it would appear that it is necessary in the first place that some controversy should be raised in the action and in the second place that after it has been raised it should not have been finally decided. This principle is the same as that enunciated by Lord Herschell in Nourion v. Freeman (6): "In a Court of competent jurisdiction, where according to its established procedure the whole merits of the case were open, at all events, to the parties, however much they may have failed to take advantage of them, or may have waived any of their rights, a final adjudication has been given that a debt or obligation exists which cannot thereafter in that Court be disputed, and can only be questioned in an appeal to a higher Tribunal." It will be seen that in accordance with this principle, ex parte decrees are by no means necessarily decrees not passed upon the merits. It is only when a defence has been raised and for some reason or another has not been adjudicated upon that the decision can be said to be not upon the merits. In other instances of ex parte decrees, they must be deemed to be decrees passed upon the merits. In the present case no appearance at all was put in on behalf of the first defendant and the case was allowed to proceed ex parte and consequently it must be deemed to have been passed upon the merits.

A further question is raised, namely, that the first defendant had no notice at all of the suit and that consequently the whole decree is a nullity as coming under section 13 (d), namely, "Where the proceedings in which the judgment was obtained are opposed to natural justice". A good deal of argument has been addressed to the question as to whether at the time that the notice was served upon him, Abdul Guddus was the agent of the first defendant. It appears that he was appointed as first defendant's agent and had acted as such and there is no evidence to show that that agency had ceased at the time when the notice was served upon him. The foreign Court held that the notice was sufficient, and that the decision must be taken to be correct, in the absence of any other evidence to the contrary. If there was any irregularity in the service of the notice, that point cannot be raised in the Courts of this country as a ground for questioning the validity of the foreign decree, as was held in Pemberton v. Hughes (7) where it was remarked by Lindley, M. R., at page 790: "If a judgment is pronounced by a foreign Court over persons within its jurisdiction and in a matter with which it is competent to deal, English Courts never investigate the propriety of the proceedings in the foreign Court, unless they offend against English views of substantial justice." If first defendant had definitely proved that Abdul Guddus was in no sense his agent at the time of the service of the notice and that consequently he was totally unaware of the proceedings in the Colombo Court this might be an answer to the validity of the judgment, but this has not been shown and consequently I must hold that the judgment is valid.

In this view, I think it is unnecessary to discuss the further question raised as to whether the death of first defendant's brother terminated Abdul Rahimman's agency and consequently the sub-agency of Abdul Guddus. They were at one time, admittedly first defendant's agents and it is not shown that they had ceased to be so at the time the notice was served on the latter.

The appeal is accordingly allowed and the decree of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal from an order of the District Court, Magwe, in C. R. No. 15 of 1919.

Mr. Ormiston, for the Appellant.

Mr. Higinbotham, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In Civil Regular Suit No. 28 of 1912 of the District Court, Magwe, before the Additional Judge at Yenangyaung, the respondents obtained a decree for Rs. 42,899-8-0 against the appellant with costs. The decree was dated the 23rd September, 1913. It directed payment of interest on the sum decreed at 6 per cent. per annum from the commencement of the suit to the date of judgment, which was the same as the date of decree.

The appellant appealed to the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma in Civil Appeal No. 415 of 1913, which was not decided until the 8th March 1917, when the decree was set aside and the suit dismissed. Meanwhile, in Civil Execution No. 19 of 1913, of the District Court, the respondent had applied for execution and certain property was attached. It is noted in the diary under date 8th December, 1913, that the appellant applied for stay of execution under O. XII, r. 6. This appears to have been an oral application, for no written application is on the file. After considerable delay sale was stayed, the appellant furnishing security, on the 17th August, 1914. The Judge then ordered "attachment may be removed." On the Judicial Commissioner setting aside the decree, the execution proceedings were closed on the 16th April, 1914.

The respondents appealed to the Privy Council, who, on the 30th May, set aside the decree of the Judicial Commissioner and restored that of the District Court.

On the 18th December, 1919, the respondents again took out execution in Civil Execution No. 15 of 1919 of the District Court. In this application they claimed interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of institution of the suit to the date of the judgment of the Privy Council. The appellant, the judgment-debtor objected, that interest was payable only from the date of institution to the date of the decree of the District Court.

On the 14th June 1920, the Additional Judge directed the appellant to pay into Court the sum of Rs. 49,645-2-0 decretal amount and costs, including interest up to the date of the decree of the District Court. The subsequent interest claimed was disallowed, but no reasons were given for this order. This money was paid in and was afterwards disbursed to the respondents on the 15th July, 1920, and the proceedings were closed.

The respondents then appealed to the Judicial Commissioner in Civil First Appeal No. 580 of 1920.

The learned Judicial Commissioner in his judgment said—

"The appellants claim in execution not only interest up to the date of the District Court's decree which was allowed them by that decree, but also interest up to the date of the Privy Council's judgment. The District Court's judgment is silent as to interest after decree and such interest appears to have been claimed in the application for execution under a misapprehension. However, when it was discovered that the decree did not allow this interest it was contended that appellants were nevertheless entitled to it on the ground that at the instance of the respondent the District Court had improperly stayed execution after the appeal to this Court had been filed, which it had no power to do, and which resulted in the appellants being kept out of their money for a long time."

I would note here that the fact of this contention being raised does not appear on the record of Execution No. 19 of 1913. It may be presumed that the fact was stated to the Judicial Commissioner by the Advocates for both sides who were the same who had appeared before the District Court.

The learned Judicial Commissioner said later—

"On the merits I would say in the first place that the appellants' claim, though calculated on the basis of interest in the application for execution has been altered verbally into a claim to interest, his interest could not be entertained either in execution or in a separate suit, as such a claim is barred under section 34. What the appellants allege is that by an order passed by the District Court at the instance of the respondent they were debarred from reaping the fruit of their decree for several years and they claim damages on that account."

MAUNG PH V. MA HNIT.

The learned Judge held that the question between the parties was one for decision under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and remanded the case to the District Court. There was a delay of several months in taking up the case again, due partly to the neglect of the District Court itself and partly to the failure of the respondents to move that Court to proceed with the case.

The District Court then framed and tried issues and finally gave the respondents a decree for Rs. 17,445-12-0 as damages. The damages assessed were equivalent to interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum on the amount decreed from the date of the District Court's original decree to the date of payment—3rd July, 1920.

Against this decree the appellants now appeal.

Regarded as one for damages the respondents' claim seems to me entirely unsustainable. Leaving aside the general question of a party's liability for an erroneous order of a Court passed at his instance, we find in this case that the order was not passed at his instance. He applied under O. XXI, r. 6 (2) for stay of sale. The Court, as the Judicial Commissioner has pointed out, was bound to stay the sale on the appellant furnishing security, which he did. That the Court went beyond this and removed the attachment was no fault of the appellant.

Moreover this erroneous order of the Court was not what delayed the realization of their money by the respondents. It had, in fact, no effect whatever on that. The sale, as I have said, must have been stayed, and when the Judicial Commissioner reversed the decree of the District Court, the attachment, had it still subsisted, must necessarily have been removed.

The delay was, in fact, due solely to the length of time occupied in the appeals to the Judicial Commissioner and the Privy Council.

Mr. Higinbotham has not supported the decree as one for damages. He urges that the question should be regarded as one in the nature of restitution. His argument is that had the respondents been able to realize the amount decreed within a short period after the original decree they would since have been enjoying the money and should be put into the same position as if they had so realized it. He has cited certain decisions but they all were in cases where actual restitution was in question and not merely hypothetical restitution. They might have been applicable to this case if the respondents had succeeded in realising the amount decreed and had, then on the reversal of the decree by the Judicial Commissioner, been compelled to re-pay the money to the appellant. That, however, did not happen. I am unable to regard this case as one of restitution or as coming within the scope of section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code.

When all is said the reality is that the Court, in execution, has granted interest on the decretal amount from the date of decree to the date of payment, such interest not having been allowed in the original decree. But for section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code I should have been inclined to hold that it is within the inherent power of the Court to do this. But section 34 (2) expressly says that where interest subsequent to the decree is not allowed in the decree it shall be deemed to have been refused. I do not think the Court could be held to have inherent power to do anything which would have the effect of nullifying an express provision of law.

I would allow this appeal and set aside the decree of the District Court, but would direct both parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Way, right of—Sale of land—Boundary described as pathway.

The purchaser of a piece of land, one boundary of which is given in the sale-deed "as a pathway", is entitled to a right of way over the pathway.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Coimbatore, in A. S. No. 92 of 1921, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirupur, in O. S. No. 918 of 1919.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri and C. V. Mahadeva Iyer, for the Appellant.
 Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and K. V. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Rengasamy Chetty sold to the first defendant under Exhibit I, dated the 26th June 1917, a strip of land about 102 feet long 21 feet wide having a frontage on a public road, out of a large block of building vacant site of which he was the owner. The portion purchased by the first defendant I shall call site No. A. The land exclusive of site No. A may for the purpose of this appeal be regarded as consisting of two parts; (1) The portion south of and contiguous to what was sold to the first defendant opening also on the public road. (This I shall call site No. B); and (2) the bulk of the property at the back of the site No. A and the site No. B to which access from the road was over the said site No. B (this I shall call site No. C.)

Three days subsequent to the sale of site No. A, Rengasami Chetty sold the remainder of the block, sites Nos. B and C, to certain persons from whom the present plaintiffs derive title. On the site No. C, the plaintiffs constructed a ginning factory. The first defendant to start with, built a small house facing the road on her own site, site No. A, leaving the rest of her land at the back of her house as an open space. She then built another house on the vacant land and as it has no frontage on the road, she claimed a right of way over the site No. B.

The short question to be decided is, whether she is entitled to this right of way? The basis of her claim is the fact that in the sale-deed executed in her favour, the southern boundary of the site conveyed to her is described to be "pathway 18 feet in breadth which I am going to set apart." The lower Courts having negatived her right, she has preferred this second appeal. It is found that there were negotiations at the same time in regard to the sale to the first defendant as well as to the plaintiff's predecessors-in-title. Whether the first defendant has acquired the right she claims depends entirely upon the construction of the conveyance in her favour. In regard to the surrounding circumstances, two facts seem, in my opinion, to be of outstanding importance. (1). The land sold to the first defendant was about 102 to 105 feet in length and it was vacant building land. It was not to be expected that the first defendant would only build one house upon it. If more than one house was to be built, the access to the house at the back of the first house would naturally be over the site No. B. (2). The sites Nos. B and C were not laid out in building plots, but on the contrary they were regarded as forming one block to be conveyed to one purchaser. That being so, there was no significance in describing site No. B as an intended pathway unless it was a pathway intended also for the use of the first defendant.

These two circumstances strongly support the first defendant's case. On a construction of the words relied on, I am of opinion that her contention must prevail. In Espley v. Wilkes (1), Kelly, C. B. quotes with approval the following observations of Mansfield, C. J., in Roberts v. Karr (2).

KUPAKKAL v. MATHAN, CHETTIAR.

"If you (the lessor) have told me in your lease this piece of land abuts on the road, you cannot be allowed to say that this land on which it abuts is not a road". In the same case the observations of Lawrence, J., are also cited.

"If a man buys a piece of ground described as abutting upon a road, does he not contemplate the right of coming out into the road through any part of the premises?" The facts of Espley v. Wilkes (1) are these: The plaintiff demised by a lease under which the defendant claimed "All that plot of land bounded on the east and north by the newly made streets a plan whereof is indorsed on these presents". On the indorsed plan, the site of the new street was shown and was marked as "new streets". The lease contained covenants by the lessee to build two houses on the land. The plaintiff afterwards granted to the plaintiff a lease of the land comprised in the site of one of the proposed new streets and the plaintiff enclosed the land so that the defendant was unable to reach the east side of his premises. In an action against the defendant for pulling down this obstruction, it was held that under the defendant's lease, a right of way was granted along the site of the proposed new streets to his premises. Kelly, C. B., observed that the grantor was estopped from denying that the strips of land, his property, were what he described them to be, that is to say "streets" which they could not be, unless there be a way through and along them. In Robert v. Karr (2) which is referred to in Espley v. Wilkes (1), it was held that the grantor and those claiming from him were precluded from preventing the grantee to come out into the road over the strip of land there in question.

In Furness Ry Co., v. Cumberland Co-operative Building Society (3), the land which was conveyed was at the date of the conveyance waste building land on the outskirts of a town. The plan showed G and M streets. The site of the intended streets was the property of the vendor. It was held that the conveyance granted to the purchaser a right of way.

In Gogarty v. Horkens (4), of the two plots demised to the lessee, plot A was described as bounded on the east by "an intended road to be 38 feet wide intersecting the said lot from lot B" and lot B was described as being bounded on the west "by the said intended road 38 feet wide intersecting the said lot from lot A". Upon the map annexed to the lease the aforesaid intersecting passage was delineated as being 38 feet wide and was described as "the proposed new road reserved by" the lessor. It was held that from the words of the lease there was to be implied a grant of an easement of way across the intersecting space. Harding v. Wilson (5) is an old case which is somewhat inconsistent with the rulings referred to above. But its authority has been doubted both in Furness Ry. Co. v. Cumberland Co-operative Building Society (3) and Gogarty v. Horkens (4). I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the first defendant ought to succeed. The plaintiffs propose to construct a wall on both sides of the pathway, this they cannot do. They cannot have an injunction restraining the first defendant from resisting the construction of this wall. In the plaint it is said that the first defendant has been tying her cattle in the pathway and placing tubs and pots on the way and committing several acts of nuisance. It is clear that the first defendant cannot use the pathway for these purposes. Subject to this reservation the plaintiff's suit must fail.

The second appeal is allowed with costs throughout.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal by the plaintiffs, who are co-sharers malguzars of Mouza Attar. The respondents are also co-sharers in the village. The village has been imperfectly partitioned. Defendant No. 2 is the Sadar lambardar of the village. The abadi of the village is, however, held in shamlat. One Lachmansing, son of Ramsing, Rajput, was a resident of the said village and had a plot of abadi land in his occupation. He left the village and went away. Thereupon the defendants on 1st February 1922 took possession of the whole of the abadi plot and put up tappars on a portion of it and also took forcible possession of the vacant malguzari abadi land. Hence this suit for joint possession of the vacant land.

The defence was that the lambardar malguzar realised Rs. 25 as nazrana and permitted him to occupy the site of the house which was once the property of Lachmansing and that as the defendant was in the possession of abadi land much less than his proportionate share of the land, he took possession of the other piece also. In reply, the plaintiffs denied the alleged payment of Rs. 25 as nazrana for the lands to the lambardar and the alleged consent, if any, is said to be collusive. The Court of first instance found the plea unproved but the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed as not maintainable. The lower Appellate Court addressed itself to the consideration of the question whether in the circumstances of the case plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for joint possession and for the removal of the defendant's tappars. After discussing the law applicable, that Court came to the conclusion that plaintiffs were entitled to joint possession of the two plots in suit but declined to order demolition of the tappars. Accordingly the plaintiffs got a decree for joint possession of the land but not with a direction for the removal of the tappars. The plaintiffs' complaint and second appeal is that the defendant should have been directed to pull down or remove the tappars.

The present suit was filed on 22nd September 1922, i.e., 8 months after the cause of action arose. The special defence raised by the defendant that the lambardar had consented to his taking the two plots has been held not proved. The position, therefore, is that if one co-sharer out of several, assumes actual occupancy of a portion of the joint property is he liable to be ousted from possession at the instance of the other co-sharer? In other words the question reduces itself to this; whether one co-sharer has not a right to oust another co-sharer from actual possession of what is only a portion of the joint property. So far as the plaintiffs' right to joint possession is concerned the defendant does not deny it and he has no objection to the decree for joint possession being passed against him. What he objected to was a decree asking him to demolish the tappars constructed by him. The lower Appellate Court has held that the tappars were raised by the defendant before suit and that no objection was taken by the plaintiffs or other co-sharers to their construction and that they could not, therefore, now insist upon their demolition. The lower Appellate Court has further found that plaintiffs have not alleged or proved any special damage or injury which would entitle them to insist upon the demolition of the tappars and that plaintiffs have also failed to take timely action for restraining the defendant from erecting the tappars.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the granting of a decree for joint possession is quite discretionary with Courts. If the lower Appellate Court after taking into consideration all the facts and the circumstances of the case has thought fit to refuse a decree directing the defendant to pull down the superstructure, it is contended that this Court, sitting as a second Appellate Court, ought not to interfere in such a discretionary matter, unless it appeared that the lower Appellate Court has exercised its discretion arbitrarily which would call for such interference in second appeal.

The ordinary rule seems to be that the co-owner who has taken up the exclusive occupancy should not be deprived of such exclusive occupation except on very strong grounds. In Kes Patil v. Sakharam (1) it was held that one co-sharer cannot sue another co-sharer as a trespasser to oust him from land which belongs to both of them. In Sheo Narayan Lal v. Mahomed Abdul-Rafi Khan (2) it has been held that where an occupancy tenant executed a zarpeshgi lease in favour of one of the co-sharers and died without leaving an heir, the co-sharer in possession could not be ousted by the lambardar in as much as he in his position as a co-sharer was entitled to possession of land in suit. In Dwijendra Narain Roy v. Purnendu Narain Roy (3) it was pointed out that no inflexible rule of law that the sole occupation of a part of the joint estate by one co-owner inevitably implies an ouster of the other co-owner can be laid down, and further, that it could not be also laid down as a universal proposition of law that the erection of a substantial building by one co-owner upon a portion of a joint property without the assent of the other co-owner, is conclusive evidence of ouster. What constitutes ouster in each particular case must, therefore, depend upon its special facts. In Padamsing v. Sahadeo Sao (4) Ismay, J. C., referred to Lala Bishwambarlal v. Rajaram (5) as an authority for the view that where two parties were joint owners of land and one of them erected a wall upon the land without obtaining the consent of his co-sharer the Court could very well refuse to order demolition of the wall in the absence of evidence to show that injury had been done to the co-tenant of the builder by its erection.

In the case before me there is a finding by the lower Appellate Court that there is neither plea nor proof of any injury or special damage having been caused to the plaintiffs. It appears that the tappars have been constructed at the cost of at least Rs. 150 as admitted by the plaintiffs-appellants in the lower Appellate Court. Finding that the defendant was spending his money over the construction of the tappars it was the plaintiffs' duty to have objected to it, at the very outset, and thus prevented him from making his outlay. They could not remain quiescent, while defendant was constructing an expensive superstructure for the beneficial enjoyment of a portion of the joint property. Plaintiffs were bound to have made their election at the earliest opportunity; not having done so they induced by their conduct and in action a belief in the mind of the defendant that they have waived or abandoned their right. Under these circumstances I do not think this is a fit case for interference in second appeal in what was a purely discretionary matter. I, therefore, decline to order the demolition of the tappars erected by the defendant.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs. The costs in the Courts below will be paid as already ordered.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the Court of the District Judge of Kistna at Masulipatam (in Appeal Suit No. 242 of 1921) preferred against the order passed in Execution Petition No. 1046 of 1920 in Summary Suit No. 77 of 1917 on the file of the Court of the Deputy Collector of Bhimavaram.

The appellant is decree holder in Summary Suit No. 77 of 1917. A collateral High Court judgment had decided that his judgment-debtor had never had possession of the property for the rent of which, the appellant has obtained a decree. Accordingly the lower Court held that the decree was superseded following Sree Raja Bommadevara Venkata Narasimha Nayudu v. Ravi Venkatappiah (1). That ruling has now been reversed by the Privy Council in Bommadevara Naganna Naidu v. Ravi Venkatappiah (2) and the respondent no longer attacks the decree on this ground. The old principle stands good that an Executing Court cannot go behind the decree. Respondent contends, however, that the decree holder is estopped from executing his decree against this particular property, because on some previous occasion his agent endorsed on a notice of sale that the property need not be sold as there were other claimants to it. It is difficult to see how this could amount to estoppel, and the point was not apparently pressed in either of the lower Courts. The judgment-debtor adduced no oral evidence and relied upon the ruling in Sree Rajah Bommadevara Venkata Narasimha Nayudu v. Ravi Venkatappiah (1). If persons other than the judgment-debtor have a right to the property, they have their usual remedies.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This Rule is directed against an order of the Additional District Judge of Howrah rejecting an application by the petitioners for stay of execution of a decree against which an appeal is pending in that Court. The suit was for joint possession of an 8-annas share in the property in dispute. It was decreed in the Court of first instance and the order passed was for the delivery of khas possession to the plaintiffs. The petitioners are the defendants and they have preferred an appeal against that decree which is pending in the Court of the Additional District Judge of Howrah. The learned Judge passed the following order on this application: "Stay is opposed. It is pointed out that the suit was instituted in 1920 and not decreed until 1923 and that 9½ months have elapsed between the filing of appeal and the petition for stay. In the circumstances the petition is rejected."

This Rule has been issued on the ground that the learned Judge has acted with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction inasmuch as he has not considered this application, on its merits but has based his judgment on two facts only, namely, that the suit was pending in the First Court for about three years and in his Court for about 9½ months.

With regard to the time taken in the Court of first instance, it is rightly argued, to my mind, that the defendants cannot be held responsible for it. The conduct of the suit was in the hands of the plaintiffs, and no material has been placed either before the Judge or before us for holding that the defendants were in any way responsible for the lengthening of the proceedings in that Court.

With regard to the time during which the appeal was pending before the learned Judge, it is not, in the first instance, in excess of the ordinary period, generally taken up in hearing appeals in the Courts below and, secondly, the execution was not applied for during this period. The petitioners have been diligent in presenting this petition. The execution was applied for on the 15th of January 1924. Notices upon the petitioners were served on the 29th of January and this application was presented on the 31st of January. It appears, therefore, that the materials upon which the learned Judge has based his order do not support it.

BIRESH CHANDRA DAS V. HARI DAS BOSE.

It is argued by the opposite party that this is a matter into which we have no jurisdiction to enter under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure and reference has been made to the well-known case of Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1) and to other cases that followed it. It is not necessary to refer to the numerous decisions upon this point as every case has been decided on its own merits and the principles in the various cases have been invoked in order to support the decision in each case. I may refer, however, to the last pronouncement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on this point in the case of Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (2). Their Lordships there observe that section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code concerns itself with questions of jurisdiction, namely, the refusal to exercise jurisdiction, the irregular exercise of it or the illegal assumption of it. The present case seems to me to be one of illegal exercise of jurisdiction. When a petitioner presents a petition before a Court, it is the duty of the Court—a duty which is cast upon it by the law of the land—to look into the matter, to give its consideration to it and to come to decision on all the materials that have been placed before it. If the Court does not do so, though it may have jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the litigation, it fails to exercise that jurisdiction in a regular way, and in a case like that this Court as the Court of superintendence, has power to interfere to set it right. I will not refer to the many cases in which this course has been adopted, but I will only make reference to the case of C. D. M. Hindley v. Joynarain Marwari (3).

I would have felt considerable hesitation in interfering with the order of the lower Court, but I am greatly influenced by the fact that, on the face of it, the execution of the decree may cause great injury to the petitioners and create unnecessary complications. The suit, as I have observed, is one for declaration of the plaintiff's title to 8-annas of the property and for joint possession. The decree that has been passed by the First Court is for khas possession. It is not for me to say whether the Court will stay execution in this case but it certainly raises a point in favour of the petitioners in support of their application for a stay of execution. In my judgment, the learned Judge did not give proper consideration to this matter and, therefore, though he had jurisdiction over the subject-matter, he exercised it in an irregular way within the meaning of the Privy Council case to which I have referred.

I would, therefore, make this Rule absolute, discharge the order of the lower Court and send the case back to that Court for a consideration of the petitioners' application.

Graham, J.—I have the misfortune to differ from my learned brother, and I do so with great diffidence and reluctance.

We are invited in this Rule, in the exercise of our revisional powers under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside an order of the learned District Judge of Howrah rejecting an application for stay of execution of a decree pending appeal. The order complained of, which is dated the 18th February 1924, is in the following terms:

(1) 11 C 6, 11 I A 237, 4 Sar P C J. 559; Radque and Jackson's P. C. No 83, 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 760 (P. C.).

BIRBISH CHANDRA DAS v. HARI DAS BOSE.

"Stay is opposed. It is pointed out that the suit was instituted in 1920 and not decreed until 1923, and that 9½ months have elapsed between the filing of appeal and the petition for stay. In the circumstances the petition is rejected."

The grounds on which the order is assailed are, firstly, that the lower Court exercised its jurisdiction illegally and with material irregularity in rejecting the application for stay of execution of the decree pending the hearing of the appeal, secondly, that the lower Court exercised its jurisdiction illegally in rejecting the petitioner's application on the ground of delay inasmuch as, under the circumstances of the case, no conceivable delay could be imputed to them, thirdly that the lower Court committed an error of law in acting upon the principle that it was the duty of the appellants to make an application for stay immediately after the filing of the appeal even though the decree-holder had taken no steps to execute the decree, fourthly, that there being no circumstances present which would justify the Court in rejecting the application for stay, the Court below exercised its jurisdiction illegally and with material irregularity in rejecting it on a wrong ground, fifthly, that the Court below looked at the case from a wrong angle altogether and exercised its jurisdiction illegally in failing to advert to the questions of law and fact which were necessary to be decided in a case like this, sixthly that the Court below ought to have held that the plaintiffs being entitled under the decree only to the land and not to the house erected upon it the effect of execution of the decree would be to demolish the house which was erected upon the suit land, and, lastly, that the Court below should have held that the decree cannot be executed at this stage unless the land is demarcated by proper partition.

The point for determination is whether any case has been made out for our interference.

Now section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code enables the High Court in a case in which no appeal lies to call for the record of any case, if the Court by which the case was decided, appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. It is not claimed that the learned Additional District Judge exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law, and it is clear that he had jurisdiction to make the order in question. But it has been urged on behalf of the petitioners that he acted illegally and with material irregularity in refusing to grant a stay of execution by reason of an erroneous view of the law, that the reasons given for such refusal are inadequate, and that in fact the learned Judge has not properly considered the application.

In my judgment, these contentions are without substance. In the first place it is to be observed that the power conferred by O. XII, r. 5 of the Civil Procedure Code upon Appellate Courts is discretionary, though of course that discretion must be judicially exercised. This Court will not, however, ordinarily interfere unless there has been an arbitrary exercise of the discretion so conferred, or unless some other good ground is made out for interference. The learned Additional District Judge has given two reasons for rejecting the application, namely, first, that the suit was instituted in 1920 and not decreed till 1923, and secondly, that 9½ months elapsed between the filing of the appeal and the filing of the application for stay. The first may not be good reason, since it is not clear that the petitioners were necessarily responsible for the delay in the disposal of the suit. The second reason, however, namely the delay in making the application, is a good ground and a ground upon which the Court could properly refuse to grant a stay (Vide O. XII, r. 5 (3) (b) of the Civil Procedure Code). In regard to this, however, it has been urged by the learned Vakil for the petitioners that, in point of fact, no delay could be imputed to them, inasmuch as the application for execution was made on the 15th of January, and, upon notice thereof being served upon them on the 29th of January, they immediately applied on the 31st of January, that is to say, two days later, for a stay of execution. The argument appears to be that the petitioners were not bound to apply for a stay until execution was applied for, that it would have been premature for them to do so, and that in the circumstances there cannot be said to have been any delay in making the application.

It seems to me to be open to doubt whether this is a correct view of the matter. Rule 5 of O. XLI says that an appeal shall not of itself operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree, but the Appellate Court may for sufficient cause order stay of execution, and then sub-section (3) (b) goes on to lay down that no order for a stay shall be made "unless the Court making it is satisfied that the application has been made without unreasonable delay." The Rule, therefore would appear to contemplate that an application for stay of execution should be made as soon as possible after the filing of the appeal. Nor does there seem to be anything unreasonable in this view. When once the decree has been passed it may be fairly presumed that sooner or later it will be put into execution, and an application to that end may be made at any time so that the appellant, if he wants a stay of execution, should make his application at as early a stage as possible. In this particular instance the appellants allowed 9½ months to elapse before applying for a stay.

In rejecting the application it cannot, in my opinion, be said that the learned Additional District Judge has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law, or that he has acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally, or with material irregularity. There cannot be any doubt that he had jurisdiction to decide the matter and he did decide it. Whether he decided it rightly or wrongly seems to me to be beside the point. The principle applicable to such cases has been laid down in numerous reported decisions of the Courts: Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1), Shew Prosad v. Ram Chunder (4), Ram Singh v. Salig Ram (5), Amritrao Krishna Deshpande v. Balkrishna Ganesh Amrapurkar (6), and Madharao Ganeshpant Oze v. Gulabbhai Lalubhai (7). Whether the learned Additional District Judge came to right decision or not to be acted within his jurisdiction, and, even if we have the power to revise the order, as I think we undoubtedly have, there is, in my opinion, no sufficient ground for interference.

For these reasons I would discharge the Rule.

Suhrawardy, J.—Under section 36 of the Letters Patent my judgment, as that of the Senior Judge, should prevail. The Rule is made absolute, the order of the lower Court is set aside and the case remanded to that Court for consideration of the petitioners' application. Costs will abide the result, hearing fee one gold mohur.

Nor is such vesting conditional, contingent upon or proportionate to the debts of the father which are neither illegal nor immoral [p. 442, col 2].

The property, however, so vests only for the purpose of enabling the Receiver to exercise the power of sale which the father had of disposing of the property for discharge of debts of an unobjectionable character. The sons, therefore, can in proper proceedings require to have it determined in respect of which debts such power can be exercised and in respect of which not, and to have made over to them what is left after the administration of the insolvent's estate and the due exercise of the powers by the Official Receiver [p. 242, col 2].

A suit by Hindu sons for partition is not barred by the adjudication of the father as insolvent. In such a suit, the question of the illegality or immorality of the father's debts should be tried and the sons declared separate in status from the father, only the actual division by metes and bounds and the passing of the final decree must be deferred till the completion of the administration of the estate and its divestment from the hands of the Official Receiver [p. 441, cols 1 & 2].

Per Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—The power of a father to dispose of his sons' shares also, for the payment of his debts is not in the nature of a latent power which comes into existence on the coming into existence of certain conditions precedent but a potential power over the entire property exercisable by him validly, subject only to the sons successfully questioning the same in proper proceedings [p. 442, col 2].

The vesting of the interest in the Official Receiver on a Hindu father's insolvency must be regarded as in the nature of a trust for the exercise of the father's power of disposal of the family property for his antecedent debts on the one hand and on the other for the ascertainment and delivery over to the sons of the remainder of the property, if any. [p. 443, col 1].

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the First Additional Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, in Original Suit No. 40 of 1919, (Original Suit No. 24 of 1917 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore).

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, offg. C. J.—The two plaintiffs, who are minors represented by their mother, brought a suit to obtain a partition from their father, the first defendant. They made their father's step-mother (defendant No. 2) and her daughter, (defendant No. 3) and their father's uncle (defendant No. 7) and two mortgagee-creditors of their father, defendants Nos. 4 and 5 and two mortgagee-creditors of defendant No. 7 (defendants Nos. 8 and 9) parties to the suit. The plaintiff's father was adjudicated an insolvent on December 19th, 1916, and this suit was instituted on March 2nd, 1917, after the first defendant had become an insolvent in law. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the suit was not maintainable after the plaintiff's father had become insolvent. He refused to give the plaintiffs an opportunity of proving that the mortgage-bonds in favour of defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were executed to secure debts not binding on the plaintiffs on account of the immorality of their father, on the ground that this matter was res judicata owing to the finding in the previous suits Original Suits Nos. 13 and 14 of 1917 on the file of the Sub-Court of Coimbatore, which were suits brought by those mortgagees as plaintiffs in which the Court found that the plaintiff debts had not been proved to be not binding on these plaintiffs, who were defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in those suits.

The first point argued is that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in regarding the decision in the prior suits as res judicata. It is clear from the judgment of the High Court in Appeal No. 356 of 1919 that the plaintiffs abandoned their rights to claim a mortgage-decree against these defendants in these suits. The defendants against whom the suit had been dismissed had no right of appeal upon the finding as to the nature of the debts and, therefore, this question was not finally decided as between the opposing parties to the suit. The lower Court must, therefore, take the suit back on its file and decide issue No. 1 upon such evidence as may be adduced on either side.

The main point upon which we have heard arguments in this appeal is whether the whole estate of which the first defendant was Manager, vested in the Official Receiver upon the first defendant's adjudication as an insolvent. Mr Ramachandra Iyer tried to persuade us that it was a condition precedent to the Official Receiver exercising the father's power to sell the joint estate for the discharge of his debts that those debts should be neither illegal nor immoral. Section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act III of 1907 declares that upon the making of an order of adjudication, the whole of the property of the insolvent shall vest in the Receiver and that during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings, no creditor shall have any remedy against the person or property of the insolvent in respect of the debt or commence any suit or other legal proceedings except with the leave of the Court. Section 2, clause (e) defines 'property' as including any property over which or the profits of which any person has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit. Now there is nothing in these provisions to indicate that the vesting of the property will depend upon the nature of the debts. Therefore, there is no condition precedent to the vesting of the property and it may be ascertained whether the debts were incurred for illegal or immoral purposes in proceedings either before or after the adjudication. The argument that what vests in the Official Receiver, where the interest of undivided members of a joint family is concerned is not the property itself but only a power exercisable over that property is, in my opinion, not sound. The definition in section 2, clause (e) corresponds to the provision in section 266 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, O XXI, r 60 of the Civil Procedure (Code of 1908) by which a creditor may attach in execution all saleable property over which the judgment-debtor has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit. It has been laid down by a Full Bench in In re Balusawmy Ayyar (1) that an Official Assignee standing in the shoes of an insolvent father can alienate family property to pay his antecedent debts provided that those debts are not tainted with illegality or immorality. In Official Assignee of Madras v Ramachandra Aiyar (2) a Bench of this Court to which the Schwabe, C. J., and Courts-Trotter, J., were parties held that the interest of the sons does not vest in the Official Assignee by reason of the adjudication although it would be competent to him to deal with their shares if the debts of the insolvent were of such a nature as to be binding on their interest. At the hearing of that case the learned Advocate-General conceded (I think erroneously), that the sons' shares did not vest in the Official Assignee and their Lordships adopted what he conceded as being the correct law upon the point. But the decision is one under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and having regard to the manner in which the case was disposed of, should not be treated as a ruling on a point which was not necessary for the decision of the case. So long ago as 1895 Subramania Iyer, J., decided in Rangayya Chetty v Thenn Kachalla Mudali (3) that after the making of a vesting order, the Official Assignee had power to transfer not only the shares of the insolvent but also those of his co-parceners provided that the debts were shown to have been incurred for purposes binding upon them. This decision was followed in Nunna Brahmayya Setti v. Chidambayana (4) quoting the opinion of Latham, J., in Fakirchand Motichand v. Motichand Harrukchand (5), although Bashyam Ayyangar, J., was inclined to treat the Official Assignee's powers as derived from section 30 of the Indian Insolvency Act, which deals with powers rather than from section 7 which deals with property. A Full Bench of the Lahore Court has definitely decided upon this point in Behari Lal v. Sat Narain (6) that on the insolvency of a Hindu father governed by Mitakshara Law not only his own interest in the joint family estate vests in the Official Assignee but also his sons' interests which must be treated as the property of the father so far as the Official Assignee is concerned. I am respectfully inclined to adopt that decision as a correct statement of the law. An unreported decision in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 110 of 1919 by Krishnan, J. and myself was to the same effect viz. that the property which vested in the Receiver upon the adjudication of the judgment-debtor as an insolvent included all property over which he had a disposing power which he might exercise for his own benefit. I think that Sanyasi Charan Mondal v. Asutosh Ghose (7) which was quoted to us in the arguments has no bearing on this question, as what was dealt with in that case was the power of a Receiver to deal with the interests of a minor who had not been adjudicated as an insolvent in a partnership property, upon which different considerations from those applying to co-partnerships apply.
